[2, 3] As to the second proposition urged by the appellant to the effect that he is also suing as the assignee of Huelter for the recovery of the usurious interest which the latter had paid prior to his transfer of the property, there are two sufficient answers, the first of which is that Huelter, as a transferee of the property from the Varsis, subject to said mortgage and trust deed, was not himself entitled under the foregoing principle of law to recover any usurious interest which he may have paid, and therefore had nothing which was assignable to the plaintiff. The second answer is that the right which the original maker of a usurious note and mortgage is given under section 3 of the Usury Act to recover such interest and to treble the same is in the nature of a statutory penalty, and, under the authorities from other jurisdictions, which we hereby approve, is not assignable. In the case of Pardoe v. Iowa State Bank, 106 Iowa, 345, 76 N. W. 800, a statute containing the same language as that of the usury law of this state was so construed with a quite abundant reference to authorities. A similar ruling was made by the Supreme Court of Kansas upon the terms of a similar statute in the case of Lloyd v. First Nat. Bank, 5 Kan. App. 512, 47 P. 575. See, also, Robinson v. St. Maries Lumber Co., 34 Idaho, 707, 204 P. 671; 21 R. C. L., p. 2117, § 6; Wilson v. Shrader, 73 W. Va. 105, 79 S. E. 1083, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 886, 893 and notes; Allen v. Petty, 58 S. C. 240, 36 S. E. 586; First State Bank, etc., v. Bank of Jefferson, 112 Okl. 177, 240 P. 311. In opposition to these authorities the appellant presents a few cases which are inconclusive, for the reason that they relate in the main to conditions unlike those presented in the instant case; the only authority directly supporting the appellant's position being that of Taylor v. Sturgis, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 270, 68 S. W. 538, which is commented upon in Ann. Cas. 1916D, at page 893, as being the "Texas rule," and as being opposed to the overwhelming weight of authority from other jurisdictions. However, we are of the opinion that there is no merit in this, the appellant's second contention, for the reason first above stated.

The judgment is affirmed.

HUNTLY v. UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. (S. F. 12979.)

Supreme Court of California. July 13, 1929.

Insurance ⇨665(5)—Evidence held to sustain finding death resulted from accidental bodily injury within accident policy.

In action on accident policy for death of insured, evidence held sufficient to sustain verdict of jury that death resulted "directly, and independently of all other causes, from accidental and bodily injury" and not from previous diseased condition.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action by Emma L. Huntly against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. W. B. Smith and Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Raymond Perry, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor for the sum of $7,500, for which she sought recovery as the beneficiary named in an accident insurance policy issued by the defendant, United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, to her husband, which policy was dated January 5, 1918, and provided for an indemnity in the amount sued for, payable to plaintiff in the event of the death of the insured "resulting directly, and independently of all other causes, from accidental and bodily injury." The deceased husband of the plaintiff thus insured under said policy was at and for some time prior to the time of his death an auditor in the employ of the Pacific Steamship Company, stationed at berth 160, Wilmington, Cal. On March 22, 1926, about 7:45 o'clock a. m., the deceased was found in a kneeling position with his head against a checker's desk just beside the door of berth 160 above referred to. There were no witnesses to his fall, but when he was discovered some 15 or 20 minutes later he was still living, though in a semiconscious condition, and was feebly but vainly attempting to rise. His head at the base of his forehead was resting upon the edge of the checker's bench when he was found, and he appeared to have sustained a deep wound at the point of contact where the frontal bone of the skull joins the nasal bone, and which wound had apparently been caused by his violent fall against the edge of such bench a short while before he was found. He had also an abrasion across his nose, his right knee was skinned, and there were scratches upon the back of his right hand. Within some 30 minutes after he was discovered in his above-described condition he died. The foregoing facts, and certain others to be adverted to, were presented by the plaintiff in evidence at the trial. The defendant, in its pleadings and in the evidence adduced in support thereof at the trial, attempted to show that the decedent prior to his aforesaid injuries had been afflicted with a pronounced and well-defined condition known as "angina pectoris," and that the arteries of the deceased upon the post mortem examination showed an advanced condition of calcification known as "arteriosclerosis." The defendant also introduced certain evidence showing that the deceased, within the period of a week or so prior to his final and fatal injuries, had, upon two occasions, been found lying on the streets of Wilmington in an unconscious condition, and had been given emergency treatment for what was diagnosed at the time as apoplexy or heart trouble, and that for some period prior to these attacks he had been receiving treatment from a physician for symptoms indicating the existence of heart trouble. Predicated upon this evidence and upon what the autopsies had disclosed, the defendant presented evidence of certain expert physicians who testified that in their opinion the deceased's death had been caused by a sudden recurrence of unconsciousness resulting from his diseased condition and from the effect of which he had died, rather than from any effect produced by his facial or other injuries. At the conclusion of the evidence, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which motion the trial court denied; whereupon defendant submitted certain instructions which practically amounted to instructions for a directed verdict, and which were based upon the ground urged upon motion for nonsuit, which was, in substance, that the uncontradicted evidence in the case disclosed that the cause of the decedent's death was that of his previous diseased condition and was not the result of such accidental bodily injuries as are covered and required to exist by the terms of the policy as a condition of recovery thereunder. The court refused these requested instructions. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the amount stated in the policy, and for which sum the trial court entered judgment upon denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

The appellant demands a reversal of the judgment upon two grounds: First, upon that presented upon motion for nonsuit and urged in the instructions which the court refused to give; second, upon the ground that the trial court erred in such refusal, and also committed error in the giving of certain instructions requested by plaintiff. We are unable to agree with the appellant's contention that the judgment should be reversed upon the first of the foregoing grounds, since in our opinion there does exist in this record certain other substantial evidence which would suffice to sustain the verdict of the jury. It is true that the deceased husband of this plaintiff was found by the diagnoses after his death to be afflicted with the physical conditions defined as angina pectoris and arteriosclerosis. It is also true that, as a probable result of his aforesaid condition, he had, within a short while before the fall which immediately preceded his demise, the two fainting spells upon the streets of Wilmington which the evidence disclosed. But the evidence also discloses that, notwithstanding these ailments and the occurrence of these fainting spells the decedent was otherwise in a fairly rugged physical condition, that he was regularly performing his work and exhibiting no impairment of physical ability so to do, and that, even on the occasion of his fainting spells, he was, after a few hours of rest, back at his accustomed place in the office of his employer. There is also the evidence of the witness Williams, who saw him coming down the street a moment or two before his fall, and who apparently noticed nothing unusual in his physical condition. This witness further testified to the fact that he was employed by the Nelson Steamship Company in Wilmington at berth 160 on the day of the decedent's injuries and death; that immediately in front of the door which the decedent was presently to enter there was a metal plate 4 feet square and about a quarter of an inch thick, which was laid upon the platform of the dock and which the stevedores used to run their heavy trucks over. This particular plate had become warped with use, and the witness Williams, in passing, struck his foot against the warped edge thereof, and it was while he was rubbing his injured foot that he saw Huntly come around the edge of the dock and start down the platform to the place where he was to cross the same plate in order to enter the door just beside which stood the checker's bench against which he made his headlong fall and from the contact with which he received his facial injury. The plaintiff insists that it is a fairly deducible inference that her deceased husband had also tripped upon the edge of this warped metal plate and had thereby been caused to fall in the position in which he was found a few moments later. The evidence with respect to the position in which the deceased was thus found a few moments later would seem to support that inference and would seem to negative the inference which the defendant seeks to have drawn from the existence of his diseased condition, that he had fallen as the result of a sudden fainting spell, which upon this occasion proved to be fatal. The evidence which the plaintiff produced in opposition to this latter inference, in the form of expert opinion, and also in the form presented by accredited medical treatises, was to the effect that a person suddenly collapsing as the result of an attack of heart failure indicated that under such circumstances the person thus afflicted would fall and be found lying flat upon his back, as in fact the deceased upon his two former fainting spells was found to be lying, and that a person thus suddenly overcome would not be found in the position upon his hands and knees in which the deceased was when discovered, and that a person suffering a fainting spell from heart failure would not have made the forward plunge which the deceased must have made in order to strike his head against the edge of the checker's bench with sufficient force to have caused his death, and which in the opinion of the plaintiff's medical expert, Dr. Sweeney, did cause, and in fact was the sole cause of, the death of the decedent. The plaintiff further introduced certain photographs purporting to give the relative position and condition of the metal plate upon which she insisted that her husband must have tripped and fallen, and of the checker's bench against which he was obviously impacted in his fall. These tend quite strongly to support the plaintiff's theory as to the sole and immediate cause of her husband's death. In the foregoing state of the evidence we are unable to say that there was not substantial and sufficient evidence before the jury to support the plaintiff's claim as to the cause of her husband's death and to sustain the verdict of the jury based thereon. It is of some significance in this connection that the defendant presented not only a motion for nonsuit based upon the proposition which it here urges as the first ground of its appeal, but also presented to the trial court a motion for a new trial based upon the same ground, and that both of these motions the trial court, who had heard all of the evidence in the case, including the testimony of the opinion witnesses, denied. We therefore conclude that there is no merit in the appellant's first contention.

As to the appellant's second contention, to the effect that the trial court erred in refusing to give certain of its requested instructions and also committed error in the giving of certain instructions which the plaintiff requested, it will suffice to say that, as to the refused instructions, these were predicated upon the defendant's theory as to the contradicted state of the evidence, and that, since we have declined to adopt such theory, we must uphold the decision of the trial judge who, for the same reason, refused to give said instructions. With respect to the instructions which the trial court gave at the request of plaintiff, we have examined these in the light of the entire body of instructions which were given to the jury, and we find that, as to the instructions to which appellant offers particular objection, these were, in the main, taken from cases which have received the approval of this court, and, as to the instructions in general, we have found them to be full and fair, and, taken as a whole, not subject to the appellant's criticism.

It follows from these conclusions that the judgment should be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

YUBA CITY v. CONSOLIDATED MAUSOLEUM SYNDICATE. (Sac. 4213.)

Supreme Court of California. July 16, 1929.

1. Dedication ⇨44—Finding that offer to dedicate street had not been revoked at time of city's implied acceptance was authorized, where property continued to be used in same manner.

Fact that period of 31 years elapsed after offer of dedication of property to city for street was accepted did not prevent trial court from finding, in action by city to enjoin obstruction of street, that offer to dedicate had not been withdrawn at time of city's implied acceptance thereof, where property continued to be used in the same way as when the dedication offer was made and property was conveyed with reference to location according to map.

2. Dedication ⇨38—Where offer to dedicate had not been withdrawn, no period of time after city's acceptance was necessary to constitute area public street, and prescription was not involved.

Where offer of property owners to dedicate street to city was not withdrawn at time of city's implied acceptance of offer, no period of time after acceptance was necessary to constitute the area a public street, and doctrine of prescription was not involved, though acceptance was postponed for 31 year period.

3. Dedication ⇨45—Dedication and revocation of offer to dedicate street are questions of fact.

Dedication by property owners of street to public use and revocation of offer to dedicate are questions of fact for trial court, in city's action against property owner to restrain obstruction of street.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by the City of Yuba City against the Consolidated Mausoleum Syndicate. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Elliott, Atkinson & Sitton, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Arthur Coats, of Yuba City, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Inasmuch as this appeal involves merely a question of fact upon which ample evidence exists to support the findings made by the trial court, the judgment must be and is hereby affirmed.

The action is by Yuba City, a municipality, against the above-named defendant and appellant to enjoin the obstruction of the free use as a public street of a certain strip of land 30 feet wide and 230 feet long, claimed to be a portion of what is known as Aylor street, in said town. Plaintiff had judgment as prayed. Admittedly the land lies in the projection of what is conceded to be Aylor street.

The court found that for five years last past the city had been in possession of said tract of land, had graded and graveled it, and spent public funds in the improvement thereof as a public street; that in 1926, by proceedings had under the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), the city had constructed, as a part of its sewerage system, a sewer line along and in the same; that defendant on December 7, 1927, erected a barrier across said right of way, thus preventing its use by the traveling public; and that, unless enjoined by the court, defendant would continue to exclude the city from the use of said street and would indefinitely delay its paving and otherwise do great and irreparable damage to plaintiff. The court further found that defendant was not the owner of the area in dispute, and if it had any interest whatever in it such interest was subject and subservient to the right and easement of said city to have and use said strip for street and highway purposes.

It was stipulated that in 1892 the Sutter City Lumber & Milling Company was the owner of the south half of lot 8 of Teegarden addition to said city, and in that year subdivided a portion of said south half of said lot, which portion included the area in dispute, which was marked on the map filed by said company as a street. The greater portion of said south half of said lot, however, was not subdivided. The subdivided portion was laid out in streets and lots; lots 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 thereof fronting upon the south line of said area here in question. On November 2, 1893, said owner conveyed the property to George W. Brown as: "Lots 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, according to a Map entitled 'Plot of the South half of Lot Eight in the Teegarden Addition to Yuba City' filed for record November 23rd, 1892, in the office of the recorder of said Sutter County, in Book One of Maps, page 7." On May 22, 1916, said George W. Brown conveyed said property to E. B. Snook by the same description; on June 2, 1917, the estate of said E. B. Snook conveyed said property to defendant in this action, also by the same description.

It appears that from 1892 to 1923 the property was not opened up to the traveling public, but was inclosed and presumably cultivated. There is evidence that this condition existed continuously from the time the map was filed until February 23, 1923, upon which date the city accepted and approved the plat of what is known as the "Shasta Tract," which is a plat of the north half of said lot 8, located immediately north of this area claimed as a street. This disputed area was shown on said map as a street and such portions of said south half as had been subdivided were also shown on said map. After the acceptance of said map of the Shasta tract, the city graded said disputed area as a street and from time to time thereafter improved it, and the public used it without hindrance until the erection of said barrier, on December 7, 1927.

When the city, in August, 1926, initiated said proceeding under the Improvement Act of 1911, for the construction of its sewerage system, no protest was made by defendant against constructing a sewer line along and in said street. Again, when, on August 22, 1927, proceedings were instituted under the same act for the paving of said area, no protest was entered as to such improvement. In fact, nothing was done by way of protest until the erection of said barrier. The record also shows that said strip has never been given in as property for assessment purposes by any of the claimants and said area has never been assessed for taxes since the offer to dedicate made by the filing of the map in the year 1892.

[1, 2] It seems to be the contention of appellant that inasmuch as between 1892 and 1923, a period of 31 years, there was no formal acceptance or user of this area as a street, the offer to dedicate made by the filing of the map was revoked and that the evidence is insufficient to show a right by prescription to the use of said area for street purposes. But we find nothing in the record to show any change of attitude on the part of the owners of said contiguous area from the time of the filing of said map to the 7th day of December, 1927, when the barrier was erected across said street. Apparently the property was used until 1923 in the same way as when the dedication offer was made. Consequently, the court was warranted in finding, as it impliedly did, that the offer to dedicate had not been withdrawn at the time of the implied acceptance by the city. Inasmuch as the court was warranted in so finding, no period of time after acceptance was necessary to constitute the area a public street; hence the doctrine of prescription is not a material issue in the matter.

[3] Dedication and revocation of an offer to dedicate are questions of fact, and no good can be done the parties or the profession by an elaboration of a doctrine so well settled. In fact, a case similar to this was recently before the court. San Francisco Sulphur Co. v. County of Contra Costa (Cal. Sup.) 276 P. 570.

LOCKIE v. CO-OPERATIVE LAND CO. et al.

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨339—Where vendor refused to convey in accordance with contract, purchaser could sue to recover payments made and for lien on property without rescission (Civ. Code, § 3050).

Where vendor refused to convey property in accordance with contract and by fraudulent representations induced purchaser to execute quitclaim deed, purchaser could maintain suit to recover purchase money paid and for special lien under Civ. Code, § 3050, without a rescission, since decree of lien was in effect a rescission or at least a termination of the contract.

2. Mortgages ⇨154(1)—Where mortgagees had actual and constructive notice of plaintiff's land contract before taking mortgage, they were not innocent incumbrancers for value without notice.

Where mortgagees had both actual and constructive notice of plaintiff's contract for purchase of land before taking mortgage, they could not be regarded as innocent incumbrancers for value without notice.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨341(1½)—In action by purchaser to recover purchase money paid, mortgagees were proper parties defendant and were bound by decree (Civ. Code, § 3050; Code Civ. Proc. § 379).

In action by purchaser to recover purchase money paid and for special lien under Civ. Code, § 3050, where vendor refused to convey, mortgagees, having an interest in controversy, were proper parties defendant under Code Civ. Proc. § 379, and were bound by decree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action to recover money paid under a contract on purchase of real property by W. S. Lockie against the Co-operative Land Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Barcroft & Barcroft and J. J. Coghlan, all of Madera, for appellants.

Neil Cunningham, of Fresno, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. Defendants appeal from a money judgment for $5,074 in favor of plaintiff and respondent, which judgment also decreed that the same should be a special lien under section 3050, Civil Code, and be prior to the lien of a mortgage of the defendants and Olcese and Buchenau, upon lots 670 and 671, containing 40 acres of the Fairmead Colony No. 5 tract in Madera county, and further decreed that said property be sold to satisfy said judgment and lien. The order denying a motion for a new trial is also appealed from, the appeal being taken by the alternative method.

The amended complaint alleges the execution of a contract of sale on December 9, 1912 (recorded February 7, 1913), by the Cooperative Land & Trust Company, predecessor of defendant Co-operative Land Company, by which said company agreed to sell to plaintiff and R. E. Bradley said 40 acres for $4,400, $1,100 to be paid down and four promissory notes for $825 each given for the balance of the purchase price, and upon completion of the payments, interest, and taxes, and surrender of agreement, the purchasers were to receive a good and sufficient deed of said lots 670 and 671 with certificate of title. Soon after the making of the contract Bradley assigned his interest therein to plaintiff. At the time the agreement of sale was entered into defendants Olcese and Buchenau were the owners of the property, the land company not then having obtained title. Thereafter, on January 29, 1913, the property was conveyed with other property to said land company with a blanket mortgage back through one Jordan covering the lots here involved with other property, dated August 15, 1913, and recorded on August 19, 1913, subsequent to the recordation of plaintiff's contract on February 7, 1913. Olcese having died, his executors have been substituted as defendants in his place and stead, as also have Alida Buchenau, wife of defendant Herbert Buchenau and executrix of his estate, and Herbert J. Buchenau, for said Buchenau. The mortgage incumbrance was renewed on November 7, 1921, by said land company in favor of said Olcese and Alida Buchenau, executrix, and the record shows that an action to foreclose said mortgage has been instituted and a lis pendens, which includes the property here involved, filed. The complaint alleges that the property is community property. The respondent made payments on account of principal, interest, and taxes, as found by the court, in the sum of $5,074. On November 14, 1922, plaintiff tendered, and thereafter renewed said tender, of the sum of $612.52, the balance due under said contract of sale, and demanded a deed and certificate of title from said land company. The land company has failed to execute and deliver any deed or certificate of title as required by its contract of sale, apparently being unable to furnish a certificate of title free from the lien of the mortgage incumbrance. The plaintiff thereupon brought his action to recover the moneys paid to said land company under said agreement of purchase and sale, and seeks, by virtue of the provisions of section 3050, Civil Code, to have said judgment therefor declared a special lien upon the real property in question, but did not seek a rescission of said contract.

The complaint alleges that prior to final tender, and in May, 1922, said Co-operative Land Company falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff, through its agent and with intent to deceive and defraud plaintiff, and the trial court has found that plaintiff relied upon such false and fraudulent representation, that before said company could execute and deliver a deed of the property to respondent's wife, as respondent desired it to do, that it would be necessary for respondent and his wife to re-assign or quitclaim all right, title, and interest under the contract of December 9, 1912, and in and to said lots 670 and 671, to said land company, and that as a consideration therefor said land company would execute a certain new contract of sale covering the same property to plaintiff's wife and make the date of final payment December 9, 1922, and would upon such payment being made execute and deliver its deed and certificate of title to plaintiff's wife. The respondent and his wife were induced by such false and fraudulent representation, as found by the trial court, to execute such a quitclaim deed, and the same was recorded on June 14, 1922. Said land company has failed to execute a new agreement of sale to respondent's wife and has refused to execute and deliver a deed and certificate of title of said property, although it has been duly tendered the balance due under said contract of December 9, 1912. The trial court has found that the execution of the quitclaim deed by respondent and his wife was without any consideration whatever and induced by false and fraudulent representation. It has further found that the securing of said quitclaim deed from respondent and wife by the defendant land company was directed by the mortgagees to clear said property from the lien of respondent's contract of sale and in aid of their blanket mortgage. It is further found that it was not until August 1, 1926, that the respondent discovered that the representations inducing the making of the quitclaim deed were false and fraudulent.

Section 3050 of the Civil Code reads as follows: "One who pays to the owner any part of the price of real property, under an agreement for the sale thereof, has a special lien upon the property, independent of possession, for such part of the amount paid as he may be entitled to recover back, in case of a failure of consideration," and is merely declaratory of an equitable principle in accord with authority, equity, and justice.

Appellants do not seriously question that there may not be a difference between a rescission of a contract and an action to declare a lien under said section, and that a lien may be enforced without rescission, but argue that in this particular action all general rules of law and equity have been disregarded. Counsel argue that as the only flaw in the title of the Co-operative Land Company was the mortgage held by Olcese and Buchenau, and the contract was binding on all the defendants, that respondent has made out a perfect case for the specific enforcement of a contract by plaintiff for the sale of real property, and that therefore there was no failure of consideration; that either such a case was not made out against all the defendants or that the respondent has misapprehended his remedy and should have brought an action for specific performance and paid the balance due on the purchase price into court so as to secure specific performance.

[1-3] It is respondent's contention that relief may be granted without rescission and that it was not necessary for plaintiff to rescind or to restore or account for the prior use of the land; that the vendor having breached an executory contract the vendee may treat the vendor's breach as an abandonment and sue to recover what he had paid in an action for money had and received upon the theory that a payment of money under a contract to purchase creates a resulting trust to an equitable estate in the land to be purchased proportionate to the moneys paid and that the vendee has a purchaser's lien for the same under section 3050, Civil Code, which also extends to all moneys paid out for expenses, improvements, taxes, insurance, etc., and that such a lien may be enforced against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee who takes with notice of the vendee's equity. Montgomery v. Meyerstein, 186 Cal. 459, 199 P. 800; compare Elterman v. Hyman, 192 N. Y. 113, 84 N. E. 937, 127 Am. St. Rep. 862, 15 Ann. Cas. 819; Haile v. Smith, 113 Cal. 656, 45 P. 872; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 21 P. 249, 681; Harder v. Allred, 61 Cal. App. 394, 214 P. 1017; Kane v. Ott, 73 Cal. App. 124, 238 P. 126; 39 Cyc. 2031, 2037; 25 Cal. Jur. 299, 812. Montgomery v. Meyerstein, supra, holds that section 3050, Civil Code, may be availed of to enforce a lien for money paid under a contract to purchase real estate where there is a failure of consideration, but that the section is not limited to failure of consideration alone. While fraud is alleged in the present case, it is only incidental to the main contract upon which the moneys were paid and for which a judgment and lien are sought and relates to the procurement of a quitclaim deed of respondent's rights under said contract. Respondent also contends correctly that the decreeing of a lien under the facts of this case is in effect a rescission or at least a termination of the contract and sustains his argument by reference to and citation from an elaborate note found in 45 A. L. R., at pages 358 and 364. While there may be some technical legal question as to the right to an equitable lien where the contract is rescinded and possession lost, the weight of authority is that the right to an equitable lien is recognized where the vendee seeks to recover the amounts paid on the purchase price and a foreclosure of the lien thereof by reason of the failure of the vendor to make title or where the vendor's title is defective, upon the equitable principle that by the contract and payments thereunder the vendee acquired in equity a corresponding proportional interest in the land. The respondent here is not repudiating the contract of December 9, 1912. His cause of action is rested upon a right springing from said contract of which the defendant mortgagees had both actual and constructive notice at all times herein, and they cannot therefore be regarded as innocent incumbrancers for value without notice, and the lien of whose mortgage the trial court has found and decreed upon substantial evidence to be inferior to the lien of respondent. Said contract exists for the purposes of the judgment in full force and effect by reason of the decree annulling said quitclaim deed, the execution of which the trial court has found was induced by fraud and was without consideration, and said contract is terminated by the decree herein. Said mortgagees having an interest in the controversy were proper parties defendant (section 379, Code Civ. Proc.) and are bound by the decree. It is also to be noted that no defense was interposed that respondent was in default under his contract or that the same had ever been forfeited or terminated.

Appellants urge certain deficiencies of allegation in the amended complaint which would support a cause of action against defendants based upon appellants' contention that respondent's action lies in rescission and that in fact respondent has rescinded his contract, at least in part, and still inconsistently retains possession, and that therefore section 3050, Civil Code, does not apply. There seems to be no force in these contentions under the facts as developed in this case. It is further urged that certain findings are not supported by evidence and that certain other findings are contrary to the evidence and the judgment therefore void by reason thereof. The findings are sufficiently supported by evidence for the purposes of this judgment and none are contrary to the evidence and they sufficiently support the conclusions of law and the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Mortgages ¶181—Grantee satisfying trust deed and taking renewal without knowledge of mechanic's lien intervening had priority over mechanic's lien to extent of original note.

Where grantee under trust deed satisfied trust deed of record and took renewal note secured by trust deed after mechanic's lien claimants commenced work on property, but without notice or knowledge thereof, lien under trust deed held superior to mechanic's lien to extent of amount of original note and interest thereon.

2. Mortgages ¶151(3)—Mechanic's lien intervening between satisfaction of trust deed and taking of renewal trust deed held prior as regards additional money secured.

Where grantee under trust deed satisfied trust deed of record and took renewal note secured by trust deed after mechanic's lien claimants commenced work on property, mechanic's lien held prior in right as regards additional money advanced by grantee and secured by second trust deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Action by Frank R. Parker and others against C. S. Tout and others. From a judgment declaring a mechanic's lien in favor of plaintiffs to be prior in right to the mortgage lien of one of defendants, defendants appeal. Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

McKee, Tasheira & Wahrhaftig, of Oakland, W. T. Belieu, of Willows, and W. E. Johnson, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Bond & Deirup and Jerome D. Peters, all of Chico, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment declaring a mechanic's lien in favor of plaintiffs to be prior in right to the mortgage lien of the defendant bank upon real property situated in Glenn county, Cal., and owned by the defendants Tout.

The facts in the case are not disputed. The defendant bank was the owner and holder of a note for $25,000, secured by a deed of trust upon this real property, which deed of trust was recorded June 17, 1922, and was a valid and subsisting first lien of record at the time the plaintiffs commenced the work of digging a well upon the property, which work is the basis of the mechanic's lien asserted in this action.

Shortly before May 14, 1924, Tout went to the bank and arranged to borrow some money to dig a well, intimating at the time that the well need be only about 100 feet deep. On May 14, 1924, Tout entered into a contract with plaintiffs to dig this well at an agreed price per foot. The well actually cost over $1,700, as it became necessary to drill much deeper than was originally planned. The work of drilling the well commenced on May 25, 1924, and was completed July 7, 1924, and the notice of lien was not filed until September 18, 1924. While the well was being drilled, on June 28, 1924, Tout and his wife gave the defendant bank a new note secured by a new deed of trust as a renewal of the old note and interest and some additional advances for taxes, pump, well, etc., the aggregate of which amounted to $27,500. No payments had been made on the original note of $25,000, and the additional $2,500 represented the items above enumerated. This second deed of trust was recorded on July 2, 1924, before the recordation of the mechanic's lien, but after the work of drilling the well had been started. After the recordation of the second trust deed, on July 2, 1924, defendants W. W. Garthwaite and J. Y. Eccleston, as trustees under the first trust deed, executed and recorded a satisfaction thereof and the same was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Glenn county.

The evidence shows without conflict that before the acceptance of the renewal trust deed of June 28, 1924, and before satisfying the first trust deed of record, the bank had the records of Glenn county searched to ascertain if between the time of the execution of the first trust deed and the renewal thereof, any incumbrances or liens had been placed thereon, and, after a report on the title, the bank accepted the renewal of the first trust deed and had the same recorded, and then executed and recorded the satisfaction thereof. It was stipulated that the bank did not know of plaintiffs' and respondents' lien claim until the suit was filed, and had no constructive notice thereof until September 18, 1924, when it was filed for record.

The trial court held that, because the first trust deed had been satisfied of record, the mechanic's lien became a first lien and was prior in right to the lien of the second trust deed given in renewal of the first one, but recorded subsequent to the commencement of the drilling of the well, and consequently subsequent to the attaching of the mechanic's lien.

[1, 2] The only question involved in the appeal is whether equity will maintain and enforce the original priorities between the parties because of the fact that the plaintiffs and respondents herein had notice of the first trust deed for $25,000 when they commenced their work and because they engaged in such work upon property subject at the time to this trust deed and the bank exercised every precaution to protect its rights and was not negligent or careless in releasing the first trust deed and had no notice or knowledge of the mechanic's lien when it satisfied its first lien and accepted a renewal note subsequent in time and right to the mechanic's lien. It would seem but just and equitable to give priority to the lien of the defendant bank for at least the amount of the original note with interest. As to the additional money advanced by the bank, and also secured by the second trust deed, the mechanic's lien would seem to be prior in right, and this gives to the lien claimant a distinct advantage which he did not have when he commenced work upon the property, for this money went to pay taxes and to buy a pump and other equipment for the ranch, all of which increased the security of the lien claimant after the work was commenced.

Judicial authority is not lacking for such an equitable adjustment between the parties. In Shaffer v. McCloskey, 101 Cal. 576, 36 P. 196, the court held that a subsequent lienholder, who has not acquired his lien after a prior mortgage has been marked satisfied, and has not been led by a clear record to invest money on the land, but who took the incumbrance while the mortgage was in full legal existence, recorded, and unsatisfied, and with perfect understanding that it was a valid lien, will not be permitted in equity to take advantage of an inadvertence or mistake in the satisfaction of the mortgage.

In Van Sandt v. Alvis, 109 Cal. 165, 41 P. 1014, 50 Am. St. Rep. 25, a mortgagor had placed a homestead upon the mortgaged property after the execution of the mortgage. The mortgage debt became due and payable, and an application was made to the executrix of the mortgagee for an extension of time on the debt. Thereupon a new note and mortgage was executed and delivered by the mortgagor to the executrix as a renewal of the former debt. The wife did not join in the execution of the new note and mortgage. On the foreclosure proceeding it was held that, while the first mortgage had been satisfied of record and the execution of the new note and mortgage was not legally effective as against the wife, in equity the transaction would be deemed as simply changing the form of the old mortgage, which would be enforced in equity as against the wife.

To the same general effect are the cases of Boreman v. Hatfield, 96 Wash. 270, 164 P. 921, L. R. A. 1917E, 1052; White v. Stevenson, 144 Cal. 104, 77 P. 828.

Respondents seek to prevent the application of the equitable doctrine in this case because it is contended that the bank had actual notice that a well was being dug upon the property. The bank claims to have advanced money to pay the contemplated cost of the well and included this advance in the second trust deed. It had no knowledge that a lien was to be asserted or filed when it released its first trust deed. In Capital Lumbering Co. v. Ryan et al., 34 Or. 73, 54 P. 1095, it was sought to foreclose a mechanic's lien which had crept in between the renewal of a recorded mortgage and the satisfaction of the first lien. In that case the court said: "But the mere fact that a former mortgage was released, and a new one taken in place thereof, in ignorance of the existence of an intervening lien, is, in equity, deemed such a mistake of fact as will entitle the plaintiff to relief, although such lien is a matter of record."

Justice and equity and well-established precedents compel a decree that the lien of the bank under its trust deed is superior in right to the mechanic's lien to the extent of the amount of the original note and interest thereon. The mechanic's lien is prior in right to the other advances secured by the trust deed for $27,500, which gives to the lien claimants an advantage which they had no right to expect when they commenced their work on the well, for, as we have stated, such advances were used in payment of taxes and to purchase equipment.

The judgment as to C. S. Tout and Anna J. Tout, his wife, is affirmed; and as to W. W. Garthwaite, J. Y. Eccleston, the Oakland Bank (a corporation), to stand reversed.

WITHERILL v. BREHM et al. (Sac. 4180.)

Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1929.

1. Waters and water courses $\S$ 152(11)—Finding as to amount of water required for beneficial irrigation of plaintiff's land held sustained by evidence.

In action to determine water rights, trial court's allowance of 25 inches of water under a 4-inch pressure for 20 acres of plaintiff's land held not excessive under the evidence that character and formation of the land required unusual amount of water for irrigating purposes.

2. Waters and water courses $\S$ 143—Quantity of water required for irrigation is question of fact to be determined by evidence, not by rule.

The amount of water necessary for irrigation of land cannot be determined by rule, but is a question of fact to be determined by evidence in particular case, hence contention that quantity of water awarded by judgment was excessive because in excess of one miner's inch of water per acre could not be sustained.

3. Waters and water courses $\S$ 143—Appropriator need not use best methods of irrigation or take extraordinary precautions to prevent waste.

Though an appropriator can claim only amount of water necessary to properly supply his needs and can permit no water to go to waste, he is not bound to adopt best methods for utilizing the water or take extraordinary precautions to prevent waste, but as long as he makes reasonable use of water according to custom of locality other users cannot complain that his methods are wasteful.

4. Appeal and error 1011(1)—Conflicting testimony respecting carrying capacity of diversion ditch presented question for trial court to determine.

In action to determine water rights, conflicting testimony respecting carrying capacity of plaintiff's diversion ditch held to present question for trial court to determine.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Action by Alice Witherill, executrix of the last will and testament of Andrew Witherill, deceased, against A. Brehm and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. McCaughey and Vincent Surr, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

B. K. Collier, Joseph P. McNamara, and Horace V. Ley, all of Yreka, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This is the second appeal taken in this action; the opinion in the first appeal is to be found in 74 Cal. App. 286, 240 P. 529. At the first trial of this action by the judgment of the court the plaintiff was awarded a perpetual flow of 75 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure of the waters of Grouse creek in Siskiyou county. Upon appeal the defendants made the following claims: (1) That their riparian rights were superior to the adverse title of plaintiff; (2) that the source of water rights claimed by plaintiff are within the grant of railroad lands from the United States to the Central Pacific Railroad Company; (3) that adverse possession on the part of the plaintiff has not been established; (4) that 75 inches of water under 4-inch pressure is excessive for the necessary use of the plaintiff; (5) that costs were improperly taxed against defendants; and (6) that defendants were prejudiced by the continuation of their motion for a new trial to a time when it would be automatically denied.

The appellate court on said first appeal considered all of the foregoing claims of the defendants and determined all of them in favor of the plaintiff except No. 4, and as to said last-mentioned claim it held that the amount of water allowed the plaintiff in the judgment rendered at the first trial of this action was excessive. It accordingly made the following order: "For the reason that the judgment allows an excessive quantity of water and that it is not confined to those months during which it was actually and necessarily used for beneficial purposes, the cause must be remanded. The judgment is therefore reversed." At the second trial the issues were confined to the amount of water actually and necessarily used by the plaintiff and to the time or months of the year of said user. The trial court on the second trial fixed the amount of water to which the plaintiff was entitled at 50 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, during the irrigating season commencing April 1st and ending October 15th of each year, and at 5 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, during the remaining portion of the year. From this judgment the defendants have appealed and in due time served and filed their opening brief. The plaintiff and respondent has made no appearance in this court, and has not filed any brief or points and authorities, nor in any other manner assisted the court in the determination of the questions raised by the appellants in their brief. This has made it necessary for this court to carefully go over and examine the entire record herein, which we have done.

The sum and substance of appellants' contention on their present appeal is that the evidence does not support the findings in regard to the amount of water actually and necessarily used by the respondent for beneficial purposes, or, in other words, the appellants contend that the amount of water allowed the respondent in the judgment rendered at the second trial of said action is excessive, and unwarranted by the evidence in the case.

The decree of the court, based upon proper and sufficient findings, is "that plaintiff is the owner of, and entitled to the prior right to divert, 50 inches of the first flow of the waters of Grouse Creek situated in Siskiyou County, California, said 50 inches to be measured under a 4" pressure at the point of diversion on said Grouse Creek." From the point of diversion mentioned in said findings the waters of said stream are conducted in an open ditch a distance of 2½ miles to respondent's land and premises through a porous formation, and the court found upon evidence unquestionably sufficient to support said finding "that approximately two-fifths of the amount of water diverted from Grouse Creek at the head of plaintiff's ditch is lost in transit by seepage and evaporation." The effect of this loss by seepage and evaporation would be that respondent would receive of the 50 inches allowed to be diverted from the stream only 30 inches for use upon her said premises. As to the 5 inches of water allowed by the judgment to plaintiff during the nonirrigating period of each year, said judgment provides that respondent is the owner and entitled "to the prior right to divert 5 inches, measured under a 4" pressure at the point of user thereof near the buildings of plaintiff on her said land during the period of each year commencing on October 15th of each year and ending on April 1st of the next succeeding year." There is no contention on appellants' part that the judgment in respect to this quantity of water allowed the respondent is erroneous or is not supported by sufficient evidence. In fact, the appellants stipulated in open court that respondent should be allowed for this period of the year 5 inches of water delivered at the ranch. It appears, therefore, from the record that this amount of water was by agreement awarded to the respondent for nonirrigating purposes, such as domestic use, watering stock, and other similar purposes. This amount of water for domestic use would, of course, be required during the irrigating season as well as during the balance of the year. It should not, therefore, be included in the amount awarded for irrigation purposes. As the judgment awards the respondent what amounts to 30 inches of water delivered on the premises for all purposes during the irrigating season, to ascertain the amount awarded for irrigating purposes, this 5 inches should be deducted from the 30 inches so awarded. This would leave of the 30 inches of water which, after loss by seepage and evaporation, finally reached respondent's premises, 25 inches of water for irrigating purposes upon respondent's said lands. There is some dispute as to the extent of respondent's lands upon which the waters of said stream are and have been used for irrigating purposes. Appellants claim that these lands in no event exceed 14.30 acres. They contend, however, that the lands which are actually irrigated by said water is much less in extent than 14 acres. On the other hand, there is evidence that at least 20 acres of respondent's lands have been regularly and beneficially irrigated by the water of Grouse creek, and some witnesses place the amount of such land far in excess of the last-mentioned amount. The court found "that not more than twenty acres of plaintiff's lands are actually irrigated by the waters from Grouse Creek, but that the lands thus irrigated by plaintiff are to (so) situated, and being adjacent to the east fork of Scott river, and are so overlaid with large boulders and gravel, and overlaid with but a small coating of earth, that such land is very pervious when water is applied thereon * * * and that an unusual amount of water is required to irrigate said lands." The court further found "that allowing for seepage, such quantity of water (50 inches measured under a four-inch pressure at the point of diversion) has actually, necessarily and beneficially been applied to and used by plaintiff and her predecessors in interest for irrigation and domestic purposes on the said lands described in plaintiff's complaint, and that said quantity of water is necessary to actually and beneficially irrigate plaintiff's said lands owing to the extraordinary, pervious condition and formation of said land."

While the evidence is conflicting as to the extent of respondent's land actually irrigated by the waters of Grouse creek it is undoubtedly sufficient to show that substantially 20 acres of said land had been so irrigated, and this we understand to be the purport and meaning of the finding of the court upon this subject.

[1] We are thus brought to the question as to whether the allowance of 25 inches of water, under a 4-inch pressure, for 20 acres of land of the kind and character of respondent's land, as found by the court, is an excessive allowance of water for said land. The evidence as to the character and formation of respondent's land and that it requires an unusual amount of water for irrigating purposes in order to successfully produce crops thereon is practically undisputed. It is not necessary to give any extended résumé of the evidence upon this issue. We will mention, however, the testimony of one of the appellants' principal witnesses, John A. Beemer, an engineer, who visited the land of plaintiff and made tests of its soil for the purpose of determining the amount of water necessary to beneficially irrigate the same. This witness, after testifying of his visit to respondent's land and of his testing the soil thereof, stated: "That I would regard as porous soil. It is soil that takes a large amount of water. It takes more water than the average. * * * I would place the duty on that land as one miner's inch per acre * * * I expect I have seen instances when more than that was used, but not beneficially." In other words, this witness testified that in his opinion respondent's land required the maximum amount of water applied to it for irrigation purposes in order to successfully produce crops thereon. On the part of respondent, a witness by the name of J. B. Parker testified that it would take from 75 to 100 inches of water to irrigate the land of respondent. This witness testified that he had known said land and the ditch conveying water thereto from Grouse creek practically as long as he could remember; that he was 71 years of age and had lived in the vicinity of the Witherill ranch during all of his life; that said ranch had been irrigated by the waters of Grouse creek since 1865; that the ditch from Grouse creek to respondent's said lands would now carry 150 inches of water. He further testified as to the character and formation of the soil upon said lands, and his testimony on that subject coincided with the evidence of Mr. Beemer above referred to. The evidence also shows that the witness had been extensively engaged in farming and in the irrigation of lands in the immediate vicinity of the Witherill ranch during the greater part of his lifetime. Undoubtedly the testimony of this witness had great weight with the trial judge, and we think it was well that it should. He was a practical farmer and irrigationist and he testified from his long experience and thorough knowledge of the lands of respondent and others in that vicinity, and of the amount of water required to properly and beneficially irrigate the same. His testimony alone is sufficient to support the finding of the court as to the amount of water necessary for the proper and beneficial irrigation of respondent's lands. While his estimate of the amount of plaintiff's land which had been irrigated from the waters of Grouse creek exceeded somewhat that given by the witnesses for the appellants, his testimony as to the amount of water per acre required by said land did not greatly differ from that of appellants' witness Beemer, which has already been referred to. On the whole, we think the finding of the court as to the amount of water required for the proper and beneficial irrigation of respondent's lands finds substantial support in the evidence.

[2, 3] Appellants' further contention that the courts have seldom, if ever, allowed more than one miner's inch of water per acre for irrigating purposes is best answered by reference to a recent case decided by this court in which a judgment allowing $2\frac{1}{2}$ miner's inches per acre was sustained. Joerger v. Mt. Shasta Power Corp. (Cal. Sup.) 276 P. 1017. Appellants also complain of the diversion ditch of respondent and contend that the use of the same in the manner in which the respondent conducts waters through the same is wasteful of the said waters. This question is also discussed by this court in the case just mentioned. Quoting from page 1024 of the opinion in that case, this court said: "Defendants assert that an examination of all the California cases will reveal the fact that no decree has ever been upheld awarding more than one miner's inch per acre. This may be true, and yet such circumstance is not controlling, for this court cannot fix a limit beyond which a trial court may or may not go, or say, as a matter of law, that the amount allowed is excessive, irrespective of the evidence. As above stated, the amount of water necessary for beneficial use is a question of fact in each particular case. 1 Wiel on Water Rights, 523. The question is not to be determined by rule, but rather by the evidence presented to the court or jury. In passing, it may be said that, in the ascertainment of this fact, long-continued use of a given quantity of water by appropriation may raise a presumption of necessary and beneficial use, for it is not reasonable to suppose that one would destroy or impair the value of his land by the use of an excessive amount. California Pastoral Co. v. Madera Irr. Co., supra [167 Cal. 78, 138 P. 718]; Campbell v. Ingram, 37 Cal. App. 728, 174 P. 366; Stinson Canal Co. v. Lemoore Canal & Irr. Co., 45 Cal. App. 242, 188 P. 77. Nor is there merit in the claim that the method employed by plaintiff in diverting the water is unauthorized. While an appropriator can claim only the amount which is necessary to properly supply his needs, and can permit no water to go to waste, he is not bound, as here claimed, to adopt the best method for utilizing the water or take extraordinary precautions to prevent waste. He is entitled to make a reasonable use of the water according to the custom of the locality, and, as long as he does so, other persons cannot complain of his acts. The amount of water required to irrigate his lands should, therefore, be determined by reference to the system used, although it may result in some waste which might be avoided by the adoption of another or more elaborate and extensive distribution system. Farnham on Waters, § 675; Wiel on Water Rights (3d Ed.) § 481; Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, 32 P. 811."

[4] Appellants have much to say in their brief regarding the carrying capacity of respondent's diversion ditch, and of certain measurements made of the water flowing in said ditch by A. F. Parrott, county surveyor of the county of Siskiyou. This witness testified that he made three measurements of said ditch on September 29, 1926. This action was tried in October of that year. These measurements, according to said witness, were made one at a point 250 feet below the headgate of said ditch which showed 21 inches of water flowing in said ditch at said point of measurement; the second, a mile and one-quarter below the point of diversion, which showed $17\frac{1}{2}$ inches of water flowing in said ditch; and the third at a point between 400 and 500 feet from the point of delivery which showed $15\frac{1}{2}$ inches of water flowing in said ditch. The witness Parrott testified that the water in the ditch at one point where he made the examination was within 2 inches of the top of the ditch, and that the carrying capacity of the ditch at that point was not over 30 miner's inches of water. The point which appellants seek to make from this testimony is that the carrying capacity of the ditch was only 30 inches. This evidence standing alone might sustain appellant's point. But there is other evidence in the record which must be considered by an appellate court in reviewing the judgment of the trial court. This evidence consists of testimony given by respondent's witnesses as to the capacity of said ditch. One of these witnesses stated that after the rendition of the first judgment in this action he put a new headgate in Grouse creek, where respondent's ditch diverts the water therefrom, and that this headgate was 15 inches wide and was so constructed as to divert 75 inches of water from said creek into said ditch—that amount having been allowed by the trial court in its first decision in this action. This same witness testifying as to the capacity of said ditch said: "That ditch carried 150 inches of water for years and years and would carry it right now if it was turned into it." He further testified: "The ditch as I know it is something like 12 inches wide and 10 or 12 inches deep. I think there are places a little narrower than that. In the narrower places it is always swifter." It was for the trial court to reconcile the conflicting testimony of the several witnesses in the case, and in doing so it expressly found that the capacity of the ditch was sufficient to carry the amount of water allotted by the decree herein to respondent. The measurements made by Mr. Parrott, the county surveyor, were taken near the end of the irrigation season, when the ditch may have become filled with sand and gravel accumulated during the previous months. After a consideration of all the evidence in the case we are satisfied with the conclusion reached by the court in regard to the amount of water to which the respondent herein is entitled to divert from Grouse creek for use upon her said lands and premises. The judgment therefore is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Action by V. L. Haynes and another against Harry C. MacFarlane. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sidney J. W. Sharp, of Hanford (M. L. Short, of Hanford, of counsel), for appellant.

G. L. Aynesworth, of Fresno, for respondent.

Carl I. Wheat, Reginald L. Vaughan, and Roderick B. Cassidy, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ on behalf of the Railroad Commission.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment enjoining the defendant from transporting property by autotruck for compensation between Fresno and Hanford, and from performing any further services as a transportation company in the carriage of property for compensation between said termini until he shall have obtained a certificate of public convenience and necessity from the Railroad Commission. The judgment also awarded the plaintiffs $700 as damages suffered by them at the hands of the defendant.

The judgment was based on a stipulation of facts wherein, among other things, it was agreed that, if judgment should go for the plaintiffs, the damages suffered by the plaintiffs should be deemed to be $700.

At all of the times mentioned in the controversy between the parties, the plaintiffs were and are engaged in the business of a common carrier or freight by autotruck between Fresno and Hanford, and during all of said times have held, and now possess, a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by the Railroad Commission permitting them to operate a truck line for the transportation of freight for hire between said points. On or about July 3, 1926, the plaintiffs filed a complaint with the Railroad Commission against the defendant, alleging that he was engaged in the business of a common carrier of freight by autotruck between Fresno and Hanford without a certificate of public convenience and necessity therefor from the Railroad Commission. The commission, after notice to the defendant and a hearing, found in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and ordered the defendant to discontinue his business so conducted, making the order effective as of April 26, 1927. Prior to the effective date of the order, the defendant arranged with his customers for the carriage of freight by written order only. On April 27, 1927, or the day after the effective date of the order of the commission, the defendant entered into seven written contracts with his former customers for the continued carriage of such freight for hire between said points, and, unless restrained by order of court, intends to and will accept and enter into at least twenty additional contracts for the carriage of freight for hire between said points with individuals, firms, and corporations, including some who may be customers of the plaintiff, and all of whom will be wholesalers or retailers of merchandise in the cities of Fresno and Hanford. These contracts are identical in form, except as to the name of the shipper, who is the party of the second part; the defendant being the party of the first part. It is recited therein that whereas the party of the second part "is desirous that the party of the first part perform for him certain hauling of merchandise," and whereas "the party of the second part has requested that the party of the first part haul merchandise for the party of the second part to and from Hanford and Fresno and to and from other points, as and when requested by the party of the second part. * * *" It is then provided that the party of the first part agrees to haul merchandise for the party of the second part to and from any point within a radius of 50 miles of Hanford, and agrees to accept as full payment therefor the sum of $4 per ton. The party of the second part agrees to employ the party of the first part when and as the party of the second part desires to have said party of the first part haul merchandise, and to pay therefor the price agreed upon. Each contract is to continue for a period of 6 months, terminable, however, on 30 days' notice from one party to the other. The contract contains the following paragraph: "It is distinctly understood and agreed that this contract is entered into with the party of the first part as a private contract carrier and not otherwise, and that said party of the first part reserves all of the privileges and rights of a contract carrier, and does not by virtue of this agreement, or otherwise, hold himself out as or operate as a common carrier, anything in this contract to the contrary notwithstanding."

On the stipulation of facts the trial court found the defendant to be "a transportation company" in his operations between Fresno and Hanford, and as defined in section 1 (c) of the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act (St. 1917, p. 330). The order of injunction was accordingly issued, but was directed only to the operations of the defendant between the fixed termini of Fresno and Hanford. The stipulation of facts is made a part of the record on this appeal. It appears therefrom that the Railroad Commission, as a basis for its "cease and desist" order effective April 26, 1927, found that the defendant was theretofore engaged in the business of a common carrier between Fresno and Hanford. Its finding in that regard was based in part on the evidence of the defendant, who testified that he was hauling freight for hire between said points on written orders and for all who desired him to haul for them. This finding was not challenged by the defendant, except before the commission, for no application was made to this court to annul the order based thereon. On the stipulation of facts, the trial court made the same finding, that is to say, that, since the effective date of the Railroad Commission's order against him, the defendant was, and continued to operate as, a transportation company as defined by the statute, notwithstanding the fact that in so operating he was working under the written contracts above outlined. The question is therefore presented whether an autotruck operator, hauling freight on the public highways for compensation between fixed termini and over a regular route, may avoid regulation under the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act by entering into and operating under, numerous so-called private contracts with his customers.

It is the contention of the defendant that, by reason of his present method of operation under so-called private contracts, the Railroad Commission would be bound to find that he was a private carrier under the authority of Frost v. Railroad Commission, 271 U. S. 583, 46 S. Ct. 605, 70 L. Ed. 1101, 47 A. L. R. 457, and Holmes v. Railroad Commission, 197 Cal. 627, 242 P. 486. It is then argued that, having so found, the Railroad Commission would have no jurisdiction over his operations, and consequently the trial court would lack authority to enjoin him from so operating.

[1] It may be conceded that, if the defendant's present status is that of a private carrier, the judgment appealed from is without legal support, for the alleged violation of the statute by the defendant as a common carrier is the basis of the injunction order. Whether the status of a freight autotruck operator is public or private in character is primarily a question of fact in each case. In the Frost Case the Railroad Commission found the carrier to be in effect a private carrier, but nevertheless a transportation company as defined by section 1(c) of the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act, as amended in 1919 (St. 1919, p. 458), for the reason that the term "transportation company" as defined by the amended statute was broad enough to include a private carrier. The order of the Railroad Commission was affirmed by this court (Frost v. Railroad Commission, 197 Cal. 230, 240 P. 26), but the judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that the state did not possess the power to compel a private carrier to assume against his will the duties and burdens of a common carrier, and that any attempt to exercise such a power must fall before the paramount authority of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. In the Holmes Case the Railroad Commission likewise found the carrier to be a private carrier, but nevertheless enjoined it from further operations, unless and until it should agree to assume the duties and burdens of a common carrier. Although the Holmes Case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, the appeal was abandoned following the decision of that court in the Frost Case. But the Holmes Case can no more be taken as authority supporting the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission to regulate private carriers than can the Frost Case, for the reason that both cases rested upon similar states of fact and involved the same questions of law. The fundamental distinction between the Frost and the Holmes Cases and the present case is that in those cases the carrier was found to be a private carrier, while in the present case the carrier has been found, both by the Railroad Commission and by the trial court, to be a common carrier. The basis of the finding of the Railroad Commission in the Frost Case that the carrier was private was that the carrier was operating under a private contract under such circumstances as removed it from the status of a common carrier. Such was also the situation in the Holmes Case. And the finding in each case was left undisturbed. In commenting on the opinion of this court in the Frost Case with reference to carriers operating under private contracts, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "The court below seemed to think that, if the state may not subject the plaintiffs in error to the provisions of the act in respect of common carriers, it will be within the power of any carrier, by the simple device of making private contracts to an unlimited number to secure all the privileges afforded common carriers without assuming any of their duties or obligations. It is enough to say that no such case is presented here, and we are not to be understood as challenging the power of the state, or of the Railroad Commission under the present statute, whenever it shall appear that a carrier, posing as a private carrier, is in substance and reality a common carrier, to so declare and regulate his or its operations accordingly."

[2, 3] In the present action we have just such a case as was referred to in the foregoing statement. The fact that the defendant in his contract called himself a "private carrier" could not make him such in the light of the undisputed facts to the contrary. Here we have a carrier found on sufficient evidence by the Railroad Commission and the court to be a common carrier, posing as a private carrier, in an obviously deliberate attempt to evade public regulation. The Railroad Commission found him to be a public carrier. That finding became final long before the present action was brought, and is not subject to review in this action. The trial court found that the status of the defendant had not been changed by the so-called "private contract" method of his operations, and the record supports the finding and conclusion based thereon. If such a studied attempt to evade the provision of the statute should prove availing, the law would become a nullity, and the primary purpose of the act to regulate autotruck transportation companies would come to naught. See Motor Transit Co. v. Railroad Commission, 189 Cal. 573, 209 P. 586. It is unnecessary to comment upon the many cases cited by counsel for the parties and for amici curiæ. No court case has been found which upon similar facts is not in harmony with the conclusions herein expressed.

The judgment is affirmed.

YOUNG et al. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY.
CO. et al. (L. A. 9986.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1929.

Rehearing Granted July 25, 1929.

1. Railroads ⇨350(1)—Court erred in taking railroad crossing collision case from jury, unless as matter of law no other reasonable conclusion than that defendants were entitled to judgment was legally deducible.

In action for death resulting from collision at crossing between automobile truck driven by decedent and electric car of defendant, trial court erred in taking case from jury, unless it can be said as matter of law that no other reasonable conclusion than that defendants were entitled to judgment was legally deducible from evidence, and that any other holding would be so lacking in evidentiary support that appellate court would be compelled to reverse it or trial court to set it aside.

2. Railroads ⇨350(7)—That there was positive testimony that signals were given does not conclusively establish that electric car gave required crossing signals before striking automobile.

Fact that there was positive testimony on subject as to time of giving signals of electric car's approach and as to their extent, in action for death resulting from collision at crossing of automobile and car, does not conclusively establish that required crossing signals were given, but merely creates conflict to be resolved by jury.

3. Railroads ⇨316(4)—Though no speed is negligence per se in absence of statute or ordinance, railroad cannot run trains under all conditions at any chosen speed.

While no rate of speed is negligence per se in absence of statute or ordinance, railroad company will not be permitted to run its trains under all conditions at any rate of speed it may choose.

4. Railroads ⚡316(1)—Railroad must regulate speed of trains with proper regard for safety of human life and property.

Railroad company must regulate speed of its trains with proper regard for safety of human life and property, especially when running through towns and cities.

5. Railroads ⚡316(2)—Speed allowable in thinly settled country may constitute negligence when maintained through cities or villages.

Rate of speed that may be allowable in thinly settled part of country, where but few persons will have occasion to cross tracks of electric railroad, may be so dangerous as to constitute negligence on part of railroad company when running through city or village where many persons are likely to cross track.

6. Railroads ⚡350(11)—Whether speed of electric car striking truck at city crossing was excessive held for jury.

Whether or not rate of speed of electric car striking truck of deceased at city crossing was excessive held for jury.

7. Railroads ⚡310, 316(3)—Railroad must take such care to prevent injury by trains to those passing over crossing as under existing circumstances would be reasonable, and if view was obstructed it was duty to moderate speed accordingly.

Obligation rested upon railroad company operating electric cars of taking such care to prevent injuries by its trains to those passing over crossing where collision with automobile occurred causing death of plaintiff's decedent as would under existing circumstances be reasonable, and, if view of its tracks was so obstructed that person lawfully using street could not before passing from place of safety to place of danger see approaching train just beyond obstruction in time to escape if it moved at high speed, it was its duty to moderate speed accordingly or make approach of train reasonably apparent by other methods to user of street.

8. Railroads ⚡350(16)—Whether driver of truck struck by electric car at crossing was contributorily negligent in failing to stop, look, and listen held for jury.

Whether decedent driving truck which was struck by electric car at crossing was guilty of negligence in failing to stop, look, and listen which contributed directly and proximately to happening of accident, held question of fact for determination of jury.

9. Negligence ⚡136(9)—Even where facts are undisputed, if reasonable men might draw different conclusions, question of negligence is for jury.

Even where facts are undisputed, if reasonable men might draw different conclusions upon question of negligence, question is one of fact for jury.

Curtis and Shenk, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by Dorothy M. Young and others against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and another. Judgment for defendant entered on directed verdict and motion of plaintiff for new trial denied, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Ben. F. Griffith and Ralph W. Eckhart, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank Karr, E. E. Morris, and C. W. Cornell, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Plaintiffs, as the heirs of Peter W. Young, brought this action to recover damages for his death, resulting from a collision at a crossing between an automobile truck, driven by him, and an electric car of the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company, operated by the defendant motorman, Howard T. Bennett. Negligence of the defendants was charged in three particulars: In failing to give a proper crossing signal; operating the car at an excessive speed; and in failing to operate the car with due care in view of the dangerous and unguarded condition of the crossing. The case was tried with a jury. When all the evidence was in, defendants moved for a directed verdict in their favor on the following grounds: (1) That the evidence showed conclusively that there was no negligence on the part of the railway company which contributed, directly or proximately, to the happening of the accident; (2) that the evidence conclusively showed that the deceased was himself guilty of contributory negligence; and (3) that if, under the evidence, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, the court would have to set it aside because of the insufficiency of the evidence to support it. The court granted the motion without indicating upon what grounds it did so. Plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied, and they have appealed from the judgment entered on the directed verdict.

[1] The trial court erred in taking the case from the jury, unless it can be said, as a matter of law, that no other reasonable conclusion, than that defendants were entitled to judgment, was legally deducible from the evidence, and that any other holding would be so lacking in evidentiary support that an appellate court would be impelled to reverse it upon appeal, or a trial court to set it aside. Umsted v. Scofield Engineering Const. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 263 P. 799; Duggan v. Forderer, 79 Cal. App. 339, 343, 249 P. 533. It becomes necessary, therefore, to determine whether the evidence in the case tended to establish the negligence charged by the plaintiffs to the defendants, or whether the testimony, as a whole, so conclusively supported one or more of the grounds of defendants' motion for a directed verdict that the court would have been under compulsion to set aside a contrary finding of the jury.

The collision which occasioned Young's death occurred on December 22, 1925, in the city of Hawthorne, where Eucalyptus avenue intersects at right angles the main line track of the Pacific Electric Railway Company, running east and west. Evidence as to the condition of the crossing showed that a warehouse was located on the northwest corner. North of the warehouse, on Eucalyptus avenue, was a garage, with a house adjoining on the north. These buildings obstructed the view of persons driving in a southerly direction along Eucalyptus avenue to such an extent that they had no opportunity to observe an eastbound electric car until they were almost on, or dangerously close to, the tracks. The obstructions likewise prevented the trainmen on cars approaching the crossing from the west from seeing automobiles southbound toward the tracks. In addition to the buildings, box cars stood on the siding west of Eucalyptus avenue and north of the main track practically all the time. A power line pole west of the avenue and between the two tracks also obstructed the view from a certain angle. There was the usual standard railroad crossing sign, but no automatic signaling device nor gates, nor was a flagman stationed at the intersection to warn travelers of approaching cars. One of plaintiffs' witnesses testified that on several occasions he had discussed with the agent of the Pacific Electric Railway Company at El Segundo the dangerous nature of the crossing, and had suggested that a wigwag be installed. While the respondents assert that an examination of their exhibits will show the locality to be "a sparsely settled rural community with the standard cross arm plainly visible," nevertheless, the crossing is a well-traveled one within the city limits of Hawthorne; a witness testifying that he "would estimate, including [his] customers and others driving touring cars, inclusive of [his] own trucks, about two hundred people" daily crossed the tracks at Eucalyptus avenue.

[2] Plaintiffs' first assignment of negligence on the part of the defendants concerns the alleged failure of the motorman to blow the whistle sufficiently in advance of reaching the crossing to give proper warning. There was a substantial conflict in the testimony as to the time of giving the signals, and as to their extent. The fact that there was positive testimony on the subject does not conclusively establish that the required crossing signals were given. It creates merely a conflict of testimony to be resolved by the jury. Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., R. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 752, 134 P. 709; Vaca v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal. App.) 267 P. 346. See, also, Marchetti v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 529.

that, in the absence of a regulatory statute or ordinance, a railway company may ordinarily run its trains at such speed as it sees fit, and that a charge of negligence cannot be predicated on that rate of speed unless there are attendant circumstances which make such speed negligence. They also cite authorities as to the right of a railroad company to operate its trains at a high rate of speed in country districts. While it is true that no rate of speed is negligence per se in the absence of a statute or ordinance, it does not follow that a railroad company will be permitted to run its trains under all conditions at any rate of speed it may choose. It must regulate its speed with proper regard for the safety of human life and property, especially when running through towns and cities. The character of a crossing, it has been well reasoned, affects the duty of the railroad company toward travelers upon the public highway, and its trains must pass over dangerous crossings at a less rate of speed proportionate to the danger. As previously stated, the scene of the collision was not the ordinary country grade crossing, but a well-traveled, paved avenue within the city limits. It was stipulated that the distance between Hawthorne and El Segundo, the termini of the portion of the electric line involved in this case, was 4.56 miles. Estimates as to the speed of the car varied from 12 to 20 miles an hour, and there was some evidence that the train was coasting. While the defendant motorman testified that his car was traveling at about 15 miles an hour as he approached the intersection, he further stated that the running time between the two termini mentioned, with seven scheduled stops, was eleven minutes. A brief computation will demonstrate that the car would have to average a trifle less than 25 miles an hour in order to keep within the allotted running time, without making any allowance for the slackening of the car before stopping, and without any deduction for the time actually lost in taking on passengers. Eucalyptus avenue was not one of the scheduled stops, and it would be only reasonable for the jury to infer that, in order to keep within the scheduled running time, the train would travel faster where there were no regular stations than it would when nearing one where it was required to stop. "A rate of speed that may be allowable in a thinly settled part of the country, where but few persons will have occasion to cross the tracks, may be so dangerous as to constitute negligence on the part of the railroad company when driving a train through a city or village, where many persons are likely to cross the track." 2 Thompson on Negligence, § 1875. As the standard of duty shifts with the circumstances developed in the case, the question whether or not a rate of speed is excessive is one of fact for the jury. As this court said in Bilton v. Southern Pac. Co., 148 Cal. 443, 447, 83 P. 440, 442: " * * * There can be no doubt that the question as to whether or not a rate of speed at a crossing is so dangerous or excessive as to constitute negligence must depend upon the particular circumstances there existing, and if the circumstances are such that reasonable and impartial men may well differ as to whether the speed maintained at the particular place showed a want of reasonable care, the question as to whether the railroad company was guilty of negligence in maintaining such speed is one for the jury"—citing authorities. See, also, Marchetti v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, at page 531 of 269 P.; Tousley v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 457, 460, 137 P. 31.

[7] The third charge of negligence against the defendants relates to the failure to operate the car with due care in view of the dangerous condition of the crossing. A witness testified that there was practically a solid wall of obstruction commencing with the house north of the garage and continuing up to within 19 feet, 6 or 8 inches of the track, and that there was no opportunity at all, until one passed the latter point, to see a car coming from the west. According to the testimony of the motorman, "a box car was located on the siding just north of the track that [he] was operating on, approximately 40 feet west of Eucalyptus street." He first saw the truck as he came out from behind the box car, and about 35 feet from the crossing. There was also testimony showing that if a box car was stopped in a position to load on the platform on the south side of the Sander-son warehouse, an automobile would have to be beyond the siding tracks to see a train coming from the west. A witness was asked whether, under those conditions, in an automobile in which the driver's point of vision was 7 feet back of the front of his car (as was the case with the autotruck involved in this collision), the driver could see a train approaching from the west—west of the telephone pole—without putting himself "in a position of peril." "The Court: What do you mean by 'a position of peril'?" Counsel for plaintiffs: "By 'a position of peril' I mean a position where you would be so far on the track that if a car came down there it would strike the automobile in which you were." The witness: "It would not strike me, but it would strike the automobile, for the reason that I would have to have at least my radiator and the center of my front wheels on the track." In Bilton v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, this court said (page 447 of 148 Cal. [83 P. 442]): "The obligation rested upon it [the railroad company] of taking such care to prevent injury by its trains to those passing over the crossing as would, under the existing circumstances, be reasonable, and if the view of its track was so obstructed that a person lawfully using the street could not before passing from a place of safety to a place of danger see an approaching train just beyond the obstruction in time to escape it, if it moved at a high rate of speed, it was its duty to moderate the speed accordingly, or make the approach of the train reasonably apparent by other methods to the user of the street."

Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, was an action for damages for death caused by a collision. The court granted defendants' motion for a nonsuit based on the contributory negligence of the deceased. There, as here, the evidence showed the crossing to be dangerous because of existing obstructions, and there was a conflict as to the sounding of proper warnings. On appeal, the respondents contended that, even though it should be held there was error on the part of the trial court in granting their motion on the ground of contributory negligence, the order should be sustained because there was no evidence of negligence on their part in the operation of their train at the time of the collision. In passing upon this contention, this court said: "It was held in Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 53 Cal. App. 194, 202, 199 P. 1059, 1062: That the law imposed 'upon a railroad company the duty to use reasonable care, corresponding to the circumstances constituting the probable danger, to avoid injury to persons lawfully traveling upon the public highway crossed by the company's tracks and trains. It then becomes a question for the jury to decide whether or not it was negligence for the company to run its cars across the highway without providing a flagman or some means of warning to travelers at the place of crossing. And, where the facts in evidence prove that usually or frequently there are obstructions which interfere with the opportunity to see moving trains while travelers on the highway are approaching a much-traveled crossing, it cannot be held that as a matter of law it is not negligence to run trains there without warning signals other than those usually given by engines and cars.'"

[8] Respondents contend that the deceased, in failing to stop, look, and listen, was guilty of negligence which contributed directly and proximately to the happening of the accident; but the question of such negligence is not usually one of law for the court, but is one of fact for the jury. "The law can only define the duty of individuals under given circumstances. The existence of the circumstances is a question of fact for the jury." Dufour v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 67 Cal. 319, 323, 7 P. 769, 771. Reviewing the evidence with reference to the conduct of the deceased, it appears that the territory covered by him in his business of selling and distributing bottled water, in which he had engaged for several months, was on both sides of the railroad track, and included Eucalyptus avenue. We may assume, therefore, that he was familiar with the crossing. The statement of one of defendants' witnesses that he had had a conversation with the deceased some six or eight weeks prior to the accident, in which he had warned him about his careless manner in crossing the tracks, and his testimony as to the rate of speed at which the deceased customarily crossed the tracks, were impeached by the testimony of other witnesses. Estimates as to the speed of the automobile truck prior to the collision varied from between 12 and 15 miles to between 20 and 30 miles. Mrs. Leek, a witness for the plaintiffs, testified that she first saw the deceased as she looked through a window about 45 feet from the point where the accident occurred. At that time the truck was going at from 12 to 15 miles an hour, and, as he approached the crossing, the driver "possibly slowed down a bit"; that as the truck passed the window he was "looking down a little bit"; that his left hand was on the steering wheel, but she was not sure as to his right hand. The section foreman for the railway company testified that at the time he was about 150 feet from the crossing that he noticed the autotruck approaching, and Young was looking down and driving with one hand; that when the deceased was within 30 or 40 feet of the crossing the witness shouted at him, whereupon he looked up, "got ahold of his wheel and steering his car—turned the car the same way the Pacific Electric car was running."

[9] Appellants contend that the jury may have inferred from the testimony of these two witnesses that the deceased had slowed down his truck, preparatory to stopping as soon as he would be in a position to look up the main track. It will be recalled that in order to do so he would have to run his machine to within a few feet of the track. Appellants urge, further, that the jury may have concluded from the testimony just referred to that the deceased looked down to put one hand on the emergency brake, to set it when he stopped, when his attention was suddenly distracted and misdirected to the east by the loud shouting of the section foreman, "so powerfully" that it could be "heard about two blocks"; that during this "second of distraction" the truck traveled forward the few feet which represented the difference between safety and danger; and that by the time the driver looked to the west and saw the oncoming car he believed he could not stop before reaching the tracks, and, releasing the partial brake he had on the truck, he swung to the left, paralleling the electric car, in an effort to avoid a collision. The machine had not reached the rails, but some portion of the overhang of the electric car and the forward part of the chassis of the truck came together. The automobile was not overturned, but the driver was killed when thrown beneath its wheels by the force of the impact. Passengers on the car, as well as the motorman, gave evidence which conflicted with that of plaintiffs' witnesses as to the speed of the truck and with reference to the conduct of the deceased on approaching the crossing. In our opinion, it was for the jury to sift the testimony, in the light of the surroundings and the ability of the witnesses to see what occurred, and to determine which of the conflicting witnesses told the truth, and then, having ascertained the facts, it was for them to say, under proper instructions as to the law, whether the conduct of the deceased was free from negligence and accompanied with ordinary care. Cooper v. Los Angeles Terminal R. Co., 137 Cal. 229, 230, 70 P. 11. The right of a defendant to have a jury instructed to return a verdict in its favor can only obtain where the evidence conclusively establishes such negligence. "When the evidence is such that the court is impelled to say that it is not in conflict on the facts, and that from those facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his own injury, then, and only then, does the law step in and forbid plaintiff a recovery." Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 240, 116 P. 513, 515; Vaca v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, page 349 of 267 P. Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable men might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury. Johnson v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 154 Cal. 285, 295, 97 P. 520, citing Seller v. Market-Street Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 P. 1006.

Considering the evidence in this case as a whole, we do not think it can be fairly held, as a matter of law, either that the respondents were not guilty of negligence in the operation of their train, or that the deceased was contributorily negligent. The testimony was not so clear and convincing that the court could undertake to say, as a matter of law, how the jury should find on those issues. Davis v. Pacific Power Co., 107 Cal. 563, 575, 40 P. 952, 48 Am. St. Rep. 156. Appellants were therefore entitled to have the case go to the jury for a verdict on the merits.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

CURTIS, J. I dissent. The uncontradicted evidence in this case in my opinion shows that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in driving his truck upon the tracks of the defendant railway company. Contributory negligence becomes a question of law when the evidence is such that the court is impelled to say that it is not in conflict on the facts, and that from these facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, namely, an inference pointing unerringly to or against contributory negligence upon the part of the plaintiff. 19 Cal. Jur. 735; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P.

The uncontradicted evidence in this case shows that the deceased deliberately drove his truck upon the railroad track without making any attempt whatever to ascertain whether there was a train approaching thereon. The fact that his view of the track was obscured by buildings or other objects situated on or along the railway right of way did not relieve him of the duty of ascertaining that the railway track was free of danger before he entered thereon. Griffin v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., supra. In that case the facts were much like those in the present action, and it was therein held by this court that the uncontradicted evidence showed that the plaintiff was as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence. The rule enunciated in that case has been uniformly followed by this court. Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675; *Billig v. Southern Pac. LEALA v. CARROLL et al. (S. F. 12989.)

1. Deeds ⇨124(1)—Words in deed granting property to grantee and heirs forever are construed according to intention of entire instrument.

Words in deed granting property to grantee and to heirs forever, while conveying fee-simple estate under common-law rule, is generally construed at present time in accordance with intention expressed by entire instrument.

2. Deeds ⇨129(4)—Deed declaring grantor's intention to grant life estate to son with remainder to son's children conveyed life estate to son, though rule was otherwise at common law.

Where deed contained declaration of grantor as to meaning he placed upon words of grant after granting property to grantee and heirs forever, that it was intention of grantor to grant life estate to son, and at death, property to go to children of grantee, court will give to language of deed meaning and intent with which it was used by grantor, and hence son took but a life estate, though at common law he would have acquired a fee-simple estate.

LANGDON, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in an action brought to quiet his title in fee simple to 6.8 acres of land in Alameda county, Cal. The trial court held that plaintiff owned a life estate in the property and that the defendants were the owners of the remainder in fee. The entire controversy centers upon the construction of a certain deed executed and delivered by Manuel Silveira Leala on March 13, 1900, in which the plaintiff herein, the son of the grantor, was the grantee of an estate, which estate is contended by plaintiff to be a fee and which estate is contended by the defendants to be but a life estate. The pertinent portions of said deed are as follows:

"This indenture, made the 13th day of March, A. D. 1900, between Manuel Silveira Leala, of the Township of Eden, County of Alameda, State of California, the party of the first part, and Joseph Silveira Leala, his son, of the same place, the party of the second part,

"Witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the love and affection which the said party of the first part has and bears unto the said party of the second part, as also for the better maintenance, support, protection and livelihood, of the said party of the second part does by these presents give, grant, alien and confirm unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs forever, all that certain piece or parcel of land situate lying and being in the Township of Eden, County of Alameda, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit: (here follows the description)

"The intention of the grantor herein is a life estate to his son the said party of the second part, and at his death to become the property of the said party of the second part's children."

[1, 2] The respondents herein are children of a deceased child of the appellant and qualify as "children" under the last-quoted sentence of the deed, if it is operative. It is the contention of appellant, however, that the deed contains no operative words of grant to the grantee's children and conveyed to the grantee's children no present interest in said property. The contention is sound and in harmony with the holding of the case of McGarrigle v. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, 145 Cal. 694, 79 P. 447, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315, 104 Am. St. Rep. 84, unless the words in the deed granting the property "to the said party of the second part and to his heirs forever" be construed as meaning the party of the second part and his children forever. Such language, while conveying a fee-simple estate under the common-law rule, is generally construed now in accordance with the intention expressed by the entire instrument. Acker v. Pridgen, 158 N. C. 337, 74 S. E. 335, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407; Jacobs v. All Persons, 12 Cal. App. 163, 106 P. 896. In the instant case, we have a declaration of the grantor in the instrument itself as to the meaning he placed upon his words of grant. After granting the property to the plaintiff and his heirs forever, the grantor declares that it is his intention to give by this instrument a life estate to the plaintiff with a remainder after his death to his children. Under such circumstances, this court will give to the language of the deed the meaning and intent with which it was used by the grantor.

It follows that the judgment must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

WEINSTEIN et al. v. MOERS et al.

Supreme Court of California. July 5, 1929.

1. Husband and wife $\S$ 34—Evidence supported finding that husband promised wife not to claim property received under her will; "with the right to inherit."

In heir's suit to establish and enforce trust in property claimed by surviving husband under wife's will, evidence held sufficient to support court's finding that husband promised wife not to claim any property received under her will in consideration of cash and personal property received by him under agreement made by them "in full settlement of any property rights * * * in favor of either * * * with the right to inherit"; latter phrase not being intended in technical sense of right to take under laws of succession only.

2. Evidence $\S$ 455—Oral evidence held admissible to explain words "with the right to inherit" in spouses' property settlement agreement.

Oral evidence that husband and wife, executing agreement "in full settlement of any property rights now or which may hereafter accrue in favor of either of the parties hereto out of said marriage relation, with the right to inherit," meant that neither should take other's property after death of either, whether under will or laws of succession, held admissible to explain words "with the right to inherit," which were fairly susceptible of different interpretations.

3. Husband and wife $\S$ 34—Evidence supported finding that wife acted in reliance on husband's promise not to claim any of her property on her death.

In heir's suit to establish trust in property claimed by defendant under his deceased wife's will, evidence held sufficient to support finding that testatrix acted in reliance on defendant's promise in property settlement agreement not to claim any of her property in event of her death.

4. Husband and wife $\S$ 35—Husband's right, under property settlement contract, to money placed in escrow by wife, held not prejudiced by judgment establishing trust in property she devised to him.

While death of wife, placing money in escrow for payment to husband pursuant to property settlement agreement, revoked escrow, husband's rights thereto under settlement contract were not prejudiced by judgment establishing trust for wife's mother as her sole heir in property claimed by husband under wife's will, though properly not adjudged in suit for such relief because of necessity of presenting claim against wife's estate.

5. Husband and wife $\S$ 35—Provision of property settlement contract for delivery of merchandise to husband did not prevent operation of judgment establishing trust in property devised to him by wife.

Provision of spouses' property settlement contract for delivery of merchandise of certain value to husband held not insuperable obstacle to operation of judgment establishing trust for wife's mother in property claimed by husband under wife's will; contract not being terminated by wife's death, and its stipulations being covenants rather than conditions precedent.

6. Trusts $\S$ 97—Husband, promising wife not to claim property received under her will, held legal title thereto in trust for her heir.

While wife's will passed legal title to property devised to husband, he acquired it subject to property settlement agreement, wherein he promised not to claim any property received under will, and in subordination to equities of wife's mother, as her sole heir, for whom he held property in trust because of constructive fraud in refusing to abide by contract; neither statute of wills, statute of frauds, nor requirement that express trusts be in writing being applicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. E. Keeler, Judge.

Action by Clara Weinstein and husband against Albert A. Moers, individually and as executor of the estate of Theresa W. Moers, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Roger Marchetti, of Los Angeles (Dix W. Noel, of New York City, of counsel), for appellant.

John A. Powell, and O'Melveny, Millikin, Tuller & Myers and Macnell, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff Clara Weinstein in an action to establish and enforce a trust.

Prior to August 13, 1924, the defendant Albert A. Moers and Theresa W. Moers, husband and wife, conducted an art and antique store on West Seventh street in the city of Los Angeles under the name of "Moers, Inc." During the existence of the marriage relation, and on or about August 4, 1921, they executed mutually reciprocal wills, pursuant to agreement, by which each devised and bequeathed to the other all of the property belonging to them at the time of their respective deaths. Domestic difficulties arose, and in August, 1922, the wife commenced an action for divorce against the husband, which action was subsequently dismissed. On May 23, 1924, the husband instituted an action for divorce against the wife, and the cause was set down to be heard on August 7, 1924. Immediately prior to the hearing of the cause, the parties thereto executed an agreement of property settlement, by the terms of which all rights of the parties as to their separate and community properties were provided for and settled. Among other things, it was provided therein that merchandise and personal property in the store to the value of $5,000 was to be delivered to the husband, together with $14,500 in cash. It was further agreed "that any and all property, whether real, personal or mixed, standing in the name of either party, shall be and it is hereby specified as the separate property of the party in whose name said property stands and each party hereto waives any right, title, claim or interest in or to any property now standing in the name of the other, or which may be hereafter acquired by the other." It was further agreed "that said payment and agreement is hereby accepted by the parties hereto in full settlement of any property rights now or which may hereafter accrue in favor of either of the parties hereto out of said marriage relation, with the right to inherit, whether said claim is based upon the community rights now existing or which may hereafter be created." After the execution of the property settlement agreement, and on the same day, an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted to the husband. Thereafter an escrow was opened in a local bank for the purpose of carrying out certain of the terms of the agreement. The wife thereupon paid into the escrow the sum of $14,500 for the benefit of the husband. On August 13, 1924, just a week before the date set for the closing of the escrow, Theresa W. Moers died as the result of a gunshot wound inflicted upon her the night before. See People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 245 P. 426.

After the institution of the divorce proceedings, and prior to the execution of the property settlement agreement, the husband revoked the will made by him in favor of his wife. After the death of the wife, the reciprocal will made by her in favor of her husband was found among her effects. The surviving husband filed this will for probate. It was admitted to probate, and he was appointed executor thereof. The original and the supplemental inventory and appraisement filed April 18 and October 21, 1925, respectively, showed the value of the decedent's estate to be in excess of $100,000. This action was commenced on March 30, 1925.

The plaintiff Clara Weinstein is the wife of her coplaintiff, and is the surviving mother and sole heir at law of Theresa W. Moers, deceased. The defendant is sued in his individual capacity and as executor of the will of his deceased wife. It is alleged in the complaint, and found by the court to be true, that it was understood and agreed by each of the parties to the property settlement agreement that, by the settlement consummated therein, "the rights given and acquired by each person thereunder should constitute all of the rights of any kind which either person shall ever have or acquire in or to the separate property of the other or in the community property of said marriage, either by virtue of the marriage relation then existing between them, or by inheritance, the one from the other, or as a legatee or devisee under any will theretofore executed by either of said persons; that said Theresa W. Moers refused to sign and execute said agreement except upon the condition and understanding that it should terminate and destroy any and every right or claim which her then husband, Albert A. Moers, might then have or might thereafter assert by virtue of the marriage relation existing between them, or as an heir of said Theresa W. Moers, or under the terms of the will theretofore executed by said Theresa W. Moers; that said Theresa W. Moers believed and understood that it was not necessary for her to revoke her then existing will in order that said Albert A. Moers should not, in the event of her death, receive any of her property through or under the terms of said will; that in addition said Theresa W. Moers was induced to and did refrain from revoking her said will by representations made by said Albert A. Moers that he did not and would not thereafter claim any right or interest in or to any of said property except such property as was by the express terms of said agreement set over and apart to him; that the condition and understanding upon which said agreement was executed by said Theresa W. Moers was well and fully known by defendant Albert A. Moers and was assented and agreed to by him, and that he executed said agreement on his part with full knowledge thereof; that the life of said Theresa W. Moers was taken by one Norman Selby within a few days after the execution of the said agreement and before the will hereinbefore referred to as executed by her was legally revoked by her; that defendant Albert A. Moers has propounded said will for probate and claims to be the sole owner of all of the property owned by said Theresa W. Moers at the time of her death and entitled to receive distribution thereof under the terms of said will; that said claim is in violation of the terms of said agreement in this paragraph set forth, and of the understanding and agreement of the parties thereto, and its assertion constitutes a fraud upon the plaintiffs as heirs at law of said Theresa W. Moers; that any legal title acquired by said defendant Albert A. Moers under the last will and testament of said Theresa W. Moers is held by him in trust for these plaintiffs." The court concluded that the plaintiff Clara Weinstein is entitled to all of the property belonging to the decedent at the time of her death, less costs of administration of and claims against the estate, and that the defendant holds all of the property received or to be received by him from the estate of the decedent as trustee for the plaintiff Clara Weinstein. Judgment was entered accordingly.

[1, 2] In support of the appeal, an attack is made upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding above quoted to the effect that the defendant promised and agreed that he would not make any claim to any property of the decedent which he might receive under her will. It appeared in evidence in support of the finding that, after the draft of the property settlement had been prepared, and pending its execution, a conference was held at which the parties thereto and their respective counsel were present. During this conference, the decedent desired and insisted that the agreement should be a complete and final settlement of the property rights of the parties, and that neither should receive any property from the other, and that she intended, as soon as the property settlement agreement was carried out, to make a will in favor of her mother. She was assured that under the agreement neither would receive the property of the other after death, but that to make it plain a clause would be inserted in the agreement to that effect. Whereupon the words "with the right to inherit" were interlined in the paragraph where the same appears in the above-quoted portion of the agreement and in the handwriting of counsel for the defendant. When this interlineation had been made, the instrument was signed. Over the objection of the defendant, evidence was offered and received as to what the parties intended by the use of the words so interlined. The defendant contended then, and now insists, that the words so used are plain and unambiguous, admit of no oral explanation, and, when read in their obvious meaning, provide that the parties should not take one from the other under the laws of succession. The plaintiffs contend that what the parties meant was that neither should take the property of the other after the death of either, and that the words are of sufficient uncertainty as to their meaning to admit of oral evidence in explanation thereof.

That the parties intended that neither should receive any of the property of the other upon the death of either is satisfactorily established in support of the finding. True, the oral evidence as to what took place at the conference held on the day the agreement was signed was conflicting. But the assumption that the evidence was sufficient to support a contrary finding does not aid the defendant under well-recognized rules on appeal. We are of the opinion that, when the acts and circumstances of the parties at and before the signing of the instrument and the conduct of the defendant in destroying his will are taken into consideration, the words employed in the interlineation were intended, not in their technical sense, but in the sense in which the court found them to be used. Aside from the oral evidence, the words used and the circumstances of the parties speak eloquently in favor of the court's finding. The form of the expression interlined, taken in connection with the context, is fairly susceptible of different interpretations. When the words are given the meaning ascribed to them by the trial court, the question of the claimed inadmissibility of the oral evidence would seem to be removed from debate. Any other conclusion would tend to nullify the obvious intention of the parties under the contract. See Balfour v. Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co., 109 Cal. 221, 41 P. 876.

[3] It is also contended by the defendant that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the decedent acted in reliance upon the defendant's promise not to take any of her property in the event of her death. It is sufficient on this point to say that it satisfactorily appears from the evidence that, if the decedent had not so understood their property settlement agreement, she would not have signed the same, and immediately would have revoked her will. See De Laurencel v. De Boom, 48 Cal. 581.

[4, 5] Again, it is argued that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the promise of the defendant not to take by will was not dependent upon complete performance of the contract by the decedent. With reference to the payment of $14,500 in cash, it appears that this amount of money was placed in the escrow to be paid to the defendant Moers upon the conclusion of the escrow on August 20th. Upon the death of Mrs. Moers on the 13th, the escrow was revoked, and the money was not paid to the defendant as therein provided. But the rights of the defendant to this money under the contract of settlement are in nowise prejudiced by the judgment herein. On the contrary, his right to the payment of this sum is recognized but properly not adjudged, because of the necessary formality of the presentation of a claim against the estate, which is more than sufficient to satisfy all of his (the defendant's) demands under the property settlement agreement. Nor are we able to find any insuperable obstacle to the operation of the judgment herein by reason of the provision of the contract for the segregation of $5,000 of the merchandise of the parties. Certain it is that the contract was not terminated by the death of one of the parties, and its stipulations should be deemed as covenants rather than as conditions precedent, especially when the latter would result in what the court found to be inequitable consequences in favor of the defendant. San Diego Construction Co. v. Mannix, 175 Cal. 548, 166 P. 325; Lucy v. Davis, 163 Cal. 611, 614, 126 P. 490.

[6] Since no error in the admission of evidence appears, and the findings are supported by the evidence, the judgment should stand as the appropriate action of the court in an equity proceeding. Neither the statute of wills, the statute of frauds, nor the requirement that express trusts be in writing are applicable. The will was operative to pass the legal title, but, when the defendant gathered unto himself the legal title, he acquired it subject to the operation of the property settlement agreement and in subordination to the equities of the plaintiff Clara Weinstein. The refusal of the defendant to abide by his contract amounted to a constructive fraud on the heir of the defendant, who would have taken the legal, as well as the equitable, title, if the agreement had not been repudiated. Trusts of the character here involved are impressed in favor of one who would otherwise take and against the one who has refused to perform his promise, on the ground of the imputed fraud of the latter and his attempted holding of the estate against conscience. Smith v. Lombard, 201 Cal. 518, 258 P. 55; Brazil v. Silva, 181 Cal. 490, 185 P. 174; Estate of Everts, 163 Cal. 449, 125 P. 1058; Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 P. 430; Kimball v. Tripp, 136 Cal. 631, 69 P. 428; Prior v. Andrews, 83 Cal. App. 782, 257

P. 560; Sanguinetti v. Rossen, 12 Cal. App. 623, 107 P. 560; Powell v. Yearance, 73 N. J. Eq. 117, 67 A. 892; Gammel v. Fletcher, 76 Kan. 577, 92 P. 713, 93 P. 339.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITMORE et ux. v. BROWN, City Tax Collector. (S. F. 13440.)

Supreme Court of California. June 29, 1929.

1. Mandamus ⇨118—Where taxpayers tendered sufficient amount to pay tax legally due, mandamus was proper in proceeding to compel issuance of receipt in full.

Where taxpayers tendered sufficient amount to pay tax legally due, mandamus was proper proceeding to compel tax collector to issue official receipt in full.

2. Schools and school districts ⇨12—School system may be made municipal affair by city when acting in promotion of legislative school plans and purposes of state (Const. art. 9, § 6, as amended in 1920).

Although school system is of general concern and not strictly speaking a municipal affair, under Const. art. 9, § 6, as amended in 1920, it may be made a municipal affair by city when acting in promotion and not in derogation of legislative school plans and purposes of state.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨58—Charters promulgated under Constitution as freeholders' charters have all dignity of statutes.

Charters promulgated under Constitution as freeholders' charters have all dignity of statutes.

4. Schools and school districts ⇨103(1)—As to "district" taxes for school purposes, system provided by Constitution and statutes is exclusive (Const. art. 9, § 6, as amended in 1920).

As to "district" taxes for school purposes, system provided by Const. art. 9, § 6, as amended in 1920, providing that public school system shall include such schools as may be established by Legislature or by municipal or district authority, and general statutes, is exclusive, though the word "district" does not include a municipality merely because municipality and district occupy the same territory.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, District.]

5. Schools and school districts ⇨99—City operating under freeholders' charter may aid public school system in its midst by taxation of property therein located, where warrant so to do is found in charter or other provision of law (Const. art. 9, § 6).

Const. art. 9, § 6, and statutory provisions in aid of it, do not forbid city operating under freeholders' charter from aiding public school system in its midst by taxation of property therein located, where warrant so to do is found in charter or other provision of law.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨956(1)—Rule of strict construction applies when determining whether city has power to tax.

Rule of strict construction applies in determining whether city has power to tax, and such power, when exercised under delegated authority by municipal corporation, is subject to rigid scrutiny to determine whether it actually exists and whether it has been exercised under limitations imposed.

7. Statutes ⇨245—Tax laws are strictly construed in favor of taxpayer.

Tax laws are strictly construed in favor of taxpayer and against the state.

8. Municipal corporations ⇨57, 59—Municipal corporations have only powers expressly conferred and those necessarily incident to powers expressly granted or essential to declared objects.

Municipal corporations have only powers expressly conferred and such as are necessarily incident to those expressly granted or essential to declared objects and purposes of corporation.

9. Municipal corporations ⇨58—Language defining powers of municipal corporations and grants thereto must be strictly construed, and any doubts must be resolved against corporation.

Language defining powers of municipal corporations and grants thereto must be strictly construed, and any fair, reasonable doubts concerning existence of power must be resolved against corporation.

10. Schools and school districts ⇨108(2)—City tax for school building purposes held unwarranted, under charter requiring board of education to submit to council estimate of amounts required from city for adequate "support" of schools; "maintenance" (Pol. Code, §§ 1755, 1830, 1838, 1839, 1840).

Item of $3 tax by city on each $100 of assessed valuation for school building purposes held unwarranted, under charter providing that board of education shall submit in writing to council estimate of amounts required from city for adequate support of public schools for ensuing year, since purchasing lots, building buildings, making permanent improvements, and such like outlay, are not included under head of "maintenance" or "support," under Pol. Code, §§ 1755, 1830, 1838, 1840, and taxation for building purposes comes under different limit from taxation for support or maintenance, under sections 1755, 1838, 1839.

Original proceeding by Charles S. Whitmore, Jr., and wife against Freda M. Brown, as Tax Collector of the City of Albany, for a writ of mandate to be directed to respondent to compel her to issue a receipt in full for taxes. Writ issued.

Earl Warren, Dist. Atty., Frank M. Ogden, Asst. Dist. Atty., and Agnes R. Polsdorfer and James H. Oakley, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of Oakland, as amici curiæ.

Preston Higgins, City Atty., and Homer Buckley, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, William J. Locke, City Atty., of Alameda, Earl J. Sinclair, City Atty., of Berkeley, amici curiæ for cities of Oakland, Alameda, and Berkeley.

PRESTON, J. Original proceeding in mandate. The question recurs upon a general demurrer to the petition.

Petitioners are property owners in the city of Albany, a city operating under a freeholders' charter adopted on the 17th day of January, 1927. Respondent is the tax collector of said city. The territory comprising the city constitutes an elementary school district, and at the same time also constitutes a high school district, each of which said districts are duly organized as such as provided by law.

The question presented by this proceeding is the validity of the tax levy made by the trustees of said city for the fiscal year 1928-29, in so far as it comprises a levy of $3.35 per $100 of assessed valuation as and for a "fund for the maintenance, acquisition and improvement of schools in the City of Albany within the boundaries of the City of Albany as they now are, said money so raised must be expended within the boundaries of said City of Albany."

The charter of said city provides for a board of education, which, among other duties, shall annually "submit in writing to the Council a careful estimate of the whole amount of money to be received from the State and County for the support of the public schools in the City, together with a careful estimate of the amounts, specifying in detail the objects thereof, required from the City for the adequate support of the public schools for the ensuing year." The charter further provides: "The City Council shall include in and apportion from the annual tax levy the sum of not less than thirty-five cents on each one hundred dollars of assessed valuation to be paid into the school fund of the City." Subdivision (g), § 38, St. 1927, p. 2326.

Acting under this authority the board of education, on August 17, 1928, submitted a report to the board of trustees to the effect that the Albany high school district was in need of a junior senior high school to care for the educational needs of the children of the city and district; that no funds with which to purchase secondary school sites or to construct and equip secondary school buildings were available; that less than a year previously a bond issue had been defeated by a narrow margin, and the board of trustees were therefore urgently requested to levy a tax of $3 on each $100 of assessed valuation in the city of Albany, as provided by the charter of the city, the moneys thus raised to be used for the following purposes: Purchasing high school lots; building or purchasing or making alterations and additions to and insuring high school buildings and supplying them with furniture and necessary apparatus and improving high school grounds. Acting in part at least upon this recommendation, the city council, on the 17th day of September, 1928, fixed a total tax rate of $4.59 on each $100 of assessed valuation, setting forth an estimated expenditure for the maintenance, acquisition, and improvement of schools in the city of Albany, without any words to designate whether high schools or elementary schools, or both, were intended to be covered thereby, nor the amount to be used for maintenance for the ensuing year, of $186,157.93, apportioning to that purpose $3.35 of the rate fixed.

Petitioners, who owned real and personal property within the city, were assessed at the sum of $1,850, on which the tax levy for said year at said rate was $84.92, 50 per cent. of which would be declared delinquent upon the first Monday in December, 1928, with the remainder delinquent the last Monday in April, 1929. Petitioners paid the first installment of said taxes, and thereafter tendered to respondent the sum of $14 in payment of the remainder claimed to be due as and for said taxes; said sum being estimated upon a school tax rate of 36 cents, and a total rate of $1.60, instead of a school tax rate of $3.35 and a total tax rate of $4.59 as fixed by the city council.

[1] There is no question made as to the sufficiency of the tender if it should ultimately be held that the school tax levy was illegal. Respondent refused to comply with the demand that it accept said sum or to issue a receipt in full to petitioners and this proceeding followed. If these petitioners in fact tendered a sufficient amount to pay the tax legally due, this proceeding is a proper one to compel the issuance of an official receipt in full. Spring Valley Water Co. v. Planer (Cal. App.) 263 P. 323.

We face at the outset a challenge to the power of a city operating under a freeholders' charter to levy to any extent a tax for school purposes. We are cited to the holding that the school system of the state is of general and state-wide concern and not a mere "municipal affair," as that term in the Constitution (article 9, § 6) is defined, and, in support of this announcement freely made by the courts, we are referred to such cases as the following: Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 P. 44; Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 32 P. 558; Los Angeles City School Dist. v. Longden, 148 Cal. 380, 383, 83 P. 246; Board of Education v. Davidson, 190 Cal. 162, 210 P. 961; Esberg v. Badaracco, 202 Cal. 110, 259 P. 730.

We are then cited to the provisions of article 9, § 6, of the Constitution as amended in 1920, wherein a state high school fund for the support of day and evening secondary and technical schools is provided; where a county elementary school tax by the board of supervisors of each county is required; where the levy of a county high school tax by the board of supervisors is also required; and where also is found the following:

"The public school system shall include day and evening elementary schools, and such day and evening secondary schools, technical schools, kindergarten schools and normal schools or teachers' colleges, as may be established by the legislature, or by municipal or district authority. * * *

"The legislature shall provide for the levying of school district taxes by the board of supervisors of each county, and city and county, for the support of public elementary schools, secondary schools, technical schools, and kindergarten schools, or for any other public school purpose authorized by the legislature."

It is then stated that the "mode" prescribed is the "measure of power" when a provision of the Constitution is to be construed (People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238, 248, 24 P. 718), and from this line of reasoning the conclusion is adduced that only the board of supervisors of the county wherein the school district is located may levy a school tax, and action of this kind by a municipality is forbidden. This deduction is then fortified, it is said, by reference to the provisions of the Political Code, §§ 1612a, 1755, 1830-1837, inclusive, 1838, 1840, and perhaps other sections, all dealing with the subject of taxation for school purposes and providing that the levy of such taxes must be made by the board of supervisors. In this connection we are also cited to the case of Chico H. S. Board v. Supervisors, 118 Cal. 121, 50 P. 275, where it was held that city trustees, and not the board of supervisors, must levy school taxes in cities of the first to fifth classes, inclusive, organized and operated under the general Municipal Act of 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93); it being argued that the converse of the proposition here urged is there decided.

Again, it is asserted that, unless municipalities can tax for other than municipal purposes, the levy here made must be in excess of the powers of the city. Lastly, it is contended that in the cases of Esberg v. Badaracco, supra, and McDonald v. Richards, 79 Cal. App. 1, 248 P. 1049, we have in effect held that the board of supervisors is the only body authorized to levy a district school tax.

At this juncture, however, we are met with the fact that in cities of the first to fifth classes, inclusive, organized under the general law, a school department is specially created with power in the city trustees to levy and collect within specified limits, a tax for school purposes. This method in such city has been held to be exclusive. Chico H. S. Board v. Supervisors, supra.

In this connection also we must pause to note distinct evidences of the trend of our judicial decisions towards sustaining the power of cities, which desire to supplement the efforts of the state, counties, and districts, to support, maintain, and strengthen the public school system functioning within their borders. This is in line with the policy announced in our Constitution as follows: "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the legislature shall encourage by all suitable means the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral and agricultural improvement." Const. § 1, art. 9.

For example, in the cases of Wetmore v. City of Oakland, 99 Cal. 146, 33 P. 769, and Law v. San Francisco, 144 Cal. 384, 77 P. 1014, we find the power in municipalities to vote a bond issue for school purposes to be specifically upheld. Again in Los Angeles City School Dist. v. Longden, supra, this power is reannounced, and, in explanation of the principle upon which the holding is based, it is said: "It thus may be taken as decided and settled that a city, as such, may bond itself for public school purposes, and that this power extends to all cases where the object is in furtherance, and not in derogation of, or in conflict with, the general school system established by the state. * * * What, therefore, the Wetmore case and the Law case decided was that the erection of schoolhouses within the corporate limits of a municipality was justly to be regarded as a municipal affair, and that the city, therefore, as such, could create a bonded indebtedness for such and like purposes, even though power to do the same thing was, under the general school system of the state, vested in a school district, which, while occupying the same territory as that of the city, was still in point of law a distinct corporate entity. It follows, therefore, that the declaration of this court that the issuing of bonds for the building of schoolhouses by a city is a municipal affair constitutes in no sense a negation of the fact that another corporate entity—the school district—may, under the general school system of the state, do the same thing for the same purpose."

[2] In short, the holding is that, notwithstanding the fact that the school system is of general concern and not strictly speaking a municipal affair, nevertheless it may be made such an affair by the city when acting in promotion and not in derogation of the legislative school plans and purposes of the state. For in said case of Los Angeles City School Dist. v. Longden, supra, it is further said: "Moreover, it should be finally emphasized that the power of a municipality in this regard can only run current with, and never counter to, the general laws of the state touching the common-school system. To such general laws, if conflict arises, all municipal charters must be subservient."

We have also the case of Malaley v. City of Marysville, 37 Cal. App. 638, 174 P. 367, wherein the city charter of Marysville provided that the county superintendent should be ex officio superintendent of its city schools and for such services should receive a salary of $50 per month. It was, however, provided by section 1617 of the Political Code that the powers and duties of the board of education included the employment and fixing of compensation of the city superintendent of schools; therefore the contention was made that the board of education, and not the city, should compensate the county superintendent for his work. The court quoted at great length from Los Angeles City School Dist. v. Longden, supra, and sustained the claim against the city for the salary of the county superintendent so fixed, using in part the following language: "The above excerpts are thus brought into this opinion, not because we feel prepared to hold that a superintendent of city public schools, or the matter of the appointment or employment of one, is a municipal affair, but because the principle thereby enunciated and approved and as applied to the situation considered in that case supports the proposition for which the respondent contends here, viz.: That, notwithstanding that they are different and separate or distinct corporate entities, a municipality and a school district, the territorial boundaries of which are the same as those of the city, may, if the legislature elects to give them the right to do so, exercise precisely the same identical power with respect to matters connected with and calculated to further the interests of the public school system, in so far as such city and school districts are concerned, and that therefore, merely because the Political Code, in its provisions establishing a system of common schools, confers upon the board of education of the city of Marysville power to employ a superintendent of city public schools, non constat that the provision of the charter of the city of Marysville has become a dead letter; that on the contrary, the provision being one whose object is and has always been in furtherance and not in derogation of the general school system, cannot be held to be inconsistent or in conflict, but perfectly consistent therewith."

Indeed, in the case of Esberg v. Badaracco, supra, we find the following language: "While statutes providing a general system of laws concerning the creation and conduct of common schools prevail over conflicting charter provisions, the charters may provide for matters not enumerated in the general laws and not in conflict therewith, including matters in furtherance of the purpose of the general laws of the state.' (18 Cal. Jur. 814 and cases cited.)"

[3] Again, in Political Code, § 1608, re-enacted in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 133), we find the powers conferred upon boards of school trustees and city boards of education to include the power to pay into the county treasury to be placed to the credit of the proper fund of their districts, all moneys received by and apportioned to them "from taxes levied and collected under the authority of city councils for school purposes." This section apparently recognizes the power of city councils to levy taxes for school purposes under certain circumstances. And lastly, in said section 6, art. 9, of the Constitution above referred to, we find a clear intimation that schools may be established "by the legislature, or by municipal or district authority." We should also contemplate the fact that charters promulgated under the Constitution as freeholders' charters have all the dignity of ordinary statutes. Taylor v. Cole, 201 Cal. 327, 257 P. 40; Stern v. City Council of Berkeley, 25 Cal. App. 685, 145 P. 167.

[4, 5] In view of the foregoing principles thus briefly reviewed, we can reach no other conclusion than this: That, as to "district" taxes for school purposes, the system provided by the Constitution and general statutes is exclusive; that, as to district taxes it was the intent of the framers of the amendment to provide a restricted and specific method for the raising of funds for school purposes, requiring action first by the governing body of the district and the county superintendent of schools, completed by the action of the board of supervisors in levying a tax for such district. But the word "district" so used cannot be held to include a municipality merely because the municipality and the district may occupy the same territory. Nor can we find in the above-quoted provision of the Constitution, or in the several statutory provisions in aid of it, anything which forbids a city, and particularly a city operating under a freeholders' charter, to aid the public school system in its midst by taxation of property therein located, where warrant so to do is found in the charter or other provision of the law. It would be an unnecessary crippling of our public school system, unwarranted by any rule of statutory or constitutional interpretation, to so hold.

Neither the case of Esberg v. Badaracco, supra, nor the case of McDonald v. Richards, supra, considered the question we have here before us. In the former case there was a conflict between the city charter and the state law as to which body had the ultimate right to fix the amount of money to be raised by taxation for school purposes, and it was held that this power was lodged in the board of education and not in the supervisors. In the latter case, the question for consideration was the validity of the provision of the Political Code (section 1612a), which authorizes the county auditor to levy the tax in the event of the failure of the board of supervisors to do so. We do not regard any statements made in either of said cases as foreclosing or curtailing to any extent whatever a free inquiry into and ruling upon the subject we have before us.

[6, 7] The provisions of the city charter of Albany above quoted are now to be considered. The rule of construction here applicable has been cast in different language by the courts, all, however, to the effect that taxation by a municipality affects arbitrarily private property and at the same time is the exercise of a delegated power, and that in both elements the rule applicable is that of strict construction. "The power to tax when exercised under delegated authority by a municipal corporation is always subject to rigid scrutiny, first to determine whether it actually exists, and, second, to determine whether it has been exercised under the limitations imposed. * * * Since tax proceedings are in invitum, tax laws are strictly construed in favor of the taxpayer and against the state, whether property is to be seized or the tax enforced by suit. Strict construction in such cases is reasonable, because presumptively the legislature has given in plain terms all the power intended to be exercised. A statute will not be held to have imposed a tax unless it is clear and explicit. * * * A tax statute is presumed to have been enacted in the light of such existing judicial decisions as have a direct bearing upon it." 24 Cal. Jur. pp. 27, 28.

[8, 9] As said in City and County of San Francisco v. Boyle, 195 Cal. 426, 433, 434, 233 P. 965, 968: " * * * The elementary rule still obtains that 'municipal corporations have only the powers expressly conferred and such as are necessarily incident to those expressly granted, or essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation.' " And in Uhl v. Badaracco, 199 Cal. 270, 282, 248 P. 917, 921: "Language defining the powers of municipal corporations and grants thereto are to be strictly construed, and any fair reasonable doubt concerning the existence of a power is to be resolved against the corporation. Then again, as tax proceedings are in invitum, laws pertaining thereto are to be strictly construed in favor of the taxpayer and against the taxing power. [Citing cases.]" See, also, San Christina, etc., Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 167 Cal. 762, 771, 141 P. 384, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 676; Estate of Potter, 188 Cal. 55, 64, 65, 204 P. 826.

The charter allows the levy of the tax for the "support" of public schools "for the ensuing year." The words "support" and "maintenance" are convertible terms in the scheme of the Political Code respecting public schools. For example, referring to high schools "maintaining the high school" is provided for in section 1756, and in sections 1760 and 1761 the word "support" is found used to convey the same meaning. Again, in section 1840 we have the word "maintenance" used in the same connection. We also find the significant fact that purchasing lots, building buildings, making permanent improvements and such like outlay is not included under the head of "maintenance" or "support." See Pol. Code, §§ 1755, 1830, 1838, and 1840.

It is also to be noted that taxation for building purposes comes under a different limit from taxation for support or maintenance. See Pol. Code, §§ 1755, 1838, 1839. Lastly, in said section 1830, we find the two subjects, maintenance and building purposes, carefully distinguished and provision for the calling of an election to vote a tax for the one or the other.

The estimate prepared by the board of education in the case before us called for taxation at the rate of $3 for the following purposes: "For purchasing high school lots; for building or purchasing one or more high school buildings; for making alterations and additions to high school buildings; for insuring high school buildings; for supplying high school buildings with furniture and necessary apparatus; and for improving high school grounds."

The budget and levy was made for the following purposes: "Fund for the maintenance, acquisition and improvement of schools in the City of Albany within the boundaries of the City of Albany as they now are, said money so raised must be expended within the boundaries of the City of Albany."

[10] Giving, as we must and do, the word "support" the meaning found in the Code, we arrive at the conclusion that the item of $3 for school building purposes is unwarranted by the charter, and for that reason is an illegal and void element in said tax levy, and that the tax rate should be reduced by this amount.

The conclusions which we have thus arrived at are not intended, however, to be given such a narrowness of application as to wholly forbid the application of school moneys derived from taxation to such uses as that of making those ordinary repairs in existing school structures as are required for their adequate use during the current year, or as are by such use made necessary for like uses in the succeeding year; nor to the emergency provision of such structures, temporary in character, as the immediate needs of the department require during any particular period. But the erection of such permanent buildings as are contemplated by this tax cannot be brought by any rational interpretation within the otherwise limited meaning of the word "support."

Let the peremptory writ issue.

Supreme Court of California. July 9, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 90(1)—Under Stockton charter provision creating police court and limiting its jurisdiction to matters arising within city, police court did not have jurisdiction possessed by justice's court (Const. art. 11, § 8½).

Under charter provision of city of Stockton creating police court and providing that such court should have exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or imprisonment or by both fine and imprisonment committed within corporate limits of city and providing that court should have exclusive jurisdiction of certain actions, police court was not vested with jurisdiction possessed by justice's court, since police court's powers were expressly restricted and limited to matters arising within city, and it was not municipal court provided for by Const. art. 11, § 8½.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 84(4)—Constitution does not prevent establishment of police court with jurisdiction limited solely to proceedings arising under municipal ordinance of city (Const. art. 11, § 8½, as amended in 1914).

Const. art. 11, § 8½, as amended in 1914, does not prevent establishment of police court with jurisdiction limited solely to such proceedings, civil and criminal, as might arise under municipal ordinances of city in which such police court may be situated.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 90(6)—Stockton charter creating police court and limiting its power to matters arising within city does not abolish justice's court in city (Const. art. 11, § 8½, as amended in 1914; Code Civ. Proc. § 103).

Charter provision of city of Stockton creating police court and limiting its jurisdiction to matters arising within city does not abolish justice's court in such city or affect its jurisdiction, since Const. art. 11, § 8½, as amended in 1914, providing that in event municipal court is established by city charter there shall be no other inferior court in such city, has no application to such city nor to justice's court provided for such city by Code Civ. Proc. § 103.

Application for writ of habeas corpus to secure the release of Shadow Lovall from custody. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Sydney C. Bennett, of Stockton, for petitioner.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison and Maurice E. Harrison, all of San Francisco, and Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, A. P. Hayne, Guard C. Darrah, Dist. Atty., and Tom H. Louttit, Asst. Dist. Atty., all of Stockton, for respondent sheriff.

CURTIS, J. Petitioner is confined in the county jail of the county of San Joaquin under and by virtue of a commitment issued out of the justice's court of the city of Stockton, in said county. The return to the writ of habeas corpus issued herein shows that petitioner was convicted of a misdemeanor and adjudged to pay a fine of $500, and in default of the payment of such fine that he be imprisoned in the county jail of said county. No question is made as to the regularity of any of the proceedings in the action which resulted in the judgment against petitioner. The sole point made by petitioner for his release from said imprisonment is that there is no such court as the justice's court of the city of Stockton, and for that reason the commitment purporting to have been issued by the justice of the peace of said court is void, and furnishes no legal warrant for his imprisonment. In support of his contention petitioner relies upon the recent case of Robertson v. Langford (Cal. App.) 273 P. 150. In that case it was held that the police court of the city of San Jose, created under the charter of said city, possessed all of the powers of a municipal court, and was therefore in fact a municipal court, in the sense in which the term municipal court was used in section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution of this state. This section of the Constitution provides that upon the creation of a municipal court by a city under the terms of said section of the Constitution "there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court." Accordingly it was held in the case involving the validity of the city justice's court of the city of San Jose that by the adoption of the charter creating a police court having all the powers and jurisdiction possessed by a municipal court, the justice's court in said city had been abolished.

The provision of the charter of the city of San Jose, prescribing the jurisdiction of the police court of said city, which was held in Robertson v. Langford, supra, to be a municipal court, was as follows: "Said police court and police judge shall have all the powers, authority and jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, that are now or may hereafter be conferred by law upon justices of the peace in California, and in addition thereto, said police court and police judge shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all proceedings for the violation of any ordinance of the city of San Jose."

The provisions of the charter of the city of Stockton creating a police court for said city and prescribing its jurisdiction are found in article 21 of said charter. Section 1 of this article provides for the creation of a police court in said city of Stockton. Section 3 of said article was amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 2151), the original charter having been adopted in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 1371), and in its amended form, in so far as it may be necessary for the purposes of this proceeding, reads as follows: "Said police court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or by imprisonment or by both such fine and imprisonment committed within the corporate limits of the city. It shall also have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions for the recovery of any fines, penalties or forfeitures prescribed for the breach of any ordinance of the city, of all actions founded upon any obligation or liability created by any ordinance, and of all prosecutions for any violation of any ordinance. Said police court shall have jurisdiction in all civil cases, concurrently with the justices' courts of all actions and proceedings arising within the corporate limits of the city and which might be tried in such justices' court." The amendment of 1927 does not affect materially any question arising in this proceeding.

[1] It will readily be seen by a comparison of the respective charter provisions of these two cities, vesting jurisdiction in the police courts created by their charters, that there is a marked difference in the jurisdiction conferred upon the police court of the city of San Jose and that conferred upon the police court of the city of Stockton. By the charter of the city of San Jose it is expressly provided that the police court of that city shall have "all powers, authority and jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, that are now or may hereafter be conferred by law upon justices of the peace," while in the charter of the city of Stockton the jurisdiction of the police court of that city is definitely and expressly limited and fixed in both civil and criminal proceedings to matters arising within the corporate limits of the city of Stockton. The difference in the jurisdiction of these two courts is just the difference between the jurisdiction of an ordinary justice's court, and an inferior, or police court, limited in its authority and powers to matters arising within the corporate limits of the municipality wherein it is situated. The criminal jurisdiction of justices' courts over certain public offenses such as petit larceny, assault and battery, breaches of the peace, and other misdemeanors, extends to all such offenses committed within the county in which said courts are established. Pen. Code, § 1425. In civil matters the justices' courts have jurisdiction of many actions arising without the city or township within which they are situated. These are enumerated in section 832 of the Code of Civil Procedure and need not be mentioned in detail. The basis of the decision in Robertson v. Langford, supra, was that by various acts of the Legislature the justices' courts have had conferred upon them jurisdiction covering all matters not vested in courts of record, and that by the charter of the city of San Jose the police court of said city was vested with like jurisdiction. Therefore the court in that case held that said police court was in fact a municipal court, and under the constitutional provision above referred to, the creation and establishment of such a court in the city of San Jose abolishes all courts in said city inferior to the superior court. In the present proceeding, however, we have an entirely different state of facts. The police court of the city of Stockton has not been vested with the jurisdiction possessed by a justice's court, in that its powers are expressly restricted and limited to matters arising within the city. It could not, therefore, under the theory under which the case of Robertson v. Langford was decided, be held to be in any sense such a municipal court as is provided for by section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution.

There are cases, both in this state and in other jurisdictions, which, in effect, hold that a police court or a recorder's court is a municipal court. Uridias v. Morrill, 22 Cal. 474; Mathie v. McIntosh, 40 Wis. 120; In re Baxter, 3 Cal. App. 716, 86 P. 998. Generally speaking, this may be true, but we think when we come to examine section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution of this state, by the terms of which cities of the state are given the power to establish either a police or a municipal court, that these cases are not applicable. Prior to 1914, by this section of the Constitution, cities were given power in their charters to establish police courts only. By the amendment thereto, adopted in 1914, the power of cities in respect to the establishment of inferior courts was enlarged, and they were given authority to establish municipal courts as well as police courts. That portion of said section with which we are now concerned, after its amendment in 1914, and now, reads as follows:

"Sec. 8½. It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section eight of this article, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this Constitution, and by the laws of the state as follows:

"1. For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of police courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the qualifications and compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attachés; and for the establishment, constitution, regulation, government and jurisdiction of municipal courts and judges thereof, with such civil, criminal and magisterial jurisdiction as by law may be conferred upon inferior courts and judges thereof; and for the manner in which, the times at which and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the qualifications and compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attachés; provided, such municipal courts shall never be deprived of the jurisdiction given inferior courts created by general law.

"In any city or any city and county, when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court; and pending actions, trials, and all pending business of inferior courts within the territory of such city or city and county, upon the establishment of any such municipal court, shall be and become pending in such municipal court, and all records of such inferior courts shall thereupon be and become the records of such municipal court."

[2] It will thus be seen that this section of the Constitution, after its amendment in 1914, expressly provides for the establishment of both a police court and a municipal court. It is inconceivable that the framers of the amendment of 1914, whereby municipal courts were for the first time expressly provided for, intended that the court for which they were then providing was nothing more nor less than a police court. If a police court is the same thing as a municipal court, then the amendment of 1914 to said section 8½ was entirely unnecessary. We think the conclusion is inevitable that by the adoption of the amendment of 1914 it was the intention to provide for the establishment of two distinct classes of courts in the cities of the state, one a police court and the other a municipal court.

It is further apparent from the provisions of said section that the municipal court therein mentioned must be vested "with such civil, criminal and magisterial jurisdiction as by law may be conferred upon inferior courts and judges thereof," and that "such municipal courts shall never be deprived of the jurisdiction given inferior courts created by general law." No such requirement as the above is made concerning police courts. There is nothing in this section of the Constitution, nor in any other provision of the law, to our knowledge, which would prevent the establishment of a police court with jurisdiction limited solely to such proceedings, civil and criminal, as might arise under municipal ordinances of the city in which said police court may be situated. For these reasons, as well as others that might be mentioned, we conclude that the authorities above cited have no application to the police and municipal courts provided for in said section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution. It is also perfectly clear from the terms of said section that the police court established by the charter of the city of Stockton is not a municipal court as that court is provided for in said section. We have above referred to the limited scope of its jurisdiction. It is not vested "with such civil, criminal and magisterial jurisdiction as by law may be conferred upon inferior courts." On the other hand, it is deprived of much of the jurisdiction given inferior courts created by general law, as we have shown in the first part of this opinion. It cannot in any sense be considered or held to be a municipal court.

[3] The provisions of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution declaring, in the event a municipal court is established in any city by its charter, that there shall be no other inferior court in said city has therefore no application to the city of Stockton nor to the justice's court provided for such city by section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The justice's court in said city has not been abolished, or in any manner affected by the adoption by said city of its charter, nor by the amendment thereof enacted in 1927. It follows therefore that the commitment issued out of said court under which petitioner is now held as a prisoner in the county jail of the county of San Joaquin is legal and valid and that petitioner is not unlawfully restrained of his liberty. This conclusion renders it unnecessary for us to consider other arguments made by the respondent in answer to petitioner's contention that the justice's court of said city has no legal existence. The writ is discharged.

The petitioner is remanded to the custody of the sheriff of said county of San Joaquin.

REGALIA v. MARIANI. ★

MARIANI v. REGALIA.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 13, 1929.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 3, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨22(2)—Agreement to execute lease of restaurant sold, containing no date when lease was to begin, held not construable as lease.

Written agreement for sale of restaurant business and for lease of premises, reciting receipt of deposit on purchase price of restaurant, that sale was to be consummated by certain date but that vendor could rescind by refunding deposit, and that certain rental was to be paid on first of each month, with option on part of vendee to renew lease, but not providing date for commencement, held not construable as lease in present but was agreement to execute lease in future.

2. Sales ⇨126(1)—Lapse of month between restaurant vendor's refusal to execute lease as agreed and vendee's election to rescind held not unreasonable.

Lapse of about one month between refusal of vendor of restaurant business to execute lease of building as agreed in written agreement for sale of business and vendee's election to rescind agreement held not an unreasonable time.

3. Evidence ⇨397(1)—Excluding testimony which could only tend to vary terms of unambiguous written agreement held not error.

Where testimony excluded could only tend to vary terms of written agreement for sale of restaurant and to execute lease, terms of which were in no way uncertain, there was no error in not permitting cross-examination thereon.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Consolidated actions by Fillipio Regalia against Tony Mariani, and by Tony Mariani against Fillipio Regalia. Judgment adverse to Tony Mariani, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph J. McShane and J. W. Flynn, both of San Francisco (David K. Watkins, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Lelia R. Leep and Sumner Hurd, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The above two actions, wherein Fillipio Regalia is plaintiff and respondent and Tony Mariani is defendant and appellant in one, and in the other Tony Mariani is plaintiff and appellant and Fillipio Regalia is defendant and respondent, were consolidated in the lower court and tried together and a single judgment entered; the court adjudging that Fillipio Regalia have and recover from Tony Mariani the sum of $1,500, together with interest and costs, and that a contract entered into between the parties be rescinded, canceled, and delivered up to Fillipio Regalia, and that Tony Mariani have and recover from Fillipio Regalia $300 as rent for the use of certain premises. The appellant has appealed from that part of the judgment wherein the court adjudged that Fillipio Regalia have rescission of the agreement of purchase and sale, the return to him of $1,500, that Tony Mariani has not sustained damages, and that Fillipio Regalia is entitled to costs.

Respondent Regalia brought an action against appellant Mariani asking for the rescission of an agreement of purchase and sale of a certain restaurant business and the personal property used as equipment therein and the return of $1,500, the purchase price paid. Some three months after this action was filed, appellant Mariani commenced an action against respondent Regalia in unlawful detainer, claiming respondent was in default in the payment of rent.

Respondent paid to appellant, who was the owner of the restaurant in question and the building in which it was being conducted, located at 2042-2044 Seventeenth street in the city of San Francisco, the sum of $1,500 as the consideration of the purchase price of the restaurant business, the personal property used in and about such premises and business, and an agreement to lease to him the premises. Prior to filing the action for rescission, respondent duly served a notice of election to rescind the agreement, concerning the validity of which no point is made.

The agreement, which was signed by respondent and appellant, is as follows: "May 28, 1927. Received of Fillipio Regalia the sum of one hundred ($100.00) dollars as deposit on purchase of restaurant located at No. 2042 and 2044 Seventeenth Street, total purchase price fifteen hundred ($1500.00) dollars. Vendor is Mr. Tony Mariani. It is understood sale is to be consummated by June 4, 1927, but vendor, Tony Mariani, may rescind this contract on or before that date by refunding the said deposit of one hundred ($100.00) dollars. Rent of seventy-five ($75.00) dollars per month is to be paid on the first of each and every month and if not said contract is to be considered terminated and said purchase price of fifteen ($1500.00) hundred dollars is to be retained by vendor, Tony Mariani, and said vendee Fillipio Regalia is to remove from said premises. Sale includes all furniture, fixtures, dishes, cooking utensils, etc. A lease of three (3) years at seventy-five ($75.00) dollars per month is to be entered into by said vendor and said vendee with option on part of said vendee to renew said lease for an additional two years. If said vendor refuses to sell by said June 4, 1927, he may not sell to any other party, except he give to said vendee an additional two hundred ($200.00) dollars. Vendor may retain said restaurant for himself, however."

At the time of the execution of the receipt or agreement respondent paid to appellant $100 as evidence of good faith, and upon taking possession on June 4, 1927—appellant not having elected to rescind as permitted by the agreement—paid to appellant the further sum of $1,400, the balance of the purchase price.

According to the terms of the agreement, a lease for a term of three years at $75 per month rent was to be given by appellant to respondent, with the option on the part of respondent to have the lease renewed for an additional term of two years. On June 4, 1927, respondent was tendered an unsigned lease restricting the use of the premises to residential purposes, thereby denying respondent the right to conduct in the premises the restaurant business he had purchased from appellant and for which he desired the premises without securing the written consent of appellant, and which omitted the option of an additional two-years' term, and demand was made upon respondent for the additional sum of $100 as a condition precedent to the signing of the lease by appellant, as security for the preservation of the property. A subsequent lease was prepared from data furnished by respondent's attorney. This appellant refused to sign, according to the testimony of respondent's attorney, stating that "he owned the property and wouldn't sign a lease except on his old terms and he would not sign a lease at all unless the $300 was put up on deposit." The witness also testified: "Mr. McShane (appellant's counsel) told me before that that there would have to be a deposit for this lease."

The following points are urged by appellant: (1) That the evidence does not sustain the findings; (2) the findings do not support nor justify the judgment; (3) the judgment is against law; (4) errors of the court in the admission and rejection of evidence.

The first three assignments may be considered together. The court found all the allegations of respondent's complaint to be true; that respondent and appellant entered into an agreement on May 28, 1927, whereby respondent agreed to purchase from appellant certain personal property located at 2042-2044 Seventeenth street in the city and county of San Francisco for the purpose of conducting a restaurant, and as a material part of the purchase and sale, appellant agreed to deliver to respondent a written lease of the premises for a period of three years, with the privilege of renewal thereof for a further length of time, at a monthly rental of $75 a month; that the purchase price of such restaurant business, including furniture, fixtures, dishes, cooking utensils, etc., and leasehold interest in the premises, was the sum of $1,500, all of which sum was fully paid; that appellant delivered to respondent the restaurant business, furniture, fixtures, cooking utensils, dishes, etc., but that appellant failed and refused to deliver to respondent a lease of said premises as agreed, although repeated demands were made on appellant therefor by respondent; that such lease is of great value to respondent as security for his future right to occupy the premises for the purposes for which they were intended; that respondent has fully performed all the covenants and conditions of the agreement on his part and that although formal demand and notice of election to rescind the contract by reason of the failure of the consideration to respondent has been made, as also demand for the return of the $1,500 paid, appellant has failed and refused to pay respondent the sum of $1,500 or any part thereof; that respondent is entitled to and has duly shown cause why the agreement of September 28, 1927, should be and the same is rescinded. The conclusions of law follow these findings, which find support in the evidence, and adjudge that respondent is entitled to a rescission of the agreement of purchase and sale and that respondent is entitled to the return of the $1,500 paid by him on account of the agreement.

[1] The main point urged by appellant is that if the agreement to give the lease is a valid one, the agreement is equivalent to a lease where the tenant goes into possession thereunder with the consent of the lessor, even though a formal lease was promised and refused, and has cited authority in support of his position, holding: "The entry under the written contract for a lease for a stated term and at a stated rent, and the payment and receipt of the rent, constituted a valid lease between the parties for the term, and at the rental specified." Cheney v. Newberry, 67 Cal. 125, 7 P. 444. We do not question this principle, but merely its application to the question here presented. While it is true that respondent paid the purchase price and went into possession under the agreement, certain other essentials are necessary to make an agreement to lease equivalent to a written lease. In Levin v. Saroff, 54 Cal. App. 285, 201 P. 961, 963, cited by appellant, while the court does say, "The mere fact that a written lease was in contemplation does not relieve either of the contracting parties from the responsibility of a contract which was already expressed in writing," and that "to create a valid lease, but few points of mutual agreement are necessary: First, there must be a definite agreement as to the extent and boundary of the property leased; second, a definite and agreed term; and, third, a definite and agreed price of rental, and the time and manner of payment," the court also says, "Whether an instrument is a lease in present or an agreement to execute a lease in future is largely a question of the intention of the parties." In the present case the agreement is primarily a receipt for $100 paid on purchase price of the restaurant equipment, which sale was to be consummated on June 4th. Should the vendor not go on with the sale by June 4th, he was to return to the prospective vendee the $100; the receipt or agreement providing: "If said vendor refuses to sell by said June 4, 1927, he may not sell to any other party, except he give to said vendee an additional two hundred ($200.00) dollars."

The agreement in the Levin Case was a formal agreement setting forth all of the terms and conditions which were to go into the lease, and all of such terms and conditions were intended by the parties to be incorporated in the lease, while here it is evident that the clause in the receipt that "a lease of three (3) years at seventy-five ($75.00) dollars per month is to be entered into by said vendor and said vendee with the option on the part of said vendee to renew said lease for an additional two years" was intended to be an agreement to make a lease in the future and was not intended as a lease. That being so, the receipt or agreement should not be construed as a lease, as "an agreement to execute a lease in future is largely a question of the intention of the parties." Levin v. Saroff, supra. Furthermore, the receipt or agreement does not meet the requirements stated in Levin v. Saroff, supra, in that there is no date agreed upon when the three-year term is to begin. It is true the sale of the personal property was to take place by June 4th, in the event appellant should not conclude that he did not care to go on with the transaction, in which event the initial payment was to be returned, but there is no stipulation at what date the three-year lease was to begin.

There is no foundation for appellant's contention that both parties construed the agreement to be that appellant should pay the $300 demanded as security. Respondent merely said that he would think it over and never so agreed, and the oral contract, if made, was never executed. A contract in writing may only be altered by another contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement. Civ. Code, § 1698.

[2] There is no merit in the contention that respondent did not rescind promptly. The matter of executing the lease was under discussion between counsel for the respective parties, and two leases were drawn up which appellant refused to sign, and finally, according to the testimony of respondent's counsel, either in the latter part of August or the first part of September appellant finally refused to sign the lease except on the old terms and then not until the $300 was put up or deposited, and on September 28th the notice of election to rescind was served on appellant, and on September 30th the action was filed. It appears that about one month's time elapsed between appellant's refusal and respondent's election to rescind. This was not an unreasonable time.

[3] This disposes of the questions presented by appellant's first three assignments. As to the fourth—"errors of the court in the admission and rejection of evidence"—under which appellant contends that it was error not to permit appellant to cross-examine respondent's counsel as to the understanding of giving security, it may be said that such testimony was properly excluded, as such examination could only elicit testimony tending to vary the terms of the written instrument, the terms of which were in no way uncertain.

The judgment is affirmed.

BOOTH v. BOOTH. (Civ. 6662.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 16, 1929.

1. Divorce ⇨204—Judgment for permanent maintenance held permissible, though there were no findings entitling wife to divorce (Civ. Code, § 136).

Under Civ. Code, § 136, judgment for permanent maintenance held permissible, though there was no finding that wife suffered grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering, and thus judgment of divorce could not have been sustained.

2. Divorce ⇨237—Court properly exercised discretionary power to require husband to provide permanent maintenance for wife in view of circumstances showing unhappy marital relation of parties (Civ. Code, § 136).

Where evidence showed that husband refused to provide wife with reasonable and suitable home and that he would not resume relation of husband and wife, and other circumstances showing unpleasant and unhappy marital relation of parties, court was warranted in exercising its discretionary power under Civ. Code, § 136, to require husband to provide for wife a permanent maintenance.

3. Divorce ⇨240(5)—Where husband earned $300 per month and wife was unable to work, award of $125 monthly for separate maintenance held not excessive.

Where husband was earning $300 per month and wife was ill and under constant care of physician and was unable to do any work, allowance of $125 per month to wife for separate maintenance held not excessive.

4. Divorce ⇨245(1)—Court awarding permanent separate maintenance to wife retains jurisdiction to alter or revoke order for maintenance when circumstances require (Civ. Code, § 136, and § 137 as amended by St. 1927, p. 441).

Under Civ. Code, § 136, and section 137 as amended by St. 1927, p. 441, court awarding permanent separate maintenance to wife retains jurisdiction to vary, alter, or revoke order for maintenance when upon proper showing it deems exigencies of case or circumstances of parties require it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action for divorce by Charles Stuart Booth against Lola Warrington Booth. From a judgment denying a divorce and awarding separate maintenance, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Leon J. Dugan, Soren X. Christensen, and J. C. Wood, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

William E. Harvent, of Oakland, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff Charles Stuart Booth, and defendant, Lola Warrington Booth, are husband and wife. Plaintiff commenced this action for divorce. The defendant asked for separate maintenance. The court denied the divorce and granted the defendant separate maintenance in the sum of $125 per month. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment. He does not complain of the judgment in so far as it denies him a divorce, but only that portion thereof granting the defendant separate maintenance.

[1] The record discloses the following facts: The complaint alleges a cause of action on the ground of extreme cruelty. The answer denies the allegations of cruelty, and by a cross-complaint the defendant also alleges extreme cruelty and asks for separate maintenance only. The answer to the cross-complaint denies the alleged cruelty, and on the issues thus framed the cause was tried by the court, findings of facts and conclusions of law made and filed, and the judgment complained of was entered. The evidence discloses that the parties are living separate and apart, and the conclusion is amply justified from both the evidence and the findings that such separation was without the fault of the defendant. Upon sufficient evidence the court found that many of the acts of cruelty set forth in the cross-complaint were true, and although there is evidence in the record that said acts caused respondent a great deal of worry and were responsible for her nervous condition and broken health, there is no finding of fact that such acts of cruelty occasioned the cross-complainant either grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering. It is claimed by appellant that in the absence of such a finding the record is insufficient to sustain a judgment for divorce and that permanent maintenance can only be granted in those cases where the wife is entitled to a divorce, or where the facts show willful desertion or willful failure to provide for the wife under section 137 of the Civil Code as amended by

St. 1927, p. 441. In support of this claim he cites section 137, Civil Code, as amended, which, so far as material to this decision, is as follows: "When the husband or wife willfully deserts the wife or husband, as the case may be, or when the husband or wife has any cause of action for divorce as provided in section 92 of this code, he or she may, without applying for divorce, maintain in the superior court an action against her or him for permanent support and maintenance of himself or herself or of himself and children, or of herself and children. When the husband willfully fails to provide for the wife, she may, without applying for divorce, maintain in the superior court an action against him for permanent support and maintenance of herself or of herself and children." It is argued by appellant that as respondent's cause of action is not based upon willful desertion or willful failure to provide, as authorized by the section of the code last cited, she must allege and prove and the court must find in her favor a complete cause of action for divorce as provided in section 92 of the Civil Code. It may be conceded that the cross-complaint is not predicated upon willful desertion or willful failure to provide under section 137 of the Civil Code as amended, but that a cause of action on the ground of extreme cruelty under subdivision 2, section 92, of the Civil Code is therein stated, and the court having failed to find that the acts of cruelty which were found to be true inflicted either grievous physical injury or grievous mental suffering upon respondent, the findings are insufficient to sustain a judgment of divorce. Nelson v. Nelson, 18 Cal. App. 602, 123 P. 1099; Smith v. Smith, 124 Cal. 651, 57 P. 573; Franklin v. Franklin, 140 Cal. 607, 74 P. 155. But appellant has failed to give any consideration to section 136, Civil Code, which provides: "Though judgment of divorce is denied, the court may, in an action for divorce, provide for the maintenance by the husband, of the wife and children of the marriage, or any of them." Construing the last-cited section, the court in Hagle v. Hagle, 68 Cal. 588, 9 P. 842, held that even though the husband has not been guilty of anything amounting to legal cruelty, which was the ground for divorce in that action, his conduct was such that it was impossible for the parties to live happily together and the court was justified in granting the wife separate maintenance. In Broad v. Broad, 35 Cal. App. 646, 170 P. 658, each of the parties sought a divorce from the other on the ground of extreme cruelty, but a divorce was denied either party and separate maintenance granted the wife. The sole question there presented was whether the court, where it was found that the wife was not entitled to a divorce, and was living apart from her husband, could make an award of separate maintenance under section 136, Civil Code. The court there said: "In this state section 137, of the Civil Code gives to the wife the right to maintenance where she has a cause for divorce but waives it; and section 136—which has stood alone since its passage—when construed in relation to section 137 and other cognate sections, seems clearly to contemplate relief in cases where the wife may not be entitled to a decree of divorce. To give the section the construction contended for by the appellant would be to treat it as a useless enactment, adding nothing to the body of our law. Such an interpretation will not be given to an enactment of the legislature if it can be reasonably avoided." Jacobs v. Jacobs, 68 Cal. App. 725, 230 P. 209, 210, is a case similar to Broad v. Broad, supra, and it is there said: "We have not been cited to any case in this state holding that the trial court is without jurisdiction to award alimony to an unoffending wife where she has been unable to establish grounds for divorce." Although in the case at bar, in the absence of a finding that the cross-complainant suffered either grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering, a judgment of divorce could not be sustained, yet under the foregoing authorities, a judgment for permanent maintenance is permissible.

[2] The appellant also claims that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of extreme cruelty or the judgment based thereon because the acts alleged and proven are trivial in their character and were not such as would destroy the object of matrimony. Upon sufficient evidence the court found that in the month of May, 1924, the respondent asked appellant to provide them a reasonable and suitable home, but that he refused and ever since said time has refused to do so, and he also told her "that she could stay put, that he liked the simple life," and "to forget about ever going back with him to live as husband and wife." At another time he told her "that he did not want to resume the relation of husband and wife and that he had thought the matter over and had decided that they should live apart." In January, 1925, the parties met in San Francisco, and plaintiff told his wife that he did not have any intention of living with her again as man and wife and to just forget it. The court also found on sufficient evidence that in November, 1924, appellant left respondent in Oakland, under pretext of going on a trip to Los Angeles, and the respondent afterwards learned that he had gone to San Francisco and remained there for two days on a wild party. There are other circumstances of a similar character shown by the evidence and found by the court to be true, but the foregoing illustrates the attitude of appellant toward respondent, and the unpleasant and unhappy marital relation of the parties. Under such circumstances the court was warranted in exercising its discretionary power under the provisions of section 136 of the Civil Code and to require the husband to provide for his wife a permanent maintenance.

[3, 4] There is one other claim advanced by appellant that requires consideration. He claims that the award of $125 per month is excessive. The evidence shows that the appellant is earning $300 per month. Also that the respondent is ill and under the constant care of a physician and because of her ailment, valvular disease of the heart, she is unable to do any work whatever. Further her necessary expenditures for medicine and medical aid amount to from $12.50 to $30 per month and her board and laundry cost $50 per month. Add to these items the cost of clothing and necessary incidental expenses, we cannot say that the sum allowed is excessive. Furthermore, we are of the opinion that construing section 136 and section 137 (as amended) of the Civil Code together, the court retains its jurisdiction to vary, alter, or revoke such order for maintenance when, upon a proper showing, it deems the exigencies of the case, or the circumstances of the parties, require it.

The judgment is affirmed.

FEAGINS v. BURTON. (Civ. 5350.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 13, 1929.

1. Exchange of property ⇨ 13(1)—Where defendant agreed to allow $500 credit on automobile plaintiff might select, but refused to deliver automobile selected, plaintiff could sue on indebtedness.

Where defendant, in exchange transaction, allowed plaintiff credit of $500 on any used automobile plaintiff might select from defendant's stock within six months, and plaintiff selected an automobile, but defendant offered to deliver automobile only if plaintiff paid $40 because of difference on trade, and thus failed to carry out his obligation under contract, plaintiff was under no obligation to make another choice, but could sue on money obligation.

2. Exchange of property ⇨ 13(1)—Defendant's conditional offer to deliver automobile plaintiff selected was refusal to perform, authorizing immediate suit without waiting for expiration of contract (Civ. Code, § 1494).

Where defendant in exchange transaction agreed to allow plaintiff $500 credit on any used automobile plaintiff might select from defendant's stock within six months, and plaintiff selected automobile, but defendant refused to deliver it, unless plaintiff paid $40 because of another transaction, defendant's conditional offer was a refusal to perform, under Civ. Code, § 1494, providing that offer of performance must be free from conditions justifying an immediate suit by plaintiff without waiting for the expiration of the six-month period.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin Warmer, Judge.

Action by N. B. Feagins against H. N. Burton. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Pollock & Mitchell, of Ontario, for appellant.

Arthur O. Dillon and E. H. Jolliffe, both of Ontario, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. On July 30, 1924, appellant and respondent entered into a written agreement whereby respondent, who owned an equity in a certain ranch in Riverside county, Cal., agreed to deed his equity therein, together with certain personal property located on the ranch, to appellant, who in turn agreed to deliver to respondent a certain Willys-Knight automobile, and also to deliver to respondent an agreement of credit, allowing him a credit of $500 on any used car respondent might desire to choose from appellant's stock of used cars within six months from the date of the contract. The evidence established the following facts: That respondent performed every act required of him to be performed under the terms of the contract, and that appellant delivered to respondent the Willys-Knight automobile, but failed to deliver the credit memorandum above referred to. These further facts were brought out by the evidence: That during the six-month period respondent made several trips to appellant's showroom, and looked at the cars there on display; that on different occasions he selected two Ford automobiles from among appellant's stock, but did not purchase them, because appellant informed him they had already been sold; that on another occasion, some time in January, 1925, respondent selected a Gardner automobile from appellant's stock; that appellant told him the price of this car was $345, but that respondent would have to pay him an additional $40 to make up for a horse that appellant claimed had not been delivered to him under the terms of the contract; that respondent refused to pay the $40, and appellant refused to deliver the automobile to respondent. The evidence further showed that during the six-month period appellant paid certain creditors of respondent sums of money amounting to $117.29, and that the parties agreed that this sum should be deducted from the $500 credit owing to respondent, which left a balance of $382.71. On January 26, 1925, respondent brought suit for the sum of $382.71, or, in lieu thereof, an automobile whose market value was reasonably worth the sum of $382.71. The court rendered judgment for this sum, together with interest and costs, from which judgment appellant takes this appeal.

[1] Appellant contends that "In the case at bar there was no promise to pay any sum of money; there was no promise to pay any sum of money in merchandise," and on this basis he contends the judgment for the direct payment of money was erroneous. This case presents the question: Did the contract involved here create such an indebtedness owing from appellant to respondent that upon appellant's failure to pay in specific property, respondent was entitled to sue on a money obligation?

Looking at the contract in its entirety (which contract appellant admitted he composed), it discloses the fact that respondent's consideration for deeding the ranch to appellant was the Willys-Knight automobile, and an additional $500 as a credit to respondent on another automobile that respondent "may desire to choose from Mr. Burton's stock within the next six months." The facts above recited show that in at least three instances respondent picked out automobiles from appellant's stock which were satisfactory to respondent, and that his failure to purchase them was through no fault of his. Under the terms of the contract, appellant's obligation to sell respondent any automobile he might desire to choose was unconditional, and, when appellant sought to add to the price of the Gardner automobile, or in effect charge respondent more for the car than he would have charged another customer, he failed to carry out his obligation under the contract, and respondent was under no obligation to make another choice, but could sue on the indebtedness, which he subsequently did.

The case of Irvine v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 37 Cal. App. 61, 173 P. 487, answers the above question. The facts were as follows: Under a contract with defendant, plaintiff granted a right of way over his land for the erection of poles, etc., to be used in the telegraph company's business, the consideration to be certain telegraph privileges amounting to $1,500. Plaintiff performed all of the obligations on his part to be performed, but defendant granted him telegraph privileges only in the sum of $500.26. The defendant contended that, inasmuch as the federal and state law enacted since the execution of the contract prohibited it from issuing franks for any consideration, and that no consideration other than franks could be required of defendant under the terms of the contract, therefore it was relieved of further performance. The court said: "This position is untenable under the construction of the contract compelled by the weight of authority, namely, that by its terms the contract in question is in effect in the alternative * * * the contract provides that the consideration for the rights granted by said agreement is 'telegraph privileges * * * to the amount of $1,500, which said amount shall be taken in the use of telegraph privileges at the usual and ordinary rates.' Upon the failure of the obligor to deliver telegraph franks when needed and requested the contract, in our opinion, became one to pay the sum of money designated as the consideration for the privileges granted by the contract"—citing Marshall v. Ferguson, 23 Cal. 69; Beckwith v. Sheldon, 168 Cal. 742, 145 P. 97, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 963. See, also, Gillin v. Hopkins, 28 Cal. App. 579, 153 P. 724; and Beal v. United Properties Co., 46 Cal. App. 287, 189 P. 346.

[2] Appellant also contends that the action was brought prematurely, in view of the fact that the complaint was filed on January 26, 1925, and six months from the date of the contract did not expire until January 30, 1925. The evidence established the fact that the conversation between the parties with regard to the Gardner automobile occurred in January, 1925, but the exact day of the month is not made apparent by the record. The date is immaterial, however, if there was a refusal on the part of appellant to deliver "any automobile plaintiff might desire to choose from appellant's stock," during the six months. California Jurisprudence, vol. 6, § 242, in its chapter on Contracts, states the rule as follows: "A person is forbidden, it is true, to make his offer dependent upon any conditions which the other party is not bound, on his part, to perform, and it has been declared, if one who is bound to a contract annexes an unwarranted condition to his offer of performance, this is, in effect, a refusal to perform"—citing Woody v. Bennett, 88 Cal. 241, 26 P. 117. Section 1494 of the Civil Code is as follows: "An offer of performance must be free from any conditions which the creditor is not bound, on his part, to perform." The case of Woody v. Bennett, supra, involved the sale of a horse with right of exchange, in the event the horse was not able to overcome a certain physical defect which defendants guaranteed could be overcome with proper applications. Plaintiffs found the defect to be hereditary, and demanded the exchange, but defendants refused to exchange the horse, unless plaintiffs agreed to pay for a certain other horse which defendants claimed they had previously agreed to purchase. (The plaintiffs had not in fact agreed to make this latter purchase.) The court held that the conditional offer of defendants was equivalent to a refusal to exchange, and justified plaintiffs in suing. The respondent's testimony with regard to the Gardner car was that he "picked out" a Gardner car which he saw sitting out in the yard; that Mr. Burton offered it to him for $345 and asked him for $40 because of some difference on the ranch trade about a horse, that he wouldn't pay the $40 and that he did not get the car. On cross-examination the appellant testified: "I was trying to have Mr. Feagins settle for the horse which I have not yet found; he was to put up forty dollars ($40.00) to be delivered to me if the horse wasn't found." Under the authorities above cited, it is clear that appellant's conditional offer was a refusal to perform.

The other contentions are in fact covered by the discussion heretofore, and need not be discussed further in view of the conclusion reached.

Judgment affirmed.

SWITHENBANK v. WOOD et al. (Civ. 3741.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 5, 1929.

Landlord and tenant §90(1)—Tenant holding over after lease expired and landlord's refusal to renew or accept rent did not "hold by landlord's permission," creating presumption of acquiescence in renewal of lease (Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2).

Where landlord had expressly refused to renew lease or to accept rent tendered at expiration of term thereof to be applied on new term, tenant was not as a matter of law holding over "by permission of landlord" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2, so as to create presumption of acquiescence in renewal of lease arising from possession of tenant and receipt of rent by landlord after expiration of lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; T. H. Selvage, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 278 P. 496.

H. C. Nelson, of Eureka, for appellants.

A. G. Bradford, of Eureka, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appellants have filed a petition for a rehearing. Referring to the finding quoted in the opinion, to the effect that as a part of the transaction relating to the exchange of bills of sale by the parties the "plaintiff stated to said defendant Wood that said sheep would not be segregated or separated until a sale or partition of said ranch," petitioners say: "In view of the foregoing finding it is evident that the refusal on the part of plaintiff to execute a new lease upon or just prior to the expiration of the old lease did not take the case out of the requirements laid down in subdivision 2, section 1161, of the Code of Civil Procedure." The finding referred to is of a mere evidentiary fact, not responsive to any issue in the case. It does not appear that the defendants consented to or that the parties agreed upon such postponement of the segregation and separation of the sheep until a sale or partition of the ranch. It was within the exclusive province of the trial court to determine whether such evidentiary fact, together with the presumption relied upon by the defendants, or the evidence to the contrary, was of the greater weight.

Petitioners contend that the evidence is insufficient to overcome such presumption. In a case originating prior to the enactment of section 1945 of the Civil Code, relating to the presumption arising from the possession of the tenant and the receipt of rent by the lessor after the expiration of the term of a lease, the parties to a lease for years had a conversation about the future occupation of the premises, after the end of the term, but no other lease was executed. The tenant continued in possession, paying the same rent as before. He testified that he "refused to make a new lease." The court instructed the jury that, if they found the facts as stated herein, the lessee became a tenant from year to year. In reversing the judgment the Supreme Court said: "We think that the conversation of the parties, had after the expiration of the lease for years, and their disagreement as to the term during which the defendant was thereafter to remain, should have gone to the jury for the purpose of ascertaining how or for what term the tenant was thereafter to hold. * * * If, as here, the evidence offered on the part of the defendant went to show that he had expressly refused to accept a term of one year, that fact would tend to overthrow and destroy the mere presumption drawn from the subsequent payment of rent—that he was to continue to hold thereafter for the space of one year." Skaggs v. Elkus, 45 Cal. 154, 160; Underhill on Landlord and Tenant, § 98; 35 C. J. 1031.

In construing a statute relating to leases of agricultural lands, similar to the provisions of section 1161 upon which appellants rely, it is said: "The meaning of that article is simply this: That, if both parties to the lease remain silent and inactive for the space of one month after the expiration of the lease, they shall both be presumed to have acquiesced in, and tacitly consented to, a renewal of the lease for another year. It has no application whatever when either party has clearly announced his intention not to renew the lease on the same terms or for a full year, for the purpose of the law is not to force a contract upon parties unwilling to contract, but merely to establish a rule of evidence, or presumption, as to their intention in the premises." Ashton Realty Co. v. Prowell, 165 La. 328, 115 So. 579, 581.

After a landlord has expressly refused to renew a lease and has refused to accept rent tendered at the expiration of the term thereof to be applied on a new term, it certainly cannot be held, as a matter of law, that the tenant is thereafter, in the language of section 1161, "holding by permission of the landlord."

Rehearing denied.

BERGHAUSER v. GOLDEN STATE ORCHARDS (Moore, Intervener). ★
(Civ. 3743.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 11, 1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 3, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨907(3)—Where appeal is presented on judgment roll alone, finding of trial court must be taken as supported.

Finding of trial court must be taken as supported, where case is presented on appeal on judgment roll alone.

2. Parties ⇨40(5)—In action on notes wherein plaintiff attached moneys and credits due defendant in hands of third person, one claiming such credits under assignment from defendant could intervene (Code Civ. Proc. § 387).

In action on notes in which plaintiff sought to attach moneys and credits due defendant in possession of third party, one claiming such moneys and credits under assignment from defendant had right to intervene to assert claim to property attached under Code Civ. Proc. § 387, though claimant had no interest in notes sued on.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Action by J. H. Berghauser against the Golden State Orchards, in which a writ of attachment was issued, and Caroline Moore intervened. From a judgment for intervenor, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Williamson, of San Francisco, and R. M. Rankin, of Williams, for appellant.

Ware & Ware, of Chica, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. [1] This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover judgment against the defendant, Golden State Orchards, a corporation, upon two promissory notes. Upon the filing of the complaint a writ of attachment was issued, by virtue of which the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco was commanded to attach all moneys and credits due to the defendant, owing from and in the possession of the California Packing Corporation. The defendant Golden State Orchards, a corporation, had sold and delivered to the California Packing Corporation a large quantity of dried prunes, etc., and at the time of the levy of the attachment the California Packing Corporation had not paid the amount of the purchase price of said dried fruit. The record further shows that, after the sale of said prunes and other fruits by the defendant to the California Packing Corporation, and before the beginning of this action and the service of the writ of attachment herein referred to, the defendant had sold and transferred to the intervenor its claim against the California Packing Corporation for the moneys due and unpaid on account of the purchase price of said fruit. After the beginning of the action by the plaintiff and the issuance and service of the writ of attachment as just stated, the intervenor, Caroline Moore, sought and obtained from the court permission to intervene and set up her claim and right to the money and credits in the possession of the said California Packing Corporation. The court found in favor of the intervenor to the extent of her claim, to wit, that said intervenor was the owner of all and singular the amount of money owing by the said California Packing Corporation on account of its purchase of dried fruits from the defendant Golden State Orchards Corporation, and that the intervenor was entitled to have paid to her the whole amount of said moneys. The plaintiff demurred to the complaint in intervention, and, upon his demurrer being overruled, filed an answer to the complaint in intervention, and raised the question that the assignment had been made to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors. The court found against this contention, and, as the cause is here upon the judgment roll alone, the finding must be taken as supported.

[2] Upon this appeal, the appellant contends that, under the provisions of section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Caroline Moore had no legal right to intervene, and that the court erred in permitting her so to do. In support of this contention, a number of cases bearing upon the right of intervention are cited to the point that the intervenor must have some interest in that which is involved in the litigation, and, as the suit is upon two promissory notes, the promissory notes only are involved in this action. We do not need to review the cases cited, for the simple reason that they are not really in point in this controversy. The question presented for us to decide upon this appeal may be stated as follows: Has the claimant to property which has been attached in an action between other parties to recover upon an indebtedness in which such claimant has no interest a right to intervene in defense of his own claim of ownership to the property attached? Or, to state the question as presented by the record in this case—the plaintiff has sued upon two promissory notes executed by the defendant, and has attached moneys and credits in the possession of a third person, claimed by the intervener. Under such circumstances, is intervention permissible, and can the alleged owner of such credits be permitted to come in and set up such ownership? That a claimant to property attached under such circumstances has a right to intervention is no longer an open question in this state. Carter v. Garetson, 56 Cal. App. 241, 204 P. 1090; Bonfiglio v. Bonfiglio, 203 Cal. 409, 264 P. 747; Dennis v. Kolm, 131 Cal. 91, 63 P. 141. It would serve no useful purpose to incumber the record with a review of the cases just cited. We may, however, state that the question raised upon this appeal as to whether an intervention lies under the circumstances involved herein is fully covered and completely answered in the case of Carter v. Garetson, supra. The opinion in that case cites a number of authorities from other states supporting the same rule. The cases just cited being conclusive of the question raised upon this appeal, it follows that the judgment of the trial court should be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

ZIMMERMAN v. CONTINENTAL LIFE INS. CO. (Civ. 6626.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 5, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 3, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Pleading ⇨403(3)—Insurer's allegations that neither plaintiff nor insured had performed conditions of accident policy cured defect in complaint not alleging performance of conditions.

In action on accident insurance policy, defect in complaint not alleging in one of counts that insured and plaintiff had each performed all conditions of policy, held cured, where insurer by its answer alleged that neither plaintiff nor insured had performed terms and conditions of policy, and thus treated issue as properly made.

2. Insurance ⇨466—When two causes join in causing injury, one of which is insured against, insured is covered by policy.

When two causes join in causing an injury, one of which is insured against under accident policy, insured is covered by policy.

3. Insurance ⇨452—"Travel and pedestrian policy," insuring against death or disability sustained by being struck by vehicle propelled by electricity, covered death of motorcyclist struck by electric train.

Policy, having caption describing it as "travel and pedestrian accident policy," insuring against death or disability sustained by insured by being struck or knocked down or run over while in or on public highway by any vehicle propelled by electricity, held to cover death of motorcyclist struck by train operated by electricity.

4. Insurance ⇨303—Failure of insured to perform agreement to continue as regular reader of newspaper during life of accident policy would not avoid policy (Civ. Code, §§ 2608, 2611).

Where accident policy was issued in consideration of registration fee and premium and insured's agreement to continue as regular reader of newspaper named during life of policy, insured's failure to perform agreement to continue as regular reader of such newspaper would not avoid policy under Civ. Code, §§ 2608, 2611, since promise related to future, and was not material to risk.

5. Insurance ⇨307—Insured's performance of agreement to continue as regular reader of newspaper during life of accident policy was not condition to recovery.

Insured's performance of agreement to continue as regular reader of newspaper named during life of accident policy was not condition to recovery on policy.

6. Trial ⇨397(1)—Where only evidentiary facts were set forth in stipulation, defendant was entitled to finding on issue.

In action on accident policy, where issue was whether insured was injured by being struck by railroad car, and only evidentiary facts from which inference might be drawn were set forth in stipulation, defendant was entitled to finding on issue.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1122(2)—Where evidentiary facts from which inference might be drawn were set forth in stipulation, and trial court did not make finding, appellate court could make finding (Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

In action on accident insurance policy, in which issue was whether insured was injured by being struck by railroad car, and such fact was not covered by stipulation, but only evidentiary facts from which inference might be drawn were set forth therein, and court did not make finding, appellate court could make finding on issue under Const. art. 6, § 4¾, and Code Civ. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action upon a policy of accident insurance by Genevieve Zimmerman, as administratrix of the estate of Albert T. Meyer, deceased, against the Continental Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Peter tum Suden and Richard tum Suden, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wilbur S. Pierce, of Richmond, and Jesse G. Benson, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An action to recover upon a policy of insurance against accidents issued to Albert T. Meyer in his lifetime; the indemnity for loss of life being made payable to his estate.

The parties filed an agreed statement of the facts, together with photographs showing physical conditions at the scene of the accident. It appears that the insured on January 29, 1927, in the daytime, and immediately before receiving the physical injuries which caused his death, was operating a motorcycle at a speed of 25 miles per hour in an easterly direction along Twenty-Eighth street in the city of Oakland. This street crosses Poplar street upon which the Key System Transit Company maintains a double-track railroad, over which trains are operated by electricity. Cross-arm warning signals were maintained at the crossing. In approaching Poplar street from the east along Twenty-Eighth street, the view to the north is obstructed until a point about 30 feet east of the tracks is reached. The motorcycle was about this distance from the track when a train from the north reached, and was moving across, the intersection. The motorcycle collided with the side of one of the cars of the train, causing the injuries from which the insured died.

The clause of the policy under which the plaintiff sought to recover insured against death or disability sustained by the insured "by being struck or knocked down or run over while in or on a public highway by * * * any vehicle * * * propelled by * * * electricity (excluding injuries sustained while on a railroad right of way in violation of statute or any regulation of the railroad company)."

The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff.

The insurer, which has appealed, contends that the complaint failed to state a cause of action; that the evidence fails to show that the insured was struck or knocked down by the car while he was upon a public highway, and that he was in fact upon the railroad right of way in violation of statute; that the clause quoted insured pedestrians only; that the accident was an excepted peril; and, lastly, that the judgment was not supported by findings of fact.

The complaint as filed contained two counts—one, the second, based upon the clause quoted above, and the other, the first, upon a clause of the policy insuring against death or disability caused by the wrecking or disablement of any private automobile, motor-driven car, or horse-drawn vehicle, or by being accidentally thrown from such automobile, car, or vehicle. To the second count a general demurrer was overruled, but to the first it was sustained without leave to amend. The latter count contained the general allegation that the insured and the plaintiff had each performed all the conditions of the policy; no such allegation, however, being set forth in the remaining count.

Appellant urges that, by reason of this omission, the complaint was insufficient.

[1] While allegations of the performance of conditions precedent are essential to the statement of a cause of action upon a policy of insurance (Allen v. Home Ins. Co., 133 Cal. 29, 65 P. 138; Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 P. 182, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 6), here appellant by its answer alleged that neither the plaintiff nor the insured had performed the terms and conditions of the policy, thus treating the issue as properly made, and curing the defect (Hoover v. Lester, 16 Cal. App. 151, 116 P. 382; Lugiani v. Landau, etc., Co., 38 Cal. App. 146, 175 P. 648; Bledsoe v. Stuckey, 47 Cal. App. 95, 190 P. 217).

[2] According to the stipulation, the impact was sufficient to break through one of the doors which opened in the side of the car. From this it is contended that the insured was not struck by the car, but that his injuries were wholly due to the velocity of the motorcycle when the collision occurred.

It has been held that, when two causes join in causing an injury, one of which is insured against, the insured is covered by the policy (Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 36 Ga. App. 540, 137 S. E. 403; Wright v. Ætna, etc., Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 10 F.[2d] 281, 46 A. L. R. 225); and, while from the nature of the accident and other circumstances shown different conclusions might be drawn, the inference which appears to have been drawn by the trial court that the insured was struck by the car is not unreasonable, and is supported by the evidence.

Nor do we find merit in the further claim that the insured was struck while upon the right of way of the railroad company. It is true, as contended by appellant, that he appears to have approached the crossing at an unlawful rate of speed, but the physical facts show that the collision did not occur upon the right of way, but upon the public highway.

[3] It is also claimed that the quoted clause in the policy covers pedestrians only and not injuries received while operating a motorcycle. This construction is based largely upon the fact that in the caption the policy is described as a "Travel and Pedestrian Accident Policy." While the caption may be considered in determining the interpretation to be given a policy (Taylor v. Northwestern, etc., Co., 34 Cal. App. 471, 167 P. 899; Moore v. Fidelity, etc., Co., of New York, 203 Cal. 465, 265 P. 207, 56 A. L. R. 860), the language here supports a broader construction than that sought to be given it by appellant, and the injuries in the present case were, we think, clearly covered by its provisions.

[4, 5] This conclusion also disposes of the contention that the accident under the terms of the policy was an excepted peril. The policy was issued "in consideration of a registration fee of twenty-five cents ($0.25) and of the premium of one dollar ($1.00) paid by the insured, and his agreement to continue as a regular reader of the Oakland Tribune during the life of this policy. * * * It is urged that, plaintiff having failed to prove performance by the insured of the promise to continue as a regular reader of the newspaper, no recovery could be had on the policy. The promise, however, related to the future, and was not material to the risk, and, no declaration to that effect being contained therein, a failure to perform would not avoid the policy, nor was such performance a condition to recovery. Civ. Code, §§ 2608, 2611.

[6, 7] The trial court made no findings of fact, but concluded from the statement of facts filed that plaintiff was entitled to judgment, which was entered accordingly. That this may be done where the ultimate facts are agreed upon is well settled (Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 P. 364; Muller v. Rowell, 110 Cal. 318, 42 P. 804); but here the issue was whether the insured was injured by being struck by the car. This fact was not covered by the stipulation; only the evidentiary facts from which the inference might be drawn being set forth therein. Appellant was therefore entitled to a finding on the issue. Crisman v. Lanterman, 149 Cal. 647, 87 P. 89, 117 Am. St. Rep. 167. However, an appellate court is authorized to make findings in certain cases (Const. art. 6, § 4½; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583; Kirk v. Culley, 202 Cal. 501, 261 P. 994), and the present is one wherein the power may be properly exercised. It was manifestly the conclusion of the trial court that the insured was struck by the car, and the circumstances shown reasonably support such a finding. We therefore find, in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, "that on January 29, 1927, the insured was killed by being struck by a vehicle propelled by electricity."

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte LEET. (Cr. 1540.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 12, 1929.

Divorce 269 (11)—Order committing husband for contempt for failure to pay alimony held unauthorized, where husband's uncontradicted testimony showed inability to comply with order.

Where property settlement carried into interlocutory divorce decree merely required that husband use his best efforts to acquire the amount fixed in decree as alimony, and husband alone testified at hearing on order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for noncompliance with the order, and his testimony was to the effect that he had no property and was out of employment and had not received funds which he expected from his mother, order committing husband for contempt for failure to pay alimony was unauthorized because unsupported by evidence.

Application by William A. Leet for habeas corpus, to be directed to the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, to review an order committing petitioner to jail for contempt. Writ granted, and petitioner discharged.

Clarence A. Linn, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Hugh K. McKevitt and Halloway Jones, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Habeas corpus to review an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco committing petitioner to jail for contempt of court in failing to comply with the terms and provisions of an order of said court requiring him to pay to his ex-wife the sum of $2,800, the amount due under a property settlement had between the parties.

The record shows that one Doris Leet and petitioner were husband and wife; that on the 23d day of December, 1927, Doris Leet obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from petitioner; that prior to the granting of this decree the parties entered into a written agreement, by the terms of which they settled and adjusted all their property rights growing out of or connected with their marital relation. Under the agreement, petitioner agreed to pay his wife certain sums from time to time for her support and maintenance. The substance of this agreement was incorporated in the interlocutory decree. The petitioner failed to comply with the terms of the decree in this particular, and he was ordered to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt by reason thereof. He was the only witness upon the hearing. He testified that he had no funds of any kind and owned no real estate, stocks, bonds, securities, or other personal property of any kind or character, nor was any property held in trust for him. He further testified that at the time he signed the property settlement agreement he thought his mother would provide the funds with which to pay the same, but she had refused to do so. He also testified that his employer had failed in business, and he had in consequence lost his position and had been out of employment for a period of over six months. At the conclusion of his testimony the court adjudged petitioner guilty of contempt and signed an order committing him to the county jail until he complied with the terms of the interlocutory decree requiring him to pay the sum of $2,800.

It is here claimed that as the evidence shows without conflict that petitioner did not have the ability to comply with the terms of the interlocutory decree, the order adjudging him in contempt of court is without evidence to support it. We see no escape from this contention. As above stated, the only testimony taken upon the proceeding was that of petitioner. This testimony was either true or false. As was said in Myers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal. App. 206, 189 P. 109, if true, the evidence shows that petitioner was without means to comply with the order; if false, then there is no evidence before the court upon the subject. In either event, the order of the court was made without authority of law. See Merriitt v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 269 P. 547; In re Harris, 81 Cal. App. 498, 253 P. 953; Ex parte Todd, 119 Cal. 57, 50 P. 1071.

We are cited to In re McCarty, 154 Cal. 534, 98 P. 540, and In re Rasmussen, 56 Cal. App. 368, 205 P. 72, to the effect that on the hearing of a contempt proceeding growing out of the husband's failure to pay alimony, it is not necessary for the wife to prove anything more than the making of the order and the disobedience of it by her husband in refusing to pay the amount which the court found he had the ability to pay when it made the order; that she makes a prima facie case at the hearing by producing the original order and by proof of the refusal of her husband to make payments according to its terms. In both these cases, however, it was recited in the original order directing the payment of alimony that defendant had the ability to pay. Here there is no such finding. Under the property settlement, which was carried into the interlocutory decree, the husband merely agreed to use his best efforts to acquire the amount fixed in the decree.

There being no evidence in the record to support any finding upon which to predicate an order of contempt, it follows that the writ should be granted and the petitioner discharged from custody. It is so ordered.

MADDUX v. MORA et al. (Civ. 5374.) ★

Rehearing Denied July 31, 1929.

1. Sales $\S$ 479(7)—Evidence, in action by conditional seller, held to support findings that seller took automobile to make necessary repairs and did not resell.

In action to recover balance due on automobile sold under conditional sales contract, together with cost of necessary repairs made, evidence held sufficient to support findings that seller took possession of automobile to make necessary repairs in accordance with terms of contract and did not resell automobile.

2. Sales $\S$ 479(7)—Conditional seller, suing to recover balance due and value of necessary repairs for automobile, need not allege buyer knew seller took automobile to make necessary repairs.

Where, under conditional sales contract, seller was permitted to retake automobile to make necessary repairs, seller, in action to recover balance due on purchase price and value of repairs made, was not required to allege that purchaser had knowledge of purpose of seller in taking automobile; the only ultimate fact required to be alleged being seller's purpose.

3. Sales $\S$ 479(11)—Conditional seller, taking possession of automobile to make necessary repairs, was not precluded from electing to repossess property or sue for price.

Where conditional sales contract expressly gave seller right to retake property for purpose of making necessary repairs, seller, retaking automobile for such purposes, was not precluded from subsequently making election between right to repossess property and terminate contract or sue for balance of purchase price.

4. New trial $\S$ 102(1)—New trial for newly discovered evidence was properly refused, where reasonable diligence in procuring witnesses was not shown (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 656, subd. 4).

Where there was no showing that buyer, sued for balance of purchase price, together with value of necessary repairs made to automobile sold, used reasonable or any diligence in attempting to produce all evidence, or that witnesses could not, with some diligence, have been discovered, motion for new trial was properly overruled under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 656, subd. 4, authorizing new trial for newly discovered evidence; such motion being regarded with distrust and disfavor, and such proffered evidence looked on with suspicion after defeat.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 981—New trial $\S$ 99—Motion for new trial for newly-discovered evidence is discretionary, and denial of motion will not be disturbed, unless discretion is abused.

Motions for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence are largely within discretion of trial court, and, except in cases of plain abuse of discretion, an order denying motion will not be disturbed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

On rehearing. Superseding former opinion. For former opinion, see 278 P. 468.

J. L. Granttham and Frank C. Scherrer, both of Riverside, for appellant.

Best & Best, of Riverside, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The respondent began the above-entitled suit in Perris township, Riverside county, to recover $160.50, which, by amendments to the complaint, was later increased to $237.50, together with $100 attorney's fees, interest and costs, for breach of a contract. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and an appeal was taken to the superior court of Riverside county, wherein judgment was again rendered in favor of the plaintiff, after a trial de novo. From the latter judgment, the defendant Mora appealed to this court.

The facts necessary to a consideration of the points presented are as follows: Maddux agreed to sell an automobile to the defendants under the terms of a conditional sale contract. Payments were made until October, 1921, when there was a balance on the purchase price of $162.50 then due. In September, 1922, the car being out of repair, the vendor took possession of it, and put it in good condition again, at an expense of $75. The purchaser failed to pay either the balance of the original purchase price or the expense of repairs, and on January 12, 1924, this suit was commenced.

It appears that one Haas was the agent who arranged the sale of the machine, and it is contended by the appellant that, after default had been made, and the car had been repossessed by Maddux, Haas arranged to and did sell it to one Taylor. The court did not so find, and one of the grounds urged for reversal is that, in failing to so find, material evidence was disregarded.

[1] The principal attack upon the judgment is that the evidence is insufficient to support certain findings which the court made, and which are numbered IV, IX, and X. They are as follows:

IV. "That on or about the month of March, 1922, plaintiff found the said personal property abandoned in the yard of one Ira L. Haas at Perris, California; that at the time of such finding the tires on the said machine had deteriorated to such an extent that they were no longer of any value; that the said personal property had lain out in the weather for months without any protection and that the same was not in good order and repairs as when originally sold to the defendants herein; that plaintiff thereupon took possession of the said personal property for the purpose of putting the same in as good order as when sold in accordance with the terms of the said agreement and that thereafter plaintiff repaired same and placed the automobile in as good repair and condition as when originally sold at an expense of $75.00; that the plaintiff made the repairs on the said car on or about the 1st day of November, 1922, and that the amount of the said repairs nor any portion thereof has ever been repaid by either of the said defendants or by anyone acting in their behalf."

IX. "That the said plaintiff M. C. Maddux did not at any time either by himself or by or through any of his agents take the said automobile so purchased under the contract aforesaid from either of the said defendants for any other purpose except for placing the same in as good condition and repair as when originally sold by the said plaintiff; that the said plaintiff neither by himself nor through any of his agents has at any time sold the said automobile to James Taylor or to anyone else and that the said plaintiff now has the said automobile in his possession."

From these No. X logically finds the amount owing to the plaintiff on account of principal, interest, and for repairs.

The rule that an appellate court will not reverse a judgment where there is any substantial evidence to support it is recognized by appellant. We find that there is such evidence here. It appears without conflict that one Haas "found" the buyers, told Mr. Maddux, and he sent salesmen to close the "deals," and in this instance he "found" the defendants; that, after the sale had been made to the Moras, he attended to the collections. He testified that he "never took the car back for Mr. Maddux"; that he "never sold the car to James Taylor. Taylor asked me how much was due on the car and I told him I did not know, I would have to take that up with Mr. Maddux. I might have told Vincinti Mora if James Taylor bought the car I would get his contract and return it to him. I meant if James Taylor bought the car I would get Mora's contract and give it back to him." Taylor testified that he agreed with Haas to buy the car if Mr. Maddux did not charge him over $125. At the time of making this arrangement with Haas, Taylor deposited $30 with him, and received this back when he returned the car, which he did when it appeared that Maddux would not sell it for $125, but required $185. According to Haas, Taylor had the car three or four days. Vincinti Mora brought Taylor to him. Taylor left the car with Haas, and Maddux eventually got it.

We find no testimony that Maddux ever authorized Taylor to take the car from appellant at the time it was left with Haas upon the first occasion, nor to sell the car to Taylor except under the terms of a proposed contract, which Taylor did not accept, and which Maddux prepared and placed in the hands of Haas after Taylor had taken the car and left a $30 deposit with Haas. As above stated, Taylor would not accept the car on the terms offered by Maddux. However, had he done so, it was apparently the understanding with Haas that Maddux would relieve the Moras from their liability as vendees, but this never happened. Maddux testified also that he did not sell the car to Taylor; that he took it only for the purpose of repairing it; that the Moras could have had it at any time it was in his possession had they come for it. Surely it cannot be said that there is no substantial evidence to support these findings.

There is a considerable amount of testimony in conflict with that above delineated and which upholds the statement of facts as asserted by appellant, but the trial court apparently disbelieved it, as it had a right to do.

[2] There is no merit in the contention that the complaint does not state a cause of action. Argument as to its contents prior to amendment, and which was eliminated by amendment, is beside the subject. In this behalf, the only consideration is the allegations of the complaint as amended, and upon which the case was tried. We are cited to no authority in support of appellant's claim that, in order to state a cause of action, it must appear that the vendee had knowledge of the purpose of the vendor in taking the personal property, where, as in this case, the vendor was permitted by the contract to retake the car for either of two purposes, namely, to make necessary repairs, or because of the default of the vendee, and to terminate the contract. The ultimate fact required to be alleged is the vendor's purpose. This the complaint alleges to have been for the making of needed repairs. It is not important that amendments to the complaint were filed instead of an amended complaint. The amendments here in question clearly show the alterations and additions to the complaint, and no exception was taken to this form of amendment.

[3] Appellant contends that in case of default by the vendee a vendor through a conditional sales contract must elect between two remedies; that is, he may repossess the property and terminate the contract, or he may sue for the balance of the purchase price, but that he cannot do both. Granting this to be the general rule as to his final remedy, it does not prevent the vendor under a contract which expressly gives him that right from retaking the property for the purpose of making needed repairs. The repossessing under these circumstances for such purposes cannot preclude the vendor from later making his election between the two remedies mentioned, and this clearly was done in the instant case.

[4, 5] The appellant filed affidavits wherein it was averred that one Joe Chavez, if permitted to testify, would swear that the automobile had not been repaired by Maddux, and that the affiant purchased it as junk, thereafter returning it to the plaintiff for $50 when the latter recovered judgment against the Moras and desired to make delivery; that Maddux had offered it for sale to others at a nominal price, and had stated that he had not expected until after the trial in the justice's court to collect further payments from the Moras. Counter affidavits were filed by the plaintiff, denying the foregoing allegations, in detail. The affidavit of appellant recites that he had not previously known of the witnesses therein named, nor of the facts to which they would testify, but accidentally discovered them during a casual conversation with an acquaintance after the trial. A motion for new trial, based thereon, was denied, and this is assigned as ground for reversal; it being urged that the trial court thus abused its judicial discretion. Subdivision 4, section 656, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a new trial may be granted for "newly discovered evidence, material for the party making the application, which he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at the trial." There was no showing that appellant used reasonable or any diligence in attempting to produce at the trial all of his evidence, nor that these witnesses could not, with some diligence, have been discovered. A motion for new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is regarded by the court with distrust and disfavor, and such proffered evidence is looked upon with suspicion after defeat. Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 204 P. 583; People v. Rushing, 130 Cal. 449, 62 P. 743, 80 Am. St. Rep. 141; Tibbet v. Sue, 125 Cal. 544, 58 P. 160. Such motions are largely within the discretion of the trial court, and except in cases of plain abuse of such discretion, an order denying the motion will not be disturbed. Waer v. Waer, 189 Cal. 178, 207 P. 891. We are not convinced that such an abuse has been shown in this instance.

The judgment is affirmed.

MATTEI v. HECKE, State Director of Agriculture, et al. (Civ. 6760.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 9, 1929.

- 1. Constitutional law ⇨83(1)—Citizen's liberty and manner of conducting business cannot be curtailed, unless necessary to preserve public health, safety, or morals.

Liberty of citizen and his manner of conducting his business or marketing his products may not be curtailed or interfered with, except where it is necessary under the police power for protection or preservation of public health, safety, or morals.

- 2. Constitutional law ⇨81—To justify state in interposing authority, interests of public generally must require interference.

In order to justify state in interposing its authority, interests of public generally must require interference, and interposing of authority must be reasonably necessary for accomplishment of purpose.

- 3. Constitutional law ⇨68(1)—Whether regulation of lawful business is valid exercise of police power is judicial question.

Where police power is exerted to regulate lawful business, it is always judicial question whether regulation is valid exercise of police power.

- 4. Statutes ⇨47—That Legislature was well-meaning in passage of legislation is no test of validity (California Fruit, Nut, and Vegetable Standardization Act of 1927, § 22).

That Legislature was well-meaning in its passage of California Fruit, Nut, and Vegetable Standardization Act of 1927, § 22 (St. 1927, p. 1845), providing that containers for grapes other than those packed in sawdust, cork, etc., and in certain standard containers established by act, shall, if used, be conspicuously marked, in letters not less than one-half inch in height, "Irregular Container," is no criterion or test of validity of act.

- 5. Weights and measures ⇨2—Act requiring that other than certain containers established by act for grapes be marked "Irregular Container," held invalid exercise of police power (California Fruit, Nut and Vegetable Standardization Act of 1927, § 22).

California Fruit, Nut and Vegetable Standardization Act of 1927, § 22 (St. 1927, p. 1845), providing that containers for grapes, other than those packed in sawdust, cork, etc., and in certain standard containers established by act, shall, if used, be conspicuously marked, in letters not less than one-half inch in height, "Irregular Container," held invalid exercise of police power, in attempting unduly to regulate marketing of grapes.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by A. Mattei against C. H. Hecke, as Director of Agriculture of the State of California, and another. From an order granting a temporary injunction, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Thomas H. Christiansen, Deputy Atty. Gen., Glenn M. Devore, Dist. Atty., and Arthur C. Shepard, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Fresno, for appellants.

Lewis H. Smith, of Los Angeles, and Archie A. Smith, of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal involves the constitutionality of that portion of section 22 of "the California Fruit, Nut, and Vegetable Standardization Act of 1927" which provides that grapes in containers other than those packed in sawdust, cork, etc., and in certain standard containers established by such act, shall, if used, be conspicuously marked, in letters not less than one-half inch in height, "Irregular Container."

The respondent, A. Mattei, is a grape grower and shipper in Fresno county. At the time grapes were ready to ship during the fall of 1927 he had on hand certain lug boxes of dimensions different from those authorized to be used under the California Fruit, Nut, and Vegetable Standardization Act of 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1845), which he proposed to use for the shipment of some of his grapes, without putting on the boxes the words "irregular container," as required by section 22 of the act. He was warned by the department of agriculture of the state of California and by the horticultural commissioner of the county of Fresno that the use of such containers without the addition of the words "irregular container," as provided by the act, was in violation of law, and that legal proceedings would be instituted against him, if he persisted in using the boxes as he proposed to do and was then in fact doing. Thereupon respondent filed a complaint for an injunction in the superior court of Fresno county against the director of agriculture of the state of California and the horticultural commissioner of Fresno county, whereby he sought to enjoin them from prosecuting him or causing him to be arrested, or preventing him from moving his grapes, or shipping them, or from condemning them, or from in any manner preventing him from packing or shipping his grapes in the containers that he proposed to use and was actually using—that is, containers differing from the standard crates and lugs provided for by the act and not having the words "irregular container" marked thereon.

The complaint is predicated on the premise that the proviso in section 22 of the act, requiring that containers of other sizes than those prescribed in the act which are permitted to be used, if used, must be conspicuously marked with the words "irregular container" in letters of a certain size, is unconstitutional. At the time of filing the complaint, the respondent, Mattei, obtained a temporary restraining order, which also ordered that appellants Hecke and Roullard show cause, at a time and place fixed by the order, why a preliminary injunction should not be granted as prayed for in plaintiff's complaint, pending the final determination of the action. On September 3, 1927, the order to show cause came on for hearing. This hearing was upon the complaint and the demurrer and answer of the defendants thereto. It was stipulated by the parties that for the purpose of the hearing the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were admitted, except the allegations that the act requiring grapes to be packed in the lugs or containers of the measurements required and the words "irregular container" so affixed to lugs containing grapes would mislead the trade, and cause the purchaser to believe that the contents of the lugs were of inferior quality. On December 1, 1927, the court made its order granting the temporary injunction, and from this order the appeal is taken.

Unquestionably an act such as we have here, restricting the personal liberty of a citizen, is invalid unless such restriction is necessary for the protection of the public safety, public health, or public morals. As is said in Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 236, 77 P. 924, 925 (66 L. R. A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 1 Ann. Cas. 428): "It appears, therefore, that the due exercise of the police power is limited to the preservation of the public health, safety, and morals, and that legislation which transcends these objects, whatever other justification it may claim for its existence, cannot be upheld as a legitimate police regulation." It will, we think, be conceded that such restrictions cannot be upheld, unless in their application they actually effect the object sought to be obtained.

Appellants state in their brief that the prevention of fraud and deception in the packing, marking, shipping, and sale of fruits, nuts, and vegetables is the basic reason for the act. The only provision relative to the packing and shipment of grapes contained in the act that would tend to prevent fraud and deception is the provision in section 22 that the net weight and name of the variety shall be marked in plain sight on the outside of each container, and with this provision of the act, it is conceded, respondent has and intends to comply. The other provisions of the act give the approximate size of the standard baskets and the dimensions, depth inside, width inside, and length outside, of the standard crate and standard lug box.

It becomes apparent on reading the statute that there is no cubic content provided for any of the respective containers in which grapes are to be packed. For the so-called standard basket referred to in subdivision 1, section 11, of the act, only approximate dimensions are given, and no cubic content is prescribed, and for the other eight varieties of crates or lugs in which shipment may be made there are provided inside dimensions in depth and width, but only outside dimensions in length. Hence a variation in the thickness of the ends of any of the respective containers enumerated creates a variation in the cubic content of such respective containers. In addition, as suggested by counsel for respondent, a perforated, corrugated cardboard ventilator, many of which are now in use, taking up a space of one or more inches on the ends, sides, or bottom of the container, if used, would materially affect the cubic content remaining for the product to be packed, and this is not attempted to be regulated or prohibited in any manner. The depth and width of the respective containers being prescribed by only inside dimensions, and the length by only outside dimensions, there is no uniformity prescribed for either inside or outside size of the containers. There is no uniformity prescribed by the portions of the act as to the size or cubic content of the container, nor as to volume or weight of the product to be sold therein.

Aside from all other considerations there is no measure attempted to be prescribed by which grapes may be sold and nothing—except the notice of net weight, which is not here complained of—which visualizes or presents to the purchaser the quantity of grapes he is purchasing. The seller may select any one of four crates and any one of four lug boxes, the crates themselves varying in inside depth from 4 inches to 4¾ inches, and the lug boxes varying in inside depth from 4¾ inches to 5¾ inches. There is nowhere any provision or attempted provision as to the weight or volume of grapes to be packed or shipped in any of the respective containers. The net weight and name of the variety required to be stamped on all the containers used is the only portion of the act which in any manner attempts to provide for the purchaser a statement or representation as to the quantity of grapes offered to him, and with this provision respondent has complied.

[1] The liberty of the citizen and his manner of conducting his business or marketing his products may not be curtailed or interfered with, except where it is necessary under the police power for the protection or preservation of the public health, safety, or morals. "A statute prohibiting, regulating, or interfering with private business can be upheld only under the police power, and that the police power can be rightfully exercised only when the statute in question is for the protection of the public safety, the public health, or the public morals." Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 82 P. 429, 430, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 3 Ann. Cas. 878. "It is, of course, elementary, that the enjoyment of one's property cannot be interfered with or limited arbitrarily." In re Kelso, 147 Cal. 609, 82 P. 241, 242, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796, 109

Am. St. Rep. 178. See, also, Pacific Palisades Assn. v. City of Huntington Beach, 196 Cal. 211, 216, 237 P. 538, 40 A. L. R. 782; People v. Holder, 53 Cal. App. 45, 199 P. 832; Binford v. Boyd, 178 Cal. 458, 174 P. 56. As was said by Mr. Justice Field in Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wall. 86, 21 L. Ed. 394, 418: "There is no more sacred right of citizenship than the right to pursue unmolested a lawful employment in a lawful manner. It is nothing more nor less than the sacred right of labor."

[2, 3] In City of Buffalo v. Collins Baking Co., 39 App. Div. 432, 57 N. Y. S. 348, which is analogous on principle to the question here presented, the court held void an ordinance providing that all bread sold or offered for sale in the city of Buffalo, wherever baked, should be made into loaves weighing not less than 1½ pounds each, the court stating that no good to the public is apparent; that bread of the same composition weighing one pound is equally as wholesome as a loaf one-half pound heavier; that the ordinance was an interference with a lawful trade or avocation; that "under the pretense of prescribing a police regulation, the state cannot be permitted to encroach upon any of the just rights of the citizen, which the constitution intended to secure against abridgment." In Frost v. City of Los Angeles, 181 Cal. 22, 28, 183 P. 342, 345 (6 A. L. R. 468), the court uses this language: "The Legislature is possessed of the entire police power of the state, except as its power is limited by the provisions of the Constitution. But it cannot, under the guise of the police power, unreasonably interfere with a lawful and useful occupation or business which is not inherently, or because of the manner in which it is carried on, injurious to persons, or property, or to the public health, convenience, comfort, safety, or morals. Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 81, 32 P. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 P. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218; Los Angeles v. Hollywood Cem. Ass'n, 124 Cal. 349, 57 P. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75; Ex parte McCapes, 157 Cal. 29, 106 P. 229; In re Dart, 172 Cal. 59, 155 P. 63, L. R. A. 1916D, 905, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1122." In Ex parte Hayden, 147 Cal. 649, 650, 82 P. 315, 316 (1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 184, 109 Am. St. Rep. 183) the court says: "The police power, deriving its existence from the rule that the safety of the people is the supreme law, justifies legislation upon matters pertaining to the public welfare, the public health, or the public morals [citing authorities]. But the Legislature, under the guise of police regulations, cannot enact laws which do not pertain to one or the other of these objects, and which impose onerous and unnecessary burdens upon business and property."

In order to justify the state in interposing its authority the interests of the public generally must require such interference and such interposing of authority must be reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and where the police power is exerted to regulate a lawful business it is always a judicial question whether the regulation is a valid exercise of such power. In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 P. 180. "If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution." In re Dees, 46 Cal. App. 656, 660, 189 P. 1050, 1052.

We have read the cases cited by appellants, and find they concern ordinances establishing net weights at which commodities may be sold, or that net weights are required to be contained on the labels or packages, with the exception of In re Fujii, 189 Cal. 55, 207 P. 537, in which case petitioner was arrested for selling strawberries in containers holding one-half dry pint in violation of a statute providing that standard baskets for strawberries should be the dry pint. In that case the court took cognizance of the fact that strawberries are much larger than other varieties of berries, and that they are less uniform as to size and form and cannot therefore be placed as compactly in containers as other types of berries. The most pertinent basis for the decision in the Fujii Case, however, was that the evidence introduced disclosed that the common practice in the sale of strawberries was to offer them for sale in trays holding either six pint baskets or six one-half pint baskets; the six baskets in either event filling the tray. Where one-half pint baskets were used, the surface area of strawberries exposed to the purchaser was the same as where full pint baskets were used. Therefore the court held that an opportunity for deception existed which the provisions of the act in question obviated.

[4] Appellants in their brief state: "It must be assumed that the legislative body satisfied itself that deception was being practiced upon the public directly or indirectly concerning containers in which grapes were packed and shipped, and that the public was entitled to be protected in the matter to the end that a purchaser might rest assured, without investigation, when he bought a lug of grapes that he was getting a certain amount." We fail to see how marking the container in letters not less than one-half inch in height "irregular container" would assure the purchaser that he was getting a certain quantity of grapes, nor in what manner it would operate in the preservation of the public health, safety, morals, or welfare. That the Legislature was well-meaning in its passage of this legislation is no criterion or test of its validity. As was said in Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468, 473, 44 P. 803, 804 (32

L. R. A. 664): "So, while the police power is one whose proper use makes most potently for good, in its undefined scope and inordinate exercise lurks no small danger to the republic; for the difficulty which is experienced in defining its just limits and bounds affords a temptation to the Legislature to encroach upon the rights of citizens with experimental laws none the less dangerous because well meant."

[5] In our opinion the trial court was correct in its holding, and the order appealed from is accordingly affirmed.

ZURICH GENERAL ACCIDENT & LIABILITY INS. CO., Limited, v. DIVISION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY OF STATE et al. (Civ. 6687.)★

Rehearing Denied Aug. 5, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 3, 1929.

1. Master and servant 405(2)—Evidence, in proceeding for compensation, held to warrant finding that ostensible employer was actual employer.

In proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act, where employee hired by garage owner did not know that ostensible garage owner was only acting as agent for undisclosed principal, evidence held sufficient to warrant finding that garage owner was actual employer.

2. Master and servant 3361—Employer, though representing undisclosed principal, was responsible as actual employer to employee hired by him.

Where ostensible employer was in fact representing undisclosed principal in operation of garage, he was nevertheless, as to employee hired by him, occupying relation of actual employer and responsible as such.

Certiorari to Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Benjamin H. Caverly, employee, against Arthur White and another, employers, and the Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Company, insurer. To review an award of the Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety against the insurer and another the insurer alone applies for certiorari. Denied.

J. L. Kearney, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Benjamin H. Caverly filed with respondent Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety an application for an award of compensation for injuries arising out of and occurring in the course of his employment. He named as defendants Arthur White, West Coast Mortgage & Investment Company, and Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Company, Limited. In making its award the division found that the injury was received while Caverly was employed as a mechanic by "Arthur White, doing business as White Garage," as his ostensible employer and as agent for West Coast Mortgage & Investment Company, a corporation, an undisclosed principal; that at that time the Zurich Company was the insurance carrier for "Arthur White, doing business as White Garage." The division made its award against the insurance carrier and the West Coast Mortgage & Investment Company, and discharged "Arthur White, doing business as White Garage," from liability. The Zurich Company petitions for the writ of review.

Petitioner had issued a policy of insurance to "Arthur White, doing business as the White Garage." Petitioner contends that the division exceeded its jurisdiction, in this, that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that Arthur White was Caverly's employer; and further contends that the evidence without conflict shows that the real employer was the West Coast Mortgage & Investment Company, which company, as the findings declare, was uninsured. We have examined the evidence set out on page 3 of the petition, which petitioner states is practically all of the evidence bearing upon the stated question. We have further examined the answer to the petition, which more fully sets forth the evidence relating to that question. Caverly stated that at the time of his employment he talked to one McIntyre, who was then manager of the White Garage, and also to Mr. White. In substance his statement is that he was given the job at 75 cents an hour for his work, and that there were no other terms. Mr. White testified that his business was that of manager of the West Coast Mortgage & Investment Company; that his arrangement with Caverly was that Caverly was to run the shop on the basis of 50 per cent. of his labor. He testified that he was not an owner of the garage and had nothing to do with it, and that it was always owned by the corporation, of which corporation he was the president and manager. The real contention of White before the division, as may be seen from his testimony, was that Caverly was an independent contractor and was not an employee of either the investment company or the White Garage. Over the door of the shop there was a sign reading: "White Garage." White testified that there was nothing there that would lead any one to believe that the West Coast Mortgage & Investment Company was identified with the concern, or that he himself was so identified. In other words, the fact seems to be that when Caverly was employed, and during the period of his employment, the place was operated simply as "White Garage," and that Mr. White as the person in charge of the premises was the ostensible owner, and, acting under that appearance and under those circumstances, employed Caverly to work in the shop.

[1, 2] We think that the evidence is sufficient to warrant the finding of the division that White was the actual employer. If in fact in his operation of the business he was representing an undisclosed principal, nevertheless he was, as to Caverly, occupying the actual relation of employer and could be held responsible as such employer. Geary St., P. & O. R. Co. v. Rolph, 189 Cal. 59, 64, 207 P. 539. It follows that Caverly was protected by the insurance policy issued to White for the purposes of that business.

The petition for writ of review is denied.

HOFFMAN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.* (Civ. 3815.)

Rehearing Granted Aug. 2, 1929.

1. Railroads ⇨327(7)—Vehicle driver need not actually stop under any or all circumstances before crossing railroad track.

Law does not require driver of vehicle to actually stop under any or all circumstances before crossing railway track.

2. Railroads ⇨333(1)—Test of contributory negligence of one attempting to cross railroad track before approaching train is whether reasonably prudent person would have undertaken attempt.

Test as to existence of contributory negligence on part of one who attempts to cross railroad track ahead of an approaching train is question as to whether, under circumstances, reasonably prudent person would have undertaken to cross track.

3. Railroads ⇨350(13)—When circumstances allow different conclusions to reasonably be drawn as to prudence of person attempting to cross railroad track, contributory negligence is for jury.

When circumstances of particular case are of nature that different conclusions may reasonably be drawn as to prudence of person in attempting to cross railroad track, question of contributory negligence becomes one for determination of jury.

4. Railroads ⇨328(8)—When dense fog obscures view, greater caution should be observed in crossing railroad track.

When dense fog obscures one's view, greater caution should be observed in crossing railroad track than might suffice at time when the atmosphere is clear.

5. Railroads ⇨350(26)—Contributory negligence of automobile driver in failing to stop machine or engine before crossing railroad track in fog held for jury.

Where on morning that train and automobile collided at crossing dense fog prevailed and train was late, and driver of automobile had knowledge of customary time that train approached crossing, contributory negligence of plaintiff in failing to stop automobile before attempting to cross track held for jury.

6. Railroads ⇨328(2)—That stopping automobile before reaching crossing would have prevented collision with train was not conclusive of driver's negligence.

If automobile had been stopped just before reaching crossing so that collision would not have occurred with train, that in itself was not conclusive of negligence of automobile driver.

7. Railroads ⇨348(4)—Evidence sustained implied finding that train did not signal before it collided with plaintiff's automobile at crossing.

In action to recover for injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile was struck by train at crossing, evidence held sufficient to support implied finding of failure to blow whistle or ring bell of train before accident.

8. Pleading ⇨250—Permitting amendment of complaint to include demand for damages for necessary medical aid held not error, where original complaint alleged severe, permanent injuries (Civ. Code, § 3283).

Where, during process of trial in action for injuries sustained when train collided with plaintiff's automobile, plaintiff was permitted to amend complaint to include demand for damages in sum of $1,500 for medical aid in performance of necessary surgical operation resulting from injuries sustained, there was no abuse of discretion, under Civ. Code, § 3283, authorizing recovery of reasonably certain future damages, where original complaint alleged that plaintiff was severely and permanently injured.

9. Damages ⇨188(3)—Evidence supported judgment as to injuries sustained in collision and necessary future expense for operation.

In action for injuries resulting from collision of plaintiff's automobile with train at crossing, evidence held to support judgment with respect to permanent injuries and necessary future expense of $1,500 which would be reasonably certain to accrue for operation as result of accident.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1048(3)—Permitting physician to testify that plaintiff's condition resulted from accident held not erroneous, though hypothetical question did not fully state facts involved previously testified to by another witness.

Permitting physician to testify in response to hypothetical question that plaintiff's present condition and injuries resulted from accident, though hypothetical question did not fully state facts involved upon which opinion was necessarily based, held not erroneous, where all of remaining necessary facts had been previously testified to by witness who treated plaintiff for injuries.

11. Courts ⇨117—Court minutes control controversy regarding demand for jury on certain date.

Court minutes must control where there is controversy regarding demand for jury on certain date.

12. Jury ⇨25(9)—Jury having been properly demanded for first trial, demand was not required to be renewed at subsequent trial.

Where proper demand for jury was made for first trial of case in action for injuries, it was not necessary to repeat demand for jury at time case was finally set for trial, since original demand was continuing in effect; Code Civ. Proc. § 631, being unavailing, since providing that constitutional right to trial by jury is waived by failing to announce that jury is required at time cause is first set upon trial calendar.

13. Jury ⇨79(1)—It is preferable to order trial jury drawn from regular panel.

It is custom and preferable practice to order trial jury to be drawn from regular panel.

14. Appeal and error ⇨922—In absence of formal showing that special venire was not necessarily drawn, it must be assumed court correctly denied defendants' motion for jury from regular panel (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 214, 226).

In absence of formal showing that special venire was not necessarily drawn pursuant to specific authorization of Code Civ. Proc. § 226, it must be assumed that there was no abuse of discretion on part of court in ordering special venire instead of jury from regular panel pursuant to section 214, and that denial of defendants' motion for a jury drawn from the general panel was not prejudicial or erroneous.

15. Jury ⇨149—Refusing during trial to discharge juror shown to be aunt of clerk employed in office of plaintiff's counsel held not error, where no prejudice was shown.

Where, after jury had been impaneled and during process of trial, defendants moved court to discharge juror because she was aunt of clerk employed in office of one of attorneys for plaintiff, and juror was qualified on voir dire, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to discharge her, where no prejudice was shown on part of juror.

16. Jury ⇨132—It cannot be presumed that juror is biased because niece is employed in office of plaintiff's counsel.

It cannot be presumed as matter of law that juror is biased and prejudiced in favor of plaintiff merely because her niece is employed in office of litigant's counsel.

17. Appeal and error ⇨216(2)—Defendants failing to request instruction to disregard alleged misconduct of plaintiff's counsel cannot complain on appeal.

Where defendants in action for injuries failed to request court to instruct jury to disregard expositions of counsel for plaintiff consisting of interruptions on cross-examination and court instructed that judgment must be rendered solely on the evidence at trial, defendants may not complain on appeal.

18. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Permitting witness to say that, if headlight of locomotive striking automobile had cast rays along track in front of automobile, witness could have seen it, held not prejudicial.

In action for injuries sustained in collision of plaintiff's automobile with train, permitting witness to say that, if headlight of engine had cast rays of light along track in front of automobile, he could have seen it, though possibly stating a conclusion, held not prejudicial.

19. Damages ⇨168(2)—Evidence showing nature of soil at crossing where train struck plaintiff's automobile held admissible, since gravel and dirt found in wounds tended to show seriousness of injuries.

There was no error in permitting plaintiff, in action for injuries sustained when automobile collided with defendants' train at crossing, to show nature of soil at crossing, since gravel and dirt found in wounds of plaintiff tended to show seriousness of his injuries.

20. Damages ⇨172(1)—Nature of employment of plaintiff and cost of hiring man to take place as well digger during incapacitation from injuries held admissible as tending to establish measure of damages.

Showing nature of employment of plaintiff, in action for injuries sustained when his automobile collided with train, and cost of hiring man to take place as well digger while plaintiff was incapacitated from injuries, was admissible as tending to establish measure of damages for injuries sustained.

21. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Where plaintiff sustained fractured skull from injury, evidence of subsequent injury from blow on head, though incompetent, was not prejudicial.

Evidence of subsequent injury from blow on head to plaintiff in action for injuries sustained when automobile collided with train was not competent, unless it may have tended to show he was more susceptible to injury on account of sensitive condition of his head owing to fracture of skull from collision, but was not prejudicial.

22. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Permitting witness to describe position and condition of automobile in ditch at railroad crossing 24 hours after collision with train held not prejudicial error.

In action to recover for injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile collided with train, there was no prejudicial error in permitting witness to describe position and condition of automobile as it lay in ditch at crossing 24 hours after accident, where machine was completely demolished by collision, though it should have been shown that no substantial change occurred in meantime.

23. Evidence ⇨116—That automobile after collision with train was in second gearing tended to corroborate driver's statement that he shifted to that gearing before collision.

Fact that automobile as found in ditch 24 hours after collision with train at crossing was in second gearing was admissible as tending to corroborate plaintiff's statement, in action for injuries, that he shifted to that gearing immediately before collision.

24. Railroads ⚙️316(1)—Due caution as to speed of train must be determined from surrounding facts.

Due caution with respect to speed of a train must be determined from all surrounding facts, circumstances, and conditions.

25. Railroads ⚙️350(11)—When there are substantial circumstances supporting charge of excessive speed of train, question is for jury.

When there are substantial circumstances supporting charge of excessive speed of train amounting to lack of due care, it becomes question for jury to determine.

26. Railroads ⚙️316(4)—In absence of contrary statute or ordinance, speed of train is not negligence per se.

While railroad trains must be run with reasonable care commensurate with surrounding circumstances and consequent dangers, in absence of statute or ordinance to contrary no particular rate of speed is negligence per se.

27. Railroads ⚙️316(2)—Speed of train need not be slackened under ordinary circumstances at country crossings.

There is no legal obligation on part of railroad company to slacken speed of its trains under ordinary circumstances at country crossings.

28. Railroads ⚙️350(11)—Question of train's excessive speed as element of negligence in causing collision with automobile held properly submitted to jury.

Where, at time of collision of train at crossing with automobile, atmosphere was unusually foggy, and engineer admitted he could not see more than 100 feet ahead of engine, and train was 25 minutes late, and plaintiff as injured driver of automobile testified train was going fast, question of excessive speed as an element of negligence was properly submitted to jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by R. A. Hoffman against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Levinisky & Jones, of Stockton, for appellants.

F. M. Ostrander, of Merced, and Philip M. Carey and W. F. Ostrander, both of Oakland, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for damages for injuries which were sustained in a railroad crossing casualty. The facts are related in greater detail in the opinion which was rendered in an appeal from a former judgment in the same case reported in 84 Cal. App. 337, 258 P. 397.

The defendant Southern Pacific Company's

Oakdale branch of its railway system extends from Merced to Stockton through an open flat country. According to schedule the regular passenger train left Merced daily at 7 o'clock a. m., but on the morning of the accident this train was about 25 minutes late in leaving Merced. The plaintiff resided on the Cox Ferry highway, 3 miles from Merced, for more than a year prior to the accident, and was therefore familiar with the train schedule. In the locality of plaintiff's home this highway paralleled the railway track at a distance of 50 feet therefrom. On the morning of the accident a dense fog prevailed, obscuring the landscape so that it was difficult to discern an object more than a hundred feet distant. At 7:30 o'clock the plaintiff in his Buick automobile, accompanied by a companion by the name of Hawkins, who sat upon the front seat by his side, left home and drove along the Cox Ferry road at a speed of 25 or 30 miles an hour, to a cross road about a mile distant, where he turned abruptly to his left up a slight ascent and across the railroad track. The automobile was an open car. The train was approaching from their rear. Neither of the occupants of the machine heard a crossing whistle or bell or the rumbling of the train. They were not expecting it at that time. Both of them, however, claim to have carefully listened for a train as they approached the track, and assert that they looked down the track in the direction of Merced and saw no train. Except for the dense fog, there was no obstacle to obscure a clear view of the track for the distance of more than a mile. Before reaching the track the speed of the automobile was reduced to 6 or 8 miles an hour. When the front wheels of the machine reached a point 5 or 6 feet from the nearest rail, suddenly the headlight of the approaching engine appeared through the fog about 100 feet away. The train was rapidly bearing down upon them. At about the same time both occupants of the machine saw this light and had a glimpse of the engine upon their left. Both exclaimed with surprise. Doubtful of his ability to stop the machine in time to avoid a collision, and fearing that an attempt to increase the speed of the car would kill the engine, in the emergency, the plaintiff promptly shifted the clutch into the intermediate gearing and accelerated his speed. At the same time Hawkins opened the door at his right and jumped from the machine. As the car crossed the track the pilot of the engine struck the rear end of the automobile and hurled it into the ditch. The plaintiff was seriously injured. Chief among his injuries was a triangular fracture of the frontal bone of the skull penetrating to the brain, exposing the cerebrum, and requiring the trephining of the skull. Upon the trial the jury rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

The appellant seriously contends that the record will not support the implied finding of the jury to the effect that the defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to ring a bell or blow a whistle as required by section 486 of the Civil Code. It is also contended that the court erred in permitting the amendment of the complaint; in issuing a special venire for trial jurors; in admission of evidence; and in giving, refusing to give, and modifying instructions. The chief contention and the serious question is whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to stop his machine before attempting to cross the railroad track in a dense fog.

[1] The law does not require the driver of a vehicle to actually stop under any and all circumstances, before crossing a railway track. There is no absolute duty on the part of one to first stop before he attempts to cross the track. In 33 Cyc. 1010, it is said: "By the weight of authority it is not necessarily negligence on the part of one about to cross a railroad track to fail to stop in addition to looking and listening for trains, unless under the existing circumstances he cannot listen without stopping; but whether such a traveler must stop in addition to looking and listening depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case and so is usually a question for the jury. So it is held that a person need not stop before going on the track if he can look and listen effectively without doing so."

[2-5] The test as to the existence of contributory negligence on the part of one who attempts to cross a railroad track ahead of an approaching train is the question as to whether under such circumstances a reasonably prudent person would have undertaken to do so. When the circumstances of a particular case are of such a nature that different conclusions may reasonably be drawn as to the prudence of a person in attempting to cross a railroad track, the question of contributory negligence becomes one for the determination of the jury. Murray v. So. Pac. Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675; Whitney v. N. W. Pac. Ry. Co., 39 Cal. App. 139, 178 P. 326; Firth v. So. Pac. Co., 44 Cal. App. 511, 186 P. 815, 41 A. L. R. 420, 424 (note); 22 R. C. L. 1034, § 267; 3 Elliott on Railroads, 358, § 1167. Where there is nothing to obstruct one's view of a railroad track for a distance from a proposed crossing amply sufficient to preclude the possibility of a train arriving before one could cross the track with reasonable safety, there is no reason for the driver of a vehicle to stop the machine before crossing the track. 22 R. C. L. 1034, supra. But when one's view is obstructed by buildings or other obstacles, or one's hearing is impaired by the noise of the operating of the machine which is being driven, it may be negligence for the driver not to stop so as to enable him to secure reasonably safe vision and hearing of an approaching train. Barnett v. A., T. &

S. F. Ry. Co. (Cal. App.) 278 P. 443; Stephenson v. N. W. Pac. Ry. Co. (Cal. App.) 278 P. 263; 22 R. C. L. 1030, § 262; 3 Elliott on Railroads, 358, § 1167; 33 Cyc. 1019. When a dense fog obscures one's view, greater caution should be observed in crossing a railway track than might suffice at a time when the atmosphere is clear. Hoffman v. Southern Pac. Co., 84 Cal. App. 337, 258 P. 397; 19 A. L. R. 872, note. Under the circumstances of the present case, however, we are inclined to think it may not be said as a matter of law that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to stop his machine or his engine before attempting to cross the track. In other words, this case appears to present a situation which properly requires the question of contributory negligence to be presented to the jury for its determination. It is self-evident that the plaintiff's vision down the track would be neither improved nor impaired by the mere stopping of his machine. His vision could penetrate the fog no farther from a stationary machine than from one which was in motion.

[6] While it might be a question ordinarily open to doubt, there is substantial evidence upon which the jury was warranted in concluding the plaintiff's engine made less noise while the automobile was running than it would have made while merely idling with the machine stationary. We are of the opinion that the evidence may be said to reasonably support the implied conclusion of the jury that the engine of the automobile while it was in motion was so noiseless as to impair the hearing of its occupants only slightly, and to, therefore, make it unreasonable to hold as a matter of law that it was negligence not to have actually shut off the gas and stopped the engine entirely before attempting to cross the track. The appellant argues that if the machine had been stopped just before reaching the crossing, the accident would not have occurred. But this is not conclusive of negligence. It is equally true that if the train had been on time the morning of the accident, or ten seconds later than it was, the accident would not have occurred. The real question to determine is whether the plaintiff could have seen or heard the approaching train to better advantage if he had stopped his machine; and whether a reasonably prudent person would under such circumstances have stopped his engine or his machine before attempting to cross the track. We are inclined to think that reasonable minds might differ as to whether one should or should not have stopped the machine under such circumstances and that the question of contributory negligence was therefore a question for the jury.

[7] While there are some circumstances from which the jury may have inferred that the train was running without due caution at an excessive rate of speed on account of the existence of an unusually dense fog which greatly obscured the view, the chief element of negligence on the part of the defendant railroad company which is relied upon is the charge that the whistle was not blown and the bell was not rung before reaching the crossing. There was a serious conflict on this subject. The plaintiff testified that up to the time of the crash "there was no whistle blown or bell rang." He claimed to have been carefully watching and listening for the train; that before reaching the crossing he looked "back down the track towards Merced to see if the train was coming. Q. Did you see any? A. No sir. * * * Q. State what observation you made in going up the grade? * * * A. I was looking for the train all the time. Q. When for the first time did you see any train, if you did see any? A. Not until I got on the track, or almost on it. Q. Then to your best knowledge, where was the train? A. About 80 or 100 feet down the track. * * * I saw the headlight, is the first thing I saw. * * * I shifted the gears to second as soon as I saw the headlight. * * * I stepped on the gas with my foot, just as quick as I shifted. * * * I turned the wheel as far as I could * * * to the right." The plaintiff testified that if he had suddenly stepped on the accelerator while the machine was slowly going upgrade, it would have killed the engine. Mr. Hawkins, the companion of plaintiff, testified that both he and the plaintiff looked and listened for the train, and although the machine made no unusual noise, he heard no whistle or bell until immediately preceding the crash. Mr. Walker lived 200 yards from the crossing, and at the time of the accident was preparing to drive his own car out of his yard on his way to work. He was listening for the train and said he heard "a very indistinct whistle which I presume was about the cement plant," one mile distant. He had driven out toward the crossing, but did not see the train until it was about 80 feet away. In response to the question, "Why didn't you see it before?" he replied, "Because it was too foggy." He also testified that except for the faint sound of the whistle at the cement plant one mile away, he heard no other whistle or bell until just at the time of the crash. Both Ernest and John Campodonica, father and son, who lived only 25 or 30 yards from the scene of the accident, the father being engaged in the yard, and the son looking out of the window toward the crossing, heard neither whistle nor bell until immediately prior to the accident. Arthur, the son of plaintiff, and his wife, Josie, who were at their home, half a mile from the crossing and within 100 feet of the track where the train passed, testified that while they usually heard the morning train, they heard no whistle or bell on this occasion. Mr. Dysart, who also lived in the same vicinity, was working about his stable 200 feet from the track at the time the train passed, and testified to substantially the same thing. Since the fog was so dense on the morning of the accident the jury may have assumed the engineer did not see the whistling post, and therefore may have omitted to give the usual crossing warnings. The foregoing testimony furnishes sufficient evidence to support the implied finding of a failure to blow the whistle or ring the bell.

[8, 9] During the process of the trial, on motion, the plaintiff was permitted to amend his complaint to include a demand for damages in the sum of $1,500 for medical aid in the performance of a necessary surgical operation resulting from the injuries sustained. The original complaint alleged that the plaintiff was "severely and permanently injured." There was no abuse of discretion in permitting this amendment. The language of the original complaint was adequate upon which to admit evidence of permanent injuries. 7 Thompson's Comm. on Neg. 1009, § 7602. The amendment was sufficient upon which to admit testimony to include the necessary cost of future medical services. 8 Thompson's Comm. on Neg. 956, § 7327. In 3 Sutherland on Damages, 2781, § 944, it is said: "In estimating the pecuniary loss in such cases all the consequences of the injury, future as well as past, are to be taken into consideration. * * * These are presumed to embrace indemnity for actual nursing and medical expenses." Section 3283 of the Civil Code authorizes the recovery of damages which are reasonably "certain to result in the future." 8 Cal. Jur. 754, § 22. Dr. Parker testified that the fracture of the plaintiff's skull required the operation of trephining. He said this operation left a "depressed area in his skull and * * * a hard scar tissue formation there, which is deep in, and it has been producing a pressure on his cerebrum," together with frequent severe shooting pains in the head, and that epilepsy would probably result unless another operation were performed to relieve the pressure on the brain; that this operation would reasonably cost about $1,500. The evidence amply supports the judgment with respect to the injuries and the necessary future expense which would be reasonably certain to accrue as a result of the accident.

[10] Over the objection of defendants, Dr. Parker, who treated the plaintiff for his injuries, and who subsequently examined him a short time before the last trial to ascertain his physical condition, was permitted to testify in response to a hypothetical question that the plaintiff's present condition as above stated was the result of the injuries sustained in the railroad crossing accident. The hypothetical question did not fully state the facts involved upon which his opinion was necessarily based. But the ruling was not erroneous, since all of the remaining necessary facts had been previously testified to by this witness and it is apparent that his opinion was based, not only upon the hypothetical question which was propounded, but also upon his personal examination, treatment and knowledge of the patient's condition.

[11, 12] October 24, 1927, this case was set for trial, at which time the plaintiff demanded a jury according to the amended court minutes as shown under the date of the court proceedings of March 12, 1928. There is some controversy regarding the demand for a jury on this date. The court minutes, however, must control in this regard. But the case was formerly tried before a jury and reversed on appeal. It seems to be conceded a proper demand for a jury was made for the first trial. It was not necessary to repeat the demand for a jury at the time the case was finally set for trial. The original demand was continuing in its effect. Section 631 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the constitutional right to a trial by jury is waived under such circumstances as are here involved "by failing to announce that a jury is required, at the time the cause is first set upon the trial calendar. * * *" In the case of Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 19 Cal. App. 1, 6, 124 P. 734, 735, it is said: "It was not necessary to formally renew them [the demand for a jury and payment of fees], since it appears that plaintiff was still relying upon them. The demand must be considered as a continuous refusal to waive the right to a jury. It was not necessary to repeat the demand."

[13, 14] However, the demand for a jury appears to have been formally repeated on October 24, 1927, when the case was reset for trial. Instead of ordering a jury from the regular panel pursuant to section 214 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court ordered a special venire under section 226 of the same Code. At the time of trial the defendants informally objected to the special venire and requested the court to draw a jury from the general panel, which was denied. The record contains no showing as to the existence or absence of names in the trial jury box, except that in the colloquy between counsel and the court, it was stated that it was the custom of the court to issue a special venire. The panel was not formally challenged. No evidence was adduced in support of defendants' objection to the special venire. There is no attempt to show that the defendants were prejudiced by the trial by jurors drawn by means of a special venire. It is the custom and preferable practice to order a trial jury to be drawn from the regular panel. Amos v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 677, 682, 239 P. 317. In the absence of a formal showing that a special venire was not necessarily drawn pursuant to the specific authorization of section 226 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be assumed there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the court and that the denial of defendants' motion was not prejudicial or erroneous. Estate of Wall, 187 Cal. 50, 54, 200 P. 929.

[15, 16] After the jury had been impaneled and during the process of the trial, the defendants moved the court to discharge one juror by the name of Mary Hayes on the sole ground that she was the aunt of a clerk who was employed in the office of one of the attorneys for plaintiff. This juror was qualified on the voir dire. There is no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in refusing to discharge a juror in the midst of a trial where no prejudice is shown on the part of the juror. It cannot be presumed as a matter of law that a juror is biased and prejudiced in favor of a plaintiff merely because her niece is employed in the office of the litigant's counsel.

The appellants have cited 53 assignments of alleged misconduct of counsel for plaintiff in the process of trial. Most of them consist of interruptions of counsel on cross-examination with the evident purpose of correcting what was assumed to have been misstatements or misinterpretations of the evidence of a witness; some of them do contain suggestions as to the answers of witnesses under examination. It must be conceded some of these assignments of misconduct do illustrate the prevailing practice of interrupting the orderly trial of a case, frequently resulting in distracting contests of wits or zeal between counsel and an ignoring of the authority of the trial judge, to whom all such conflicts should be addressed. Probably the most flagrant transgression occurred in the examination of prospective jurors on the voir dire. Several jurors were asked if they would become prejudiced if it should appear that a verdict was secured by the plaintiff on a previous trial, and that the judgment was reversed on appeal. The purpose of these questions is apparent. It is a common fault to permit counsel in the examination of jurors to resort to argument, prejudicial inferences, and theoretical application of the law. However, the jury was subsequently furnished complete knowledge of the previous trial by the abundant use of the transcript of the former trial, on the part of respective counsel, for impeachment purposes. Moreover, upon objection the court instructed the jury as follows: "The jury are here for the purpose of trying this case right now, the same as if it never had been tried at all, that is their province and their duty to regard it in that way, and you are to act upon the evidence as it comes in here."

[17] Also in the court's charge to the jury, they were instructed to the effect that the judgment must be rendered solely upon the evidence adduced at the trial. Finally, the defendants failed to request the court to instruct the jury to disregard these expositions of counsel, and may ordinarily, therefore, not complain. Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 181 Cal. 345, 368, 184 P. 672, 12 A. L. R. 1007; People v. Simon, 80 Cal. App. 675, 678, 252 P. 758.

specifications of alleged errors in the course of the trial, most of which are addressed to the admission of evidence. After an examination of the record as to each assignment, while it appears that liberal latitude was allowed the plaintiff in examination of witnesses and some technical errors in rulings exist, we are of the opinion there is nothing so prejudicial as to require a reversal of the judgment. Regarding the second assignment, it may have been a conclusion for Hawkins to say that if the headlight of the engine had cast rays of light along the track in front of the automobile, he could have seen them. There was no harm in permitting the answer. At most, it was only a question of how far the rays from the headlight of an engine would act as a warning in a dense fog. This would depend on the intensity of the light and the density of the fog. The common judgment of jurors must make allowance for such uncertainties in view of the physical conditions which appear to exist under the circumstances. There was no error in permitting the plaintiff to show the nature of the soil at the crossing. Since gravel and dirt were found in his wounds, it tended to show the seriousness of his injuries. The nature of plaintiff's employment as a well digger, and the cost of hiring a man to take his place while he was incapacitated from his injuries, tended to establish the measure of his damages. The evidence of plaintiff's subsequent injury from a blow on the head was not competent, unless it may have tended to show he was more susceptible to injury on account of the sensitive condition of his head owing to the fracture of his skull. It was, however, not prejudicial. Before permitting a witness to describe the position and condition of the automobile as it lay in the ditch at the crossing 24 hours after the accident, it should have been shown that no substantial change occurred in the meantime. But the machine was completely demolished by the collision. There was no contention to the contrary. It was stipulated that the reasonable value of the machine was $200. There was therefore no prejudicial error in this ruling. The fact that the machine was found after the accident to be in the second gearing merely tended to corroborate the plaintiff's statement that he shifted to that gearing immediately before the collision. This ruling was harmless. No substantial error exists in these rulings of the court.

The defendants have challenged the giving, the refusing, and modifying of numerous instructions. To review each of these instructions would extend this opinion to unwarranted length. The objections to several of these instructions are covered by the principles of law heretofore announced. The jury was fully and fairly charged on all the material issues of the case, and we think the charge contained no prejudicial error. Among the instructions which were given the following one is vigorously assailed: "It is not necessary that plaintiff prove all the allegations of negligence set forth in his complaint in order to recover. The proof of any one is sufficient. Therefore, even if you may find that the whistle was blown or the bell rung, as required by law, still if you find that the train was being operated at a dangerous and excessive rate of speed, and that by reason thereof the accident occurred, and that the injuries of the plaintiff were the proximate result thereof, such proof is sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover damages in this action, providing that the plaintiff himself did not proximately cause or contribute to said injuries by any negligent act of his own."

[24, 25] Defendants assert that this instruction is erroneous for the reason that there is no evidence of the speed of the train measured in the number of miles an hour which it was running, which could be said to be a "dangerous or excessive rate of speed." While it is true that the estimated speed of the train in terms of mileage does not constitute negligence per se, and standing alone does not indicate negligence at all, still the question of excessive speed may be determined independent of an actual estimate of a specific number of miles an hour. Due caution with respect to the speed of a train or vehicle must be determined from all the surrounding facts, circumstances, and conditions. When there are substantial circumstances supporting a charge of excessive speed amounting to a lack of due care, it becomes a question for the jury to determine.

[26-28] While it is true that railroad trains must be run with reasonable care commensurate with the surrounding circumstances and consequent dangers, in the absence of a statute or ordinance to the contrary no particular rate of speed is negligence per se, and there is no legal obligation on the part of the railroad company to slacken the speed of its trains under ordinary circumstances, at country crossings. Larrabee v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 173 Cal. 743, 161 P. 750; 3 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) 337, § 1160; 22 R. C. L. 1011, § 242; 33 Cyc. 791. But regardless of the actual rate of speed, usually it is a question of fact to be determined by the jury from the surrounding circumstances as to whether the speed at which the train is running constitutes negligence. Bilton v. So. Pac. R. Co., 148 Cal. 443, 447, 83 P. 440; Tousley v. Pac. El. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 457, 137 P. 31; Badostain v. Pac. El. Ry. Co., 83 Cal. App. 290, 295, 256 P. 576; 3 Elliott on Railroads, 337, §§ 1160, 1161; 22 R. C. L. 1011, § 242; 33 Cyc. 791. In the case of Bilton v. So. Pac. R. Co., supra, it was held to be a question to be determined by the jury, where a train was running 35 miles an hour, as to whether this rate of speed was so excessive as to constitute a lack of due caution. In the present case the circumstances required the jury to determine whether the train was running at so excessive a speed as to constitute negligence. It was an unusually foggy morning. The defendant engineer admitted he could not see more than 120 feet ahead of his engine. The train was 25 minutes late. The plaintiff testified the train "was going fast." Hawkins said: "It was going fast. * * * Well, I should judge, we will say 30 miles an hour, 35 or 40 maybe, I don't know how fast." The engineer said he was running 25 or 30 miles an hour, and the moment he saw the automobile on the track, he applied the emergency brakes, but the train ran some 500 feet before it was brought to a stop. Under such circumstances the question of excessive speed as an element of negligence was properly submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions.

The case of Diamond v. Weyerhaeuser, 178 Cal. 540, 174 P. 38, relied upon by appellants, is not applicable to the circumstances of the present case. That case merely held that evidence to the effect that an automobile was running within the limits of a city "very fast" would not support a claim that it was negligently traveling in violation of an ordinance which limited the speed to 20 miles an hour. In that case there were no facts indicating excessive speed or negligence on the part of the defendant, and a nonsuit was granted.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. Limitation of actions $\S$ 28(1)—Action for materials and labor held barred two or four years after plaintiff ceased work and rent for equipment and watchman's hire were due (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 339).

Cause of action on implied promise to pay for materials and labor in drilling oil wells held barred two or four years after cessation of work by plaintiff and after date when rent of equipment and watchman's hire were due, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 339.

3. Account stated $\S$ 5—Letter acknowledging receipt of statement showing balance due, and requiring plaintiff to explain account, was insufficient as account stated.

In action on an account stated for work done and materials furnished in drilling oil well, letter by defendant, acknowledging receipt of statement showing balance due, and stating that its directors would meet and consider matter, and that it would be necessary for plaintiff to explain some of items, and also objecting to time taken for work, did not meet requirements of an account stated, since not containing absolute acknowledgment of certain sum due.

4. Account stated $\S$ 5—Account stated presupposes admission of sum due and assent to correctness of balance.

Account stated presupposes, not only acknowledgment or admission of certain sum due on adjustment of accounts between parties, but striking of balance and assent, express or implied, to correctness of balance.

5. Account, action on $\S$ 18—Ledger sheets, showing no items of materials or services, and showing balancing of account and nothing due, was insufficient to establish cause of action on open book account.

In action for balance due on mutual open and current book account, ledger sheets showing no items of materials furnished or services rendered, but merely reciting numbers of job and amounts and balance of credits and debits, and showing no balance due, was insufficient to establish cause of action on mutual open account.

6. Account, action on $\S$ 23—Account stated $\S$ 20(3)—Work and labor $\S$ 30(4)—Finding that defendants within four years became indebted for materials and services requested and agreed to be paid was not finding of book account, account stated, nor that materials and services were reasonably worth judgment.

In action based on implied promise to pay for materials furnished and services rendered, finding that within four years past defendants became indebted for materials furnished and services rendered at defendants' special request, and that defendants agreed to pay for materials and services, was not finding of book account nor account stated nor that materials and services were reasonably worth amount for which judgment was rendered.

7. Limitation of actions $\S$ 197(1)—Finding that within four years defendants became indebted for materials and services held against evidence (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 339).

Finding that within four years last past defendants became indebted to plaintiff for materials furnished and services rendered held against evidence showing action was barred by both two and four year periods of limitation after furnishing of last item of materials, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 339.

8. Limitation of actions $\S$ 195(6)—Action for materials and labor to avoid bar of limitations must be based on open accounts, and plaintiff must show payments within four years and balance due.

To avoid statute of limitations, cause of action for materials furnished and labor performed must be based on open book account, and plaintiff must show payments by defendant within four years, and that balance is due.

9. Account, action on — Recovery on open book account requires showing of balance due.

To recover on open book account, balance due must be shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by J. M. Ough against the Ansonia Oil Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Earl S. Patterson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robert R. Moody, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this action plaintiff seeks to recover against the two defendant corporations for services alleged to have been rendered and materials furnished in connection with the drilling of certain oil wells and the cleaning out of a certain water well at Petaluma, Cal., during the year 1921.

A written contract was entered into between plaintiff and defendants on March 9, 1921, wherein it is provided that plaintiff is to place on the ground a complete Star drilling outfit capable of drilling at least 1,200 feet, and, as soon as the outfit is on the ground, to set it up with all possible speed consistent with careful work and commence to drill for oil; plaintiff to receive $35 per day for each working day of eight hours so long as the work shall continue, such payments to be made at the end of each period of ten days, the company to furnish certain materials and reserving the right to discontinue the work at any time, in which event the compensation of plaintiff ceases. On execution of the contract, the company paid plaintiff $1,000 on account.

Plaintiff commenced work under this contract and continued the work until about January 24, 1922, at which time he was notified by defendants to cease work on the oil wells he was drilling, and thereafter, until March 22, 1922, his equipment remained on the ground with a watchman. Plaintiff, by reason of being prevented by defendants from completing the contract, did not bring the action upon the written contract, but elected to sue on four different counts: (1) A common count in indebitatus assumpsit for materials furnished and services rendered; (2) an account stated; (3) for a balance due upon a mutual open and current account; and (4) a common count in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of the materials furnished and work and labor performed.

The answers of the defendants, each of which is the same, contain complete denials of the allegations of each count of the complaint, and in addition thereto, as separate and special defenses, pleaded the bar of the statute of limitations to each cause of action.

[1, 2] The first cause of action set forth in the complaint, which was filed June 22, 1926, is not based upon an agreement in writing, but upon an implied promise to pay. The time at which the statute begins to run is the date when the materials were furnished and the labor was performed. As stated, plaintiff ceased work January 24, 1922, and the rent of equipment and watchman's hire are charged as of dates between September, 1921, and March, 1922. The cause of action, therefore, under this count and the fourth count on a quantum meruit, was barred January 24, 1924, two years after the cessation of work by plaintiff, and on March 22, 1924, two years after the date the rent of equipment and watchman's hire were due. Code Civ. Proc. § 339. This would likewise be so if the period of limitation were four years; the action not being filed until June 22, 1926.

[3, 4] The second cause of action is on an account stated, and is based upon the following letter written by the secretary of defendant, the Ansonia Oil Company, to plaintiff, dated June 22, 1922, and reading as follows: "Your statement showing balance of $4,449.32 addressed to the Analy Oil Company has been received and referred to this company. The Board of Directors of this company will meet to consider this matter within a few days and then report to you. We note that one of your statements, dated December 15th, 1921, is not included in your former statement. These items of rent of rig, etc., do not come under the contract with the Analy Oil Company. The same items appear on your statement dated January 25th, 1922. It will be necessary for you to appear before our board when convenient to you to explain some of these items, also some of the items on your statement dated April 15th, 1922. The report we have on the moving of the rig from the property shows a great waste of time. In fact this entire job seems to have cost both this company and the Analy Company more than twice what it should. But we wish to be fair and right with you." This does not meet the requirements of an account stated. The law as to how an account stated may be created is plain and not subject to controversy under the authorities. A general statement of this law is found in 1 Cal. Jur. 189: "An account stated has been defined by Bouvier as 'an agreed balance of accounts; an account which has been examined and accepted by the parties,' and this definition is generally accepted as a correct one." An account stated presupposes, not only an acknowledgment or admission of a certain sum due on adjustment of accounts between the parties, but the striking of a balance, or an assent, express or implied, to the correctness of the balance. Beltaire v. Rosenberg, 129 Cal. 164, 61 P. 916. If the acknowledgment or admission is qualified, or if the debtor, as here, merely wrote that the statement of account would be considered, and that it would be necessary for the creditor to appear and explain the account, there is no account stated, as an account stated presupposes an absolute acknowledgment of a certain sum due. Craig v. Lee, 36 Cal. App. 335, 171 P. 1089. If the letter from the oil company to the plaintiff constituted an account stated, it would not be barred by the statute, but in our opinion it does not meet the requirements of an account stated. Furthermore, the court made no finding on this cause of action, and, if it had, the finding would have had to be against the plaintiff.

[5] As to the third cause of action for a balance due upon a mutual open and current book account, it may be said that the only proof of any books of account was two sheets of a ledger, an examination of which shows no items of materials furnished or services rendered, the charge side merely showing: "1921, April 26 Statement 317 and 320J 22, $1818.04; May 21, statement job 317 and 320 Apr 30 J 34, $1338.66; May 21, statement job 320 J 34 $421.68; Aug. 9, statement job 320 J 54, $2739.66"—which totals $6,318.04. As against these debits, the ledger sheets show a balance by credits, with the exception of $1,500, which was transferred on January 1, 1922, to the new ledger, which new ledger shows: "Jan. 1, 1922, balance on ledger J. V-7, $1500; to job 317 $350"—making the total debits $1,850. The credits show a like amount of $1,850, the account balanced, and nothing due.

[6] The findings and judgment are based upon the first cause of action, and are to the effect that within four years last past defendants became indebted "for materials furnished and services rendered" at defendants' special instance and request, and "that said defendants agreed to pay plaintiff for said materials furnished and services rendered." No other finding is made and such finding is not a finding of a book account, a finding on an account stated, nor that the materials furnished or services performed are reasonably worth the amount for which judgment is rendered.

[7] The finding that within four years last past defendants became indebted to plaintiff for materials furnished and services rendered is not supported, but on the contrary is against the evidence. Respondent concedes in his brief that "the plaintiff commenced work under this contract and continued the work under it until about January 24, 1922, at which time he was notified by defendants to cease work upon the oil wells which he was drilling under the contract, and thereafter until March 22, 1922, his equipment remained upon the ground with a watchman." Conceding the last item of "materials furnished and services rendered" to be March 22, 1922, the action is barred by both the two and four year periods of limitation.

[8, 9] To avoid the statute of limitations, respondent must base his cause of action upon an open book account, and must show payments made by defendant companies within four years, and that a balance is due. There are three credits on the ledger sheets: August 5, 1922, $100; August 31, 1922, $100, and October 14, 1922, $200—which are within the four-year period, but these payments, together with other payments made, aggregate the credit amount of $1,850, which balances the $1,850 debits. To recover, upon an open book account, it must show a balance due. Merchants' Collection Agency v. Levi, 32 Cal. App. 595, 163 P. 870.

There being no evidence to establish plaintiff's cause of action upon an account stated, the ledger sheets showing no balance due as claimed under his cause of action upon a mutual open and current account, and his causes of action upon an implied agreement to pay for materials furnished and services rendered and upon a quantum meruit being barred by the statute, the judgment must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

CLAREY v. SECURITY PORTLAND CEMENT CO., Inc., et al. (Civ. 6720.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 12, 1929.

1. Contracts ☞194—Agreement for royalty on cement produced until loan with interest is paid required payment of royalty on production during preceding month to be applied first to interest and then to principal.

Agreement providing that, in consideration of loan, cement manufacturer agreed to pay monthly royalty of five cents per barrel on all cement produced until full amount with 6 per cent. interest shall have been paid, held to show intention that manufacturer should pay each month sum equal to five cents per barrel of cement produced during preceding month, to be applied, first, to payment of interest at rate of 6 per cent. per annum and balance, if any, on principal of loan.

2. Contracts ☞10(6)—Agreement to pay royalty, on cement produced until loan was paid held not founded on mutual promises.

Where agreement provided that, in consideration of loan, manufacturer agreed to pay monthly royalty of five cents per barrel on all cement produced at plant until full amount, together with 6 per cent. interest, shall have been paid, agreement was not founded on mutual promises and doctrine of mutuality of obligation did not apply, in action to recover loan with interest.

3. Contracts $\S$ 314—If one voluntarily makes impossible performance of contract to pay loan and interest, he is immediately liable, though time for performance has not expired.

If one voluntarily puts it out of his power to perform contract to pay in consideration of loan certain amount per month, with interest until full amount is paid, he is immediately liable, though time specified for performance has not expired.

4. Contracts $\S$ 213(1)—Obligation to be performed on happening of contingency matures upon occurrence thereof.

Obligation which is to be performed on happening of contingency does not mature until occurrence of stipulated event.

5. Contracts $\S$ 313(2)—Obligation to repay loan dependent on production of cement being unilateral, failure to pay installments at maturity would not repudiate contract allowing full recovery contrary to terms.

Where agreement provided that, in consideration of loan, manufacturer agreed to pay royalty of five cents per barrel on all cement produced at plant until full amount, together with interest, is paid in monthly payments, so that production of cement was contingency on which depended obligation both as to amounts of installments and their maturity, obligation was unilateral, and failure to pay installment at maturity would not give promisee right to consider contract repudiated and to recover payment in full, contrary to its terms.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action by J. A. Clarey against the Security Portland Cement Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Sheran, Alvord & Hearn and Thos. H. Hearn, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. P. Butcher, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An action was brought by the plaintiff against appellant corporation, which is engaged in the manufacture of cement, to recover the sum of $5,000, with interest.

The court found that the plaintiff on July 26, 1926, loaned the above sum to the appellant; that the latter in consideration thereof agreed to repay the same in monthly installments, commencing on August 1, 1926, at the rate of five cents per barrel of cement produced, together with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable with each monthly installment of the principal sum. It was further found that appellant produced cement after August 1, 1926, and continued to do so from month to month; that it failed to pay any installment as provided by the agreement, except the sum of $27.26, which was not the full amount due at the rate of five cents per barrel for all cement produced, and did not include the agreed interest. The court further found the agreement to be without mutuality, uncertain and void, and "that there was a failure of consideration on the part of said defendant." Upon its findings, the court entered judgment against appellant for the full amount of the loan, with interest.

The following is the contract which appellant in consideration of the loan executed to the plaintiff:

"For and in consideration of loan of $5,000.00 the Security Portland Cement Co. Inc. agrees to pay a royalty of five cents per bbl. on all cement (commencing August 1st, 1926, and until paid), produced at their plant at Devore, San Bernardino county, California, until the full amount together with 6% interest shall have been paid. Payments on principal and interest on royalty account shall be paid monthly."

On December 13, 1926, appellant sent the following letter to the plaintiff:

"Dear Sir:—Below you will find statement of cement sold by barrels up to December 1st, 1926. There was very little cement manufactured in the month of October and so consequently it is included in November sales.

Am't sold bbls.	Royalty per bbl.	Am't due Clarey
545½	5c	$27.26

"Trusting that this statement is satisfactory, we are," etc.

A second letter inclosing a check was sent by appellant on December 14, 1926; this letter being as follows:

"Mr. J. A. Clarey, Santa Barbara, Calif. Dear Sir: Herewith our check in amount $27.26 to cover royalties due you for cement production to December 1st. Trusting that this slight delay and forwarding this check has not inconvenienced you greatly, and assuring you that the next royalty check due you will be forwarded by the 10th of the month, and that also it will be larger due to our increased production—

"Very truly yours," etc.

The last letter with the check was returned by the plaintiff, who wrote upon the letter the following: "Mr. G. F. Sondrake (General Manager): I herewith return check 1230 and letter until things are cleared up."

So far as shown, no other communications passed between the parties, and on December 15, 1926, the present action was commenced.

It appears that the plaintiff at or about the time when the loan was made was employed in some capacity in connection with the operation of appellant's plant. The capacity of the plant was from 150 to 200 barrels of cement per day, but the only evidence as to the amount of cement produced was the testimony of the company's manager. According to this evidence, no cement was produced between August 1, 1926, and October 7, 1926, but between the latter date and the middle of December, 1926, the production was about 2,000 barrels. How much of this was produced prior to December 1, 1926, the evidence does not show. The witness also testified that the plant was shut down some time during December, 1926, and from then until the date of the trial on February 4, 1927, no cement was produced; and, further, that it was the intention of the appellant to erect a larger plant, plans for the procurement of the capital necessary being then under way.

The foregoing is practically all the evidence as to the condition of appellant company, the past production, and its future prospects.

[1] We find nothing uncertain in the terms of the agreement. It was clearly the intention that the defendant should pay each month a sum equal to five cents per barrel of cement produced during the preceding month, this amount to be applied, first, to the payment of interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and the balance, if any, upon the principal of the loan.

[2] Nor can the contention that there was a lack of mutuality be sustained. The contract was not founded upon mutual promises, and the doctrine of mutuality of obligation is consequently inapplicable. Mathewson v. Fitch, 22 Cal. 86; Nevada Bank v. Steinmiz, 64 Cal. 301, 30 P. 970; Chrisman v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 83 Cal. App. 249, 256 P. 618; Noble v. Reid-Avery Co. (Cal. App.) 264 P. 341. As said in 1 Williston on Contracts, § 140, p. 314: "It is often stated as if it were a requisite in the formation of contracts that there must be mutuality. This form of statement is likely to cause confusion, and, however limited, is at best an unnecessary way of stating that there must be a valid consideration. In unilateral contracts there is never mutuality of obligation; and in bilateral agreements, though it is necessary that there shall be such a promise on each side as will furnish valid consideration, to express the idea by saying that mutuality is necessary is sure to cause confusion with the use of the same word by courts of equity."

* * * The particular error which is traceable to the misleading use of the word as a requirement for the formation of a contract is a tendency observable in some of the cases to hold a contract invalid because the obligation undertaken on one side is not commensurate with that undertaken on the other. * * *

[3-5] While it is probable that the appellant produced less cement than was anticipated at the time the loan was made, nothing in the evidence supports the conclusion that there was a failure of consideration. It is the rule that, if one voluntarily puts it out of his power to perform a contract of this character, he is immediately liable, though the time specified for performance has not expired. Wolf v. Marsh, 54 Cal. 228; Bagley v. Cohen, 121 Cal. 604, 53 P. 1117; Carter v.

Rhodes, 135 Cal. 46, 66 P. 985. But here, so far as shown, no act of the kind was done or contemplated, and the defendant in good faith and with reasonable diligence was proceeding with its operations. Subject to the above rule, an obligation which is to be performed upon the happening of a contingency does not mature until the occurrence of the stipulated event (Hathaway v. Patterson, 45 Cal. 294; McAfee v. Fisher, 64 Cal. 246, 30 P. 811; Lynch v. Keystone Consol., etc., Co., 163 Cal. 690, 126 P. 968); and in the present case the production of cement was the contingency upon which depended appellant's obligation both as to the amounts of the installments to be paid and their maturity. This obligation, however, being unilateral, a failure to pay an installment at maturity would not give the promisee the right to consider the contract repudiated and to recover payment in full contrary to its terms. Flinn & Treacy v. Mowry, 131 Cal. 481, 63 P. 724, 1006. It may be, as found by the court, that more cement was produced between the date of the agreement and December 1, 1926, than that stated in the letter from the defendant. The amount, however, the evidence leaves uncertain, and no finding thereon was made.

In view of the foregoing, the conclusions of the trial court cannot be sustained, and the judgment is accordingly reversed.

GEORGE et ux. v. CHAPLIN et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 3, 1929.

1. Master and servant ⇨316(1)—"Independent contractor" is one exercising independent employment and representing employer only as to results of work, not as to means whereby accomplished.

An "independent contractor" is one who, in rendering services, exercises an independent employment and represents employer only as to results of his work, and not as to means whereby it is to be accomplished, and, when essential object of employment is performance of the work, relation of master and servant does not exist, unless employer retains right to direct mode and manner of doing work.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Independent Contractor.]

2. Master and servant ⇨318(1)—Test whether relationship is that of "independent contractor" or master and servant is whether employee is subject to employer's control and liable to discharge.

Real test to determine whether relationship is that of independent contractor or master and servant is whether employee is subject to employer's order and control, and is liable to be discharged for disobedience or misconduct, and fact that a certain amount of freedom of action is inherent in nature of work does not change character of employment, where employer has general supervision and control thereof.

3. Master and servant ⚡318(1)—In absence of express stipulation, existence of employer's right to control manner of work must be determined by reasonable inferences from circumstances.

On issue whether relationship is that of independent contractor or master and servant, existence of right of employer to control manner of doing the work must be determined by reasonable inferences drawn from the circumstances shown, in absence of express stipulation in respect thereto.

4. Automobiles ⚡245(32)—Evidence held to present jury question whether automobile salesman, whose negligence caused automobile accident, was defendants' employee or independent contractor.

In action for injuries sustained in automobile accident caused by negligence of defendants' automobile salesman, evidence held sufficient to present question for jury as to whether salesman was defendants' employee or independent contractor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Homer R. Spence, Judge.

Action by Clarence George and wife against D. H. Chaplin and another, individually, and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Chaplin Motor Sales Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, and Donahue, Hynes & Hamlin, of Oakland, for appellants.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin and Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. An action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff Georgie George and for the expense incurred in that connection by her husband.

The injuries arose out of an automobile accident, and were caused by the negligence of Robert Simmons, who is alleged to have been the agent and servant of appellants, Chaplin. A jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs and, a motion for a new trial having been denied, an appeal was taken from the judgment.

Appellants contend that the implied finding that Simmons was their servant is unsupported, and that the evidence shows that he was an independent contractor.

Appellants are dealers in automobiles. From the month of September, 1925, to and including the date of the accident, which happened on February 10, 1926, Simmons, who was a salesman, had been engaged in selling the automobiles owned and dealt in by appellants. Simmons testified that he was paid a commission on cars sold by him; that he was required to report daily at 9 o'clock a. m. at appellants' salesroom, at which hour sales conferences were held, and to spend portions of certain days, as directed by appellants, at the salesroom for the purpose of showing visitors the cars placed therein for sale; that his duties included the appraisalment of cars taken by appellants in trade; that he received instructions from their sales manager, and on occasions used for demonstration purposes cars owned by them. According to the testimony of one of the appellants, their salesmen were subject to discharge at any time, and it was testified by their sales manager that salesmen were expected to render reports as to how their time was spent and as to prospective customers and the persons interviewed, and also that a salesman "could go and come as he pleased, but he had to keep in contact with the office." Each salesman was required to purchase a car from appellants, and on January 15, 1926, Simmons executed a contract for the purchase on installments of an automobile from them, the title to which they retained. After its execution, he continued to use for demonstration purposes other cars owned by appellants, but the latter allowed him $10 per month for the use for that purpose of the car contracted for, and that at the time of the accident he was demonstrating this car to the plaintiffs, who were riding therein. No part of the purchase price of the automobile, which exceeded $1,600, was paid, and shortly after the accident the car was repossessed by appellants. Certain of the salesmen employed by appellants, including Simmons, were required to sign what appellants called their pay roll instructions. This paper stated the percentage of commission to be paid on cars sold; provided for the monthly allowance above mentioned; and also provided for a monthly deduction from the commissions earned until a certain sum had been accumulated, which was to be retained by appellants until the termination of the employment. Other than the above, the terms of the employment were oral.

The foregoing is, in substance, the evidence from which the jury concluded that Simmons was a servant, and not an independent contractor.

ner of doing the work (Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 159 P. 721). The real test is whether the employee is subject to the employer's order and control and is liable to be discharged for disobedience or misconduct; and the fact that a certain amount of freedom of action is inherent in the nature of the work does not change the character of the employment where the employer has general supervision and control of it. Cameron v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 83, 159 P. 149; Sumner v. Nevin, 4 Cal. App. 347, 87 P. 1105.

[3,4] So far as shown, there was no express stipulation as to the right of the employer to control the mode and manner of doing the work; and, in the absence of such a stipulation, the existence or nonexistence of the right must be determined by reasonable inferences drawn from the circumstances shown. Press Publishing Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 190 Cal. 114, 210 P. 820. The fact that Simmons at the time of the accident was furnishing his own transportation did not affect his status as an employee (Press Publishing Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., supra; Eng-Skell Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 44 Cal. App. 210, 186 P. 163; and it has been held that evidence that the employer might terminate the employment at any time tended to negative the independence of the employee. Press Publishing Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., supra; Brown v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 174 Cal. 457, 163 P. 664. The writing, which was signed by Simmons alone, was silent as to the mode or manner of doing the work, contained no provisions respecting its supervision or direction, and was manifestly not intended to be a complete statement of the rights and obligations of the parties. Under such circumstances, where from the evidence different conclusions might be drawn, the question whether the right to direct the manner of doing the work was reserved by the employer was one for the jury. Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 P. 50; Sacchi v. Bayside Lumber Co., 13 Cal. App. 72, 108 P. 885.

Appellants, in support of their contention, rely upon the case of Barton v. Studebaker Corporation, etc., 46 Cal. App. 707, 189 P. 1025. There it was held that a salesman employed on commission, with no salary or fixed hours, and over whom the employer exercised no authoritative control, was an independent contractor, for whose negligence the defendant was not liable. In the present case, however, many circumstances are disclosed by the evidence, which strongly tend to prove that the right was claimed, and that such control was exercised by appellants, to the extent at least that the character of the employment made reasonably possible. From the facts shown, the inference was not unreasonable that, subject to the freedom of action inherent in the employment, it was understood that the right to direct the manner of performance was reserved by appellants. The question was properly submitted to the jury (Majors v. Connor, 162 Cal. 131, 121 P. 371; Buckley v. Harkens, 114 Wash. 468, 195 P. 250), and their conclusion is supported by the evidence.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 9, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 3, 1929.

1. Chattel mortgages ⇨287—Mortgagor does not become liable for debt secured, in absence of promise to pay it (Civ. Code, §§ 2890, 2928).

Mortgagor of personal property does not become liable for debt secured, in absence of promise to pay it, under Civ. Code, §§ 2890, 2928.

2. Corporations ⇨657(4)—Mortgagor corporation's failure to file articles with secretary of state did not make corporation's obligation enforceable against one having no interest in corporation who joined as mortgagor (St. 1915, p. 422, § 1, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1034).

That foreign corporation executing mortgage failed to file copy of its articles with secretary of state, as required by St. 1915, p. 422, § 1, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1034, did not make obligation of corporation enforceable against one joining in mortgage but having no interest in corporation and receiving no benefit from transaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by W. J. Morgan against Richard E. Callahan and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed.

Nelson & Nelson, of San Francisco, for appellants.

H. L. McAllister, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action is one to recover sums aggregating $4,532.87 loaned by the plaintiff to the Radio-Therapy Corporation, a Nevada corporation. To evidence portions of the amount loaned, two promissory notes were executed to the plaintiff on behalf of the corporation—the first, for $2,500, was executed by defendant Richard E. Callahan and C. R. Gailfres as its president and secretary, respectively; and the second, for $1,771.11, by Richard E. Callahan as president and Miriam A. Callahan as its secretary, no note being executed for the balance of the loan. As security for the several notes, two chattel mortgages were executed by the same officers of the corporation, neither of which contained a covenant to pay the debt. In the mortgage securing the first note, defendant Mathilde P. Callahan joined with the corporation as a mortgagor. The plaintiff, as grounds for recovery, alleged that the loans were made at the request of defendants Callahan, and were induced by the false and fraudulent representations of Richard E. Callahan, the president of the corporation, as to his own financial condition and that of the corporation, which the plaintiff believed and upon which he relied in making the loans; that, contrary to his agreement to use these sums to reorganize the corporation under the laws of California, Callahan diverted the same to other corporate purposes; that the latter, in addition to this agreement, promised to issue to the plaintiff certain stock of the new corporation, neither of which promises did he perform or intend to perform when the same were made; and, further, that the plaintiff had given notice of rescission upon the above grounds.

The court found in accordance with the complaint and that the plaintiff had promptly rescinded. Judgment was entered against the defendants for the amounts loaned with interest, from which they appeal.

They contend that the findings are unsupported, and that the conclusions of the trial court thereon are against law.

As to defendants corporation and Richard E. Callahan, it will be sufficient to say that a careful reading of the evidence shows the findings as to the acts and representations of the latter to be fully supported, and a review thereof would answer no useful purpose.

[1, 2] As to defendant Mathilde P. Callahan, however, a different situation is presented. So far as shown, she had no interest in the corporation, nor does it appear that her husband, Richard E. Callahan, represented her in any of the transactions with the plaintiff. Furthermore, the record wholly fails to disclose any evidence that she met or conversed with the plaintiff previous to the making of the loans, nor was it shown that she had any interest in the mortgaged property; the only reason for her signing the mortgage being, as testified by the plaintiff, that he specially requested it. The object of the request does not appear, but it is clear that no part of the money was received by her, and it is not contended that she derived a benefit from the transaction.

It is well settled that a mortgagor of real or personal property does not become liable for the debt secured in the absence of a promise to pay the same. Civil Code, §§ 2890, 2928; Garretson Investment Co. v. Arndt, 144 Cal. 64, 77 P. 770. The corporation, however, failed to file a copy of its articles with the secretary of state of California, and respondent contends that a section of the statute in effect at the time of the transaction, which provided that "in addition to the penalty herein provided every contract made by or on behalf of any such foreign corporation affecting the personal liability thereof or relating to property within the state shall be held void on its behalf and on behalf of its assigns, but shall be enforceable against it or them" (St. 1915, p. 422, § 1, as amended, St. 1923, p. 1034), makes the obligation of the corporation enforceable against Mrs. Callahan.

We find no merit in this contention, as no contract was made by her on its behalf, nor did she by any act represent the corporation; her only connection with the transaction being to mortgage her interest, if any, in the property described as security for its obligation, no part of which did she agree to perform.

For the above reasons, the judgment as to defendants Richard E. Callahan and Radio-Therapy Corporation, a corporation, is affirmed, and, as to defendant Mathilde P. Callahan, it is reversed.

PEOPLE v. KINSER. (Cr. 1787.)

1. Infants $\hookrightarrow$ 20—Evidence held to sustain conviction of defendant charged with contributing to minor's delinquency (St. 1915, p. 1225, § 21).

In prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor, as prohibited by St. 1915, p. 1225, § 21, evidence held to sustain conviction as against defendant taxi driver claiming he merely drove parties to address where alleged acts took place.

2. Infants $\hookrightarrow$ 20—Information alleging that defendants gave minor intoxicating liquor and left her in man's room held to charge offense of contributing to minor's delinquency (Juvenile Act, § 21).

Information alleging, in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor, that minor was taken riding by defendants, who gave her intoxicating liquor, made her drunk, and left her in man's room, did not fail to charge offense under Juvenile Act (St. 1915, p. 1225) § 21, providing that any person who shall commit act or omit performance of duties tending to encourage person under 21 years of age to do any act or follow any course of conduct within provisions of act shall be guilty of misdemeanor.

3. Infants $\hookrightarrow$ 20—That minor, in prosecution for contributing to delinquency, suffered no harm, held not available as defense (Juvenile Act, § 21).

That minor, in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor, under Juvenile Act (St. 1915, p. 1225) § 21, suffered no harm from alleged association with defendant, was not available as defense.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; James L. Allen, Judge.

J. B. Kinser was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George W. Rochester, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant, together with two codefendants, was charged by information filed in the superior court of Orange county with having contributed to the delinquency of a minor, and appeals from the judgment of the superior court finding him guilty as charged. The grounds assigned for reversal are asserted insufficiency of the information and of the evidence.

Briefly stated, it was alleged that J. B. Talley, Lucy Martinez, and Kinser did willfully and unlawfully contribute to the delinquency of a female minor child, to wit, Irene Parra, aged 16 years, said minor child then and there coming within the provisions of the Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1225); that they placed said minor in danger of leading an idle, dissolute, lewd, and immoral life, by giving her intoxicating liquor and causing her to become drunk, and by taking her to the apartment of the defendant Talley and there leaving her alone in a room with him.

The defendants Talley and Martinez pleaded guilty, and the latter testified on behalf of the people. It is appellant's contention, principally, that, under numerous authorities cited in his behalf, the evidence is not alone insufficient to support the judgment, but was such as to require an acquittal. It is insisted in his business of driving taxis he merely answered a call, drove the parties to destinations requested by them and that, while liquor was consumed and the minor may have imbibed to excess, he was not the instigator, nor aider of the commission of any offense, and that in any event the minor did not become delinquent.

The positive testimony of six witnesses called by the people, including Irene Parra, is to the effect that on or about January 10, 1929, Lucy Martinez telephoned a taxi company for whom Kinser was a chauffeur and with whom she had previously ridden without charge; that they drove to the home of Miss Parra, where she joined them, and thence to the center of the city of Santa Ana, where they picked up Talley, whereupon the men and the two girls drove to Talley's apartment. Miss Martinez said to Talley, who was waiting for them on a street corner, "Well, I got a partner for you," and at his apartment she asked him if he had any wine, to which he replied in the affirmative, produced a bottle, and they all drank the contents. Soon afterwards Talley suggested that Miss Parra go to another room with him, which she hesitated to do, but the Martinez woman told her to "go on, he won't hurt you," and she complied. Other occurrences between them were excluded from the record, it appearing that they were in a separate room, with the door closed. Thereafter Kinser suggested that he drive the girls about town in the air to "sober up," though each denied that she was intoxicated at the time. Accordingly, they left Talley at home, drove toward Balboa and at a house or service station Kinser obtained a bottle of gin, which he and his two companions drank, and, after driving around, Irene Parra was returned to her home so intoxicated that she was unable to proceed from the machine to her house without assistance. Two physicians who examined her testified that she was in a comatose condition and could not be aroused; that her breath smelled strongly of alcohol, her pulse was above normal, her eyes were glassy; and, when they were asked if she was slightly or considerably intoxicated, stated that she was "considerably so."

[1] Owing to the illiteracy of witnesses and the inexperience of the minor, there is much apparent conflict in their testimony. Miss Martinez swore that the beverage supplied by Talley at his apartment was gin, while other evidence tended to show that it was wine. Appellant vigorously denied all of the foregoing statements of witnesses under oath which tended to connect him with any wrongdoing, and their testimony is branded as perjured and unreliable. It is quite plainly to be observed from the record that the girls were of foreign extraction and in some instances failed to understand, but in the main their ultimate answers harmonized and were corroborated by many unquestioned circumstances. Appellant also corroborated their testimony in substantial detail, but his memory was remarkably vague as to essential acts and circumstances in his immediate presence. His flat denials of the testimony of other witnesses, tending to show culpability, were not corroborated. In this state of the record we are neither authorized nor inclined to disturb the conclusion of the trial court that the evidence preponderated against innocence. It is argued for appellant that he was a mere innocent bystander and a victim of circumstances, and that he was not responsible for the derelictions of his fares, since, under cited authority, participation in the commission of an offense may not be legally inferred from unavoidable presence and observation of its perpetration. But eyewitnesses testified to facts which constituted him a participant in procuring, drinking, and sharing the liquors with Irene Parra and two other persons and in driving them about without charge. Surely, it cannot be urged with sincerity that these are necessary adjuncts to his vocation as driver of a public conveyance for hire.

[2, 3] With the remaining points, that the information failed to charge an offense as contemplated by the Juvenile Act, and that evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction because Irene Parra was induced to embark upon a first escapade, and that there is no evidence that she became morally depraved because of her experience, we cannot coincide. It was alleged, and the evidence strongly tended to show, that the minor was taken riding by the three defendants, who gave her intoxicating liquor, made her drunk, and guided her into the apartment of one of the men, with whom she was left alone, in one of the rooms. It also appears that when she was returned to her parents she was helpless, and that she was unconscious when examined. Section 21 of the act provides that any person who shall commit any act or omit the performance of her duty, which act or omission tends to cause or encourage a person under 21 years of age to do any act or follow any course of conduct within the provisions of said act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. In response to the contention that the prosecuting witness suffered no harm from alleged associations with the defendant, and that there was no proof that she was a delinquent, a like defense was rejected in People v. Cohen, 62 Cal. App. 521, 217 P. 78, 80. As was there said:

"On the other hand, we are of the opinion that the law, in providing that a person shall be deemed guilty of violating the statute when he commits any act which causes, or manifestly tends to cause, a person under the age of 21 years to come within the provisions of section 1 thereof, means that his guilt attaches whenever he commits such an act, independent of the success of his efforts or its effect upon the minor.

"The purpose of the juvenile law as now framed, as we have already seen, is to protect the youth of our state from those evil and designing persons who would lead them astray, and we are not disposed to in any way impair its usefulness by giving any narrow or strained construction to any of its plain and obvious provisions."

People v. Hemma (Cal. App.) 270 P. 457, and other decisions since the amendment of the statute, have been unanimous in holding that its provisions are intended to be preventative and protective, and that to hold that a conviction thereunder must depend upon proof of the accomplishment of the wrong against which its framers sought to provide a safeguard would often practically result in its nullification.

The judgment is affirmed.

GALLAGHER v. VOYCE et al. (Civ. 6660.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 12, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1058(1)—Excluding document showing mathematical calculation by witness, if error, held not prejudicial; witness having testified.

In action for assessment for installing certain street work, error, if any, excluding document made by one of defendant's witnesses in nature of extended mathematical calculation, held not prejudicial where witness testified.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨493(6)—Property owner appealing from assessment for certain street work could not attack it, where he did not prosecute appeal which was denied.

Where street work was done under ordinance providing that board of public works would make assessment and that if assessment is claimed incorrect property owner might within 30 days appeal to board of supervisors, property owner whose property was assessed for improvement held not entitled to attack assessment, where he did not prosecute appeal and appeal was denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by E. J. Gallagher against Alfred Voyce, Jr., and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Raymond D. Williamson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Oscar Samuels and Jacob Samuels, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to recover the amount of an assessment alleged to be due him as contractor for installing certain street work. The defendants appeared and answered. Their answer contained certain denials and also pleaded affirmatively other defenses. Among the affirmative defenses was the claim that the assessment was excessive. A trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendant Voyce has appealed.

[1] The defendant contends that the trial court erred in sustaining an objection to the introduction by the defendant of evidence tending to show that the amount sued for by the plaintiff was an overcharge. The plaintiff makes two replies. He asserts that the trial court did not make the ruling complained of, and, in the second place, if it did, the ruling was correct. Both replies are sustained by the record. As to the matter of excluding proof the record clearly shows that the trial court offered to allow the proof to be made and that the actual adverse ruling of which the defendant complains consisted of an order excluding a document made by one of the defendant's witnesses and which was in the nature of an extended mathematical calculation. The witness having testified, an exclusion of his notes was not error, and if it was, the error was not prejudicial.

[2] Taking up the second reply, it should be remarked that the work was done under Ordinance No. 4720, N. S. It is unnecessary to recite all of the provisions of that ordinance. It is sufficient to remark that it is provided in the ordinance that at a certain time the board of public works will make the assessment; that if the assessment is claimed to be incorrect or illegal any property owner may, within 30 days, appeal to the board of supervisors; that the board of supervisors is vested with power to "confirm, amend, set aside, alter, modify or correct the assessment"; and that "all the decisions and determinations of the supervisors, upon notice and hearing aforesaid, shall be final and conclusive. * * *" It was an admitted fact that the defendant appealed but did not prosecute his appeal, and that his appeal was denied. However, it was his claim that he did not discover the facts showing an excessive charge until his appeal was denied. Neither by pleading nor proof did the defendant show any right to attack the assessment. Lambert v. Bates, 137 Cal. 677, 678, 70 P. 777.

We find no error in the record.

LOS ANGELES CITY SCHOOL DIST. OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. TUCKER et al. (Civ. 3756.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 11, 1929.

Mechanics' liens ⇨113(2)—Materialman's stop notice filed June 8, 1925, held timely as within 30 days, where completion notice was filed May 9, 1925.

Where stop notice was filed by materialman on June 8, 1925, and notice of completion was not filed until May 9, 1925, stop notice was timely, and surety for alteration and repair of school building was liable to materialman who had 30 days after filing of notice of completion of contract within which to file stop notice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 278 P. 507.

W. I. Gilbert, Kenneth Keeper, and Wilson, Haas & Stevens, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dana R. Weller and Glen Behymer, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

G. C. Mansfield, of Los Angeles, for defendant.

Everett W. Mattoon, of Los Angeles, for city school district.

Harry G. Sadicoff, of Los Angeles, for cross-defendants Harris & Harris.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing is denied.

Appellant contends in the petition for a rehearing that the Noyes Marble & Tile Company is not entitled to judgment because its stop notice was not filed in time. This point was not urged in the original briefs. There is, however, no merit in this contention. The Noyes Marble & Tile Company had thirty days after filing of notice of completion of contract within which to file its stop notice. Bird v. American Surety Co., 175 Cal. 625, 166 P. 1009; Hughes Mfg. & Lumber Co. v. Hathaway, 174 Cal. 44, 161 P. 1159; Simons Brick Co. v. Hetzel et al., 72 Cal. App. 1, 236 P. 357.

The notice of completion was not filed until May 9, 1925, and said stop notice was filed June 8, 1925; therefore the stop notice was in time, and the surety is liable to Noyes Marble & Tile Company.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 10, 1929.

1. Jury ⇨25(8)—Denial of defendant's motion for jury trial, not limited to counts pleading actions at law, held not error, where certain counts were equitable.

Where complaint, in action to quiet title to realty, was in five counts, some of which were equitable, trial court's denial of defendant's motion demanding jury trial was not error, where motion was so broad as not to be addressed to counts pleading actions at law.

2. Trial ⇨396(2)—Special finding entirely without issues made by pleadings was nugatory.

Alleged special finding, which was entirely without the issues made by the pleadings, was nugatory and of no service to either party.

3. Trial ⇨404(1)—Findings should be construed to support, rather than to overthrow, judgment, if possible.

Trial court's findings should be construed, if possible, to support, rather than to overthrow, judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Gloria Whittier, an infant, by John R. Tyrrell, as her guardian, against Henry Auth. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Reisner & Deming, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Kington & Cunningham, Leo A. Cunningham, Frank V. Kington, and Thomas M. Foley, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant, and later she filed an amended complaint. The amended complaint was answered; a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. It made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff, and from the judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed.

[1] The plaintiff is the daughter and adopted daughter of Alice V. Whittier, deceased, and claims title under a deed executed December 1, 1922, by the terms of which decedent conveyed to plaintiff's father, and later, on October 31, 1927, be conveyed to the plaintiff. The defendant is the second husband of the deceased, and claims title under a deed dated April 23, 1926. The last-named deed recites that it was made " * * * for and in consideration of the love and affection which the said party of the first part has and bears unto the said party of the second part and for the trust I repose in him that he will care for my child Alicia Gloria Whittier, does by these presents give, grant," etc. In her complaint the plaintiff inserted five different counts: The first was to remove a cloud on the title to real property; the second was to quiet title to real property; the third was to cancel a deed to real property because of undue influence exercised in the execution thereof; the fourth was to impress a trust on real property; and the fifth was for recovery of chattels with alternative damages. The action was tried on the 14th day of December, 1927. On the 29th day of November, the defendant made a written demand "that the above-entitled cause be tried before a jury; and said defendant does hereby demand a jury trial in said cause." The motion was denied. The defendant claims that the court erred in denying his motion. The plaintiff calls to our attention the fact that some of the counts were distinctly equitable, and all counts were in one and the same action, and that the motion made by the defendant was so broad as not to be addressed to the counts pleading actions at law. The plaintiff then asserts that the ruling was not error, and she cites and relies on Meek v. De Latour, 2 Cal. App. 261, 83 P. 300; 35 C. J. 217. The court did not err in making the ruling.

icized he claims to be a special finding. Thereupon he argues that the special finding controls the general findings, and that the judgment as entered should have been in his favor instead of being against him. The vice in this argument is that the so-called special finding was entirely without the issues made by the pleadings, is nugatory, and of no service to either party. Again, the alleged special finding is one of several findings, all of which were made of and concerning a deed dated December 1, 1922, which was made by the decedent and which is one of the deeds in the plaintiff's chain of title. The pleadings, the evidence, and the findings are harmonious as showing that on the 1st day of December, 1922, the decedent caused to be written, signed, and acknowledged a deed in favor of Vernon S. Whittier, the father of this plaintiff, and that said deed was delivered to John R. Tyrrell, Esq., as the agent of the grantee, to be held by him and recorded upon the death of the grantor. It may be conceded that the pleadings and the findings are slightly ambiguous, but the ambiguity is such that it readily disappears on taking up the findings and comparing one with the other. The findings should be construed, if possible, to support, rather than to overthrow, the judgment. In the instant case, if we follow that rule, the contention of the defendant must be decided against him.

The court made a finding to the effect that the damages amounted to $3,600. Claiming that the judgment should have been in his favor as to the title, the defendant asserts that the plaintiff suffered no damage. However, the trial court made a finding that the title rested in the plaintiff; therefore the defendant's claim is without merit. In this connection the defendant asserts that there is no evidence in the record that the rental value of the real property was $200 per month, but an examination of the record discloses that at least one witness gave direct and positive testimony supporting the finding.

The defendant objects to the finding regarding the title to the personal property and the value thereof as set forth in the fifth count. The plaintiff recites facts occurring since the entry of the judgment, and stipulates that the judgment may be modified in so far as it awards damages against the defendant for the value of the personal property by deducting therefrom $1,000. The point has become a moot question.

The last point made by the defendant is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the deceased was of unsound mind when she deeded the property to the defendant, or that she was acting under undue influence, or that defendant practiced fraud in obtaining this deed. In reply, the plaintiff claims that there were conflicts in the evidence, and that the defendant did not sustain the burden of proof resting on him when it transpired that the deed in his favor was made without consideration, and that the grantor and grantee were husband and wife. After examining the record, we are unable to say that the trial court erred in making a finding in favor of the plaintiff to the effect that, when the deceased executed the deed dated April 23, 1926, to the defendant, she was of unsound mind, was acting under undue influence, and that defendant practiced fraud in obtaining this deed. But, be that as it may, the findings attacked were not prejudicial when considered with the rest of the findings. The court also made findings in favor of the plaintiff on the count which pleaded an action to quiet title. The count was fully proved, and on the findings based on that count alone the judgment must necessarily have been for the plaintiff.

Acting on the stipulation above mentioned, $1,000 is deducted from the judgment, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed. The plaintiff will recover her costs on this appeal.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 5, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 3, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Mandamus ⇨79—School teacher may enforce legal rights by writ of mandate.

Writ of mandate furnishes proper remedy by which legal rights of school teacher may be enforced.

2. Mandamus ⇨13—Permanent teacher seeking to enforce right to active service in school district need not appeal to county superintendent before applying for mandamus (Pol. Code, § 1609(e)).

Permanent teacher under Pol. Code, § 1609(e), seeking to assert legal right to be assigned to active service within district, need not appeal to county superintendent of schools before applying for mandamus, in view of section 1609, providing that nothing in act shall be construed to deprive teacher of rights and remedies in court of competent jurisdiction on question of fact or law.

3. Schools and school districts ⇨136—School board has no arbitrary authority to assign teacher to unsanitary school or where pupils are afflicted with contagious disease, nor to some useless task.

While school board possesses exclusive province of assigning teacher to specific work within limitations prescribed by law and reason, board has no arbitrary authority to assign teacher to school where sanitary conditions will endanger her health or life nor to school wherein pupils are afflicted with contagious disease, nor to idle and useless task of continuously sitting around waiting room.

4. Schools and school districts ⇨141(4)—School board may not deprive teacher of status as permanent teacher for refusal to comply with unreasonable or dangerous assignments (Pol. Code, § 1609(e)).

School board has no legal authority to prefer charges against teacher and deprive her of her lawful status as permanent teacher under Pol. Code, § 1609(e), for refusal to comply with unreasonable or dangerous assignments.

5. Schools and school districts ⇨136—School board in classifying and assigning teacher must act in good faith and in accordance with law (Teachers' Tenure Act, Pol. Code, § 1609, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1913).

Action of school board in classifying and assigning teacher to specific work must be performed in good faith and in accordance with Teachers' Tenure Act, Pol. Code, § 1609, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1913, prescribing manner in which board may classify substitute, probationary, and permanent teachers.

6. Schools and school districts ⇨136—Permanent teacher is entitled to active employment (Pol. Code, § 1609(e)).

School teacher classified as permanent under Pol. Code, § 1609(e), is entitled to active employment.

7. Schools and school districts ⇨136—Marriage of permanent teacher held not to warrant board in transferring her to tubercular institution in another county in which elementary classes were maintained (Pol. Code, §§ 1609(e), 1618b as added by St. 1927, p. 261).

Where school teacher having status as permanent teacher under Pol. Code, § 1609(e), married, marriage not being legal ground for forfeiture of status as permanent teacher held not to warrant school board transferring teacher to district in another county where elementary department was maintained in tubercular institution, pursuant to Pol. Code, § 1618b, as added by St. 1927, p. 261, though retaining of teacher's services in district would necessitate suspension of some other teacher or incur likelihood of another mandamus proceeding.

8. Schools and school districts ⇨136—School board held not authorized to assign permanent teacher to tubercular sanatorium in another county without her consent (Pol. Code, §§ 1609(b), 1609(e), 1618b, as added by St. 1927, p. 261).

Pol. Code, § 1609(b), authorizing school board to fix and prescribe duties of teachers in school district, and section 1618b, as added by St. 1927, p. 261, authorizing school district to maintain at tubercular institution elementary classes for inmates thereof, and providing that classes shall be considered part of school system of district establishing them, held not to authorize school board to assign permanent teacher, under section 1609(e), to position as teacher in such sanatorium in another county without her consent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the appellants, as directors of the school board, to assign the petitioner to teach in the elementary department of the Stockton school district.

The petitioner is classified as a permanent teacher in the elementary department of the Stockton school district pursuant to section 1609(e) of the Political Code of California. She taught acceptably for seven consecutive years in that department of the Lafayette school in the city of Stockton. Prior to the end of the school year of 1928, the petitioner married, and the appellants then requested her to tender her resignation as a teacher in that district, which she declined to do. In March, 1928, pursuant to statute, San Joaquin and Calaveras counties jointly established and are maintaining within the boundaries of the Murphy's school district of Calaveras county a free tubercular hospital and sanatorium. In this sanatorium there are about 25 children of school age who are not afflicted with the disease, but who have tubercular tendencies and who are therefore segregated from the actual tubercular patients. Pursuant to section 1618b of the Political Code, as added by St. 1927, p. 261, the appellants, as trustees of the Stockton school district, established and are maintaining elementary classes in that sanatorium for the education of these children, who are inmates thereof, and in August, 1928, assigned the petitioner to teach therein. It is conceded that the petitioner is entitled to maintain her status as a permanent instructor under the Teachers' Tenure Act of California (section 1609 of the Political Code as amended by St. 1927, p. 1913) in the Stockton school district, and that she is entitled to draw her salary therefor. The petitioner asserts that she is entitled to be assigned to active service in the elementary department of some school within the Stockton school district, and that the trustees have no legal authority to assign her to teach outside of that district, or in the tubercular sanatorium in Murphy's school district of Calaveras county.

[1, 2] The writ of mandate furnishes the proper remedy by means of which the legal rights of a teacher may be enforced. It is not necessary, under such facts as are presented in the present petition, to first appeal to the county superintendent of schools. The application for the writ was therefore not premature. Saxton v. Board of Education of Los Angeles County School Dist. (Cal. Sup.) 276 P. 998. Section 1609 of the Political Code provides, with relation to the powers of school boards, in part: "Nothing in this act shall be construed in such manner as to deprive any teacher of his rights and remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of fact and law."

The appellants assert that the right to determine the nature and location of the teacher's assignment to services is exclusively vested in the school board acting in a quasi judicial capacity, with which province the courts have no right to interfere. In the appellants' brief it is said: "The right to assign teachers, and by this we here mean the right to direct teachers what service they shall perform in return for the salary paid them, is vested exclusively in the employing board, and whether a teacher is assigned to teach in the most desirable schoolroom in an exclusive residential district, or to teach in a shack in the slums, or to teach as a substitute, or to sit in the waiting room of the board and there await the further pleasure of the board, is a right and discretion vested by the law in the board—and nowhere else."

[3-5] There is no doubt that within the limitations prescribed by law and reason the school board possesses the exclusive province of assigning teachers to their specific work. But the board has no arbitrary authority to assign a teacher to a school where the sanitary conditions would endanger her health or life, nor to a school wherein the pupils are afflicted with a contagious disease, nor to the idle and useless task of continuously sitting around a waiting room. For the refusal on the part of the teacher to comply with such unreasonable or dangerous assignments, the board would have no legal authority to prefer charges against the teacher and deprive her of her lawful status as a permanent teacher. The action of the board in classifying and assigning a teacher to a specific work must be performed in good faith and in accordance with the law. Section 1609 of the Political Code prescribes the manner in which the board may classify substitute, probationary, and permanent teachers. The classification must be made in the manner here prescribed.

[6, 7] The wisdom of creating a permanent tenure of certain teachers is no longer an open question. The Legislature has conferred upon teachers, under specified circumstances, a vested right to be so classified and to teach as permanent instructors, in the particular district where this right has been secured, subject to such reasonable rules as may be adopted, which are not in conflict with law. Among these vested rights is the privilege of actually engaging in teaching. It would be a violation of good faith and contrary to the spirit of the law to relegate a permanent teacher to the idle and useless task of sitting around a waiting room. No other design could so successfully destroy the ambition of a teacher or advertise her inefficiency. As a permanent teacher she is entitled to active employment. The efficiency and fitness of the petitioner in the present case is conceded. After seven years' service in the Stockton schools, there is no criticism of her ability or fitness. Since no other reason is assigned, it must be inferred that the only objection to the petitioner continuing in her former assignment is because she married. The transfer to a class in a tubercular institution remote from the district where she earned her status as a permanent teacher is too severe a penalty for marriage. Marriage is not a legal ground for forfeiture of one's status as a permanent teacher. The inevitable result of the procedure in the present case is to accomplish by circuitous methods what the law does not directly permit. It is inferred that the retaining of petitioner's services in the Stockton district will necessitate the suspension of some other teacher, or incur the likelihood of another mandamus proceeding. The overcrowded condition of classes in our public schools is prevalent. If a district is fortunate enough to have the means to employ an unlimited number of teachers, a segregation of the crowded classes may solve the problem of superfluous teachers. The real remedy against enforced idleness on account of the employment of too many teachers is for the board to hire no more than are required to adequately serve the number of pupils in attendance. If the board has made a mistake in assigning a teacher to service in a tubercular institution outside of their district, it is not good reason to argue that the correction of this error may embroil them in other difficulties.

[8] We are inclined to think that the law precludes a school board from assigning a teacher to a school outside of its district. Section 1609, supra, authorizes the boards of school trustees, "(b) To fix and prescribe the duties to be performed by * * * teachers * * * in the school district." (Italics ours.) Section 1618b of the Political Code, as amended by St. 1927, p. 261, under which the appellants claim the authority to assign the petitioner to the tubercular sanatorium classes in another county and school district 50 miles from the Stockton school district in which she holds a permanent tenure as a teacher of elementary instruction, is as follows: "Education of persons in Tubercular sanatoriums and preventoriums. Whenever a sanatorium or preventorium is established for the cure of pretuberculous, and tuberculous, or other physically afflicted persons, any school district may in its discretion establish and maintain in such institution, with the consent of the authorities thereof, special classes to provide elementary, secondary, and vocational education to the inmates of such institutions who are residents of such school district. Said classes shall be considered a part of the school system of the district establishing them, and attendance shall be so reported even though such classes are maintained beyond the boundaries of said district. Such school district may admit to such classes residents of other school districts on such terms and conditions as the governing board may prescribe."

While it is provided that these sanatorium classes "shall be considered a part of the school system of the district establishing them," this does not make it a part of the school district. In fact, in the present case, it appears that the sanatorium classes to which the petitioner was assigned is within the duly organized Murphy's school district of Calaveras county. We have no doubt, under the provisions of section 1618b, supra, that the school board of Stockton school district may employ teachers with the understanding and for the express purpose of teaching the children in the sanatorium, but we are of the opinion that the board may not lawfully assign a permanent teacher of the Stockton school district to that position without her consent.

In view of the foregoing, there is no necessity of passing upon the constitutionality of section 1618b, supra, which is challenged by the petitioner.

The judgment is affirmed.

99 Cal. App. 775

SOUTHERN LAND CO. v. PAULK et al.
(Civ. 6218.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 11, 1929.

1. Corporations ⚡592—Decree against persons described as trustees held void on face as to corporation not paying franchise tax, since corporation was not thereby dissolved (St. 1917, pp. 371-377; Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2).

In suit to quiet title, where corporation which had not paid franchise tax was not sued, but named parties were sued as trustees of such corporation on theory it was defunct, decree for plaintiff was void on its face, and did not operate to vest plaintiff with right, title, or interest of corporation in property, since, under St. 1917, pp. 371-377 (Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2), failure of corporation to pay tax did not create forfeiture of corporation nor cause it to become dissolved and did not create any trustees thereof.

2. Corporations ⚡619—Six-month limitations statute as to setting aside action of trustees did not apply to suit to quiet title by corporation which failed to pay franchise tax (Code Civ. Proc. § 341, subd. 3).

Code Civ. Proc. § 341, subd. 3, prescribing six months as period within which action may be commenced to set aside or invalidate any action taken by majority of trustees of corporation dissolved by operation of law, did not apply so as to bar suit to quiet title by corporation which failed to pay its franchise tax, since such failure did not cause a forfeiture or a dissolution of corporation, and hence did not create any trustees thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the Southern Land Company against Herman A. Paulk and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Catherine A. McKenna and J. Irving McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Randall J. Hood and Emmet Wilson, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem. Defendants appeal from a decree quieting title in favor of plaintiff. At the trial, it was stipulated that in 1916 plaintiff became the owner of the property in question. Defendants claim title by virtue of a decree quieting title to the same property, entered June 9, 1923, in another action, wherein one Joseph Blanchard was plaintiff and H. A. Paulk and W. S. Brush, George B. Raum, and one Doe, as trustees of Southern Land Company, an alleged defunct corporation, and certain fictitious named persons, were defendants.

By the decree in that action, hereinafter referred to as the Paulk Case, Paulk was substituted as party plaintiff, and he was adjudged to be the owner of the property as against all of the remaining parties. In the action at bar, the only evidence offered on behalf of the defendants was the judgment roll in the Paulk Case, and, upon plaintiff's objection, the trial court refused to admit the judgment roll in evidence.

The argument advanced in appellants' brief proceeds upon the assumption that, not only this judgment roll, but also that other documents, had been received in evidence. The record, however, discloses that the offers to introduce all evidence of a documentary nature with the exception of the previously mentioned judgment roll, were withdrawn. Although no point is raised with respect to the ruling of the lower court in rejecting the offer to introduce this judgment roll, we shall assume that counsel by this appeal really intend to attack such ruling and are seeking a reversal on that ground.

Virtually the precise question involved in the action at bar was presented, and determined adversely to the contention of appellants, in the case of Usher v. Henkel (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 494, hereinafter referred to as the Usher Case. In that action it was stipulated at the trial that the Southern Land Company, a corporation, had become the owner of certain property in July, 1916. It further appeared that Usher subsequently had received a tax deed to the same property, and thereafter had procured a decree against the said company quieting his title to the said property. In the case cited, Usher brought suit to quiet title against one G. V. Henkel, evidently the same Henkel who is one of the defendants in the present suit, and incidentally represented by the same counsel who now appear for appellants here. In the Usher Case, Henkel claimed title under a decree in an action, hereinafter referred to as the Henkel Case, wherein Josephine Blanchard was the original plaintiff and said Henkel and Usher and said Brush, Raum, and one Doe, as trustees of Southern Land Company, an alleged defunct corporation, and certain fictitious named persons, were defendants. The decree in the said Henkel Case recited that suit had been dismissed as against Usher, and that G. V. Henkel had succeeded to the rights of the plaintiff Blanchard and had been substituted as party plaintiff, and the decree further purported to quiet title in favor of Henkel as against the remaining parties.

In the Usher Case, the lower court entered a decree quieting title in his favor as against the defendant therein. Upon appeal, that decree was affirmed by the Supreme Court, which, in substance, held that, under the law in effect since 1917 (St. 1917, pp. 371-377; Pol. Code, § 3669c, subd. 2), the failure of the Southern Land Company to pay its taxes did not create a forfeiture of that corporation, nor cause it to become dissolved, but that such failure only suspended the corporation's right to transact business, and hence there were no trustees of the company. Accordingly, since the company was not a party to that action, and since the decree did not purport to be against the company, the Supreme Court held that the decree entered in the Henkel Case was void upon its face as against the company, and did not operate to vest Henkel with the right, title, or interest of the company in the property involved in that action.

[1] Upon the authority of the foregoing decision, it must be concluded that in the case at bar the decree entered in the Paulk Case was void upon its face as against the respondent herein, because the latter was not sued, and there were no trustees of said company who could be sued in the last-mentioned action. Hence such decree did not operate to vest Paulk with the right, title, or interest of the respondent in the property in question.

[2] The only remaining point mentioned in appellants' brief is to the effect that the action was barred by the provisions of section 341, subd. 3, Code of Civil Procedure. In that connection it is further asserted that no finding of the court was made on the issue of the statute of limitations. Such defense was pleaded in an amendment to defendants' answer, and the court expressly found "that none of the allegations contained in the amendment to defendants' answer herein filed by leave of the court on the 5th day of May, 1926, is true."

Subdivision 3 of section 341, Code of Civil Procedure, prescribes six months as the period within which an action may be commenced "to set aside or invalidate any action taken or performed by a majority of the trustees of any corporation heretofore or hereafter dissolved by operation of law, including the revivor of any such corporation." (Italics ours.)

The decision in the Usher Case, supra, wherein it was held, in substance, that the failure of the Southern Land Company to pay its franchise tax did not cause a forfeiture or a dissolution of the corporation and hence did not create any trustees thereof, is determinative of the special defense here raised.

For the reasons herein set forth, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KOEHN. (Cr. 3217.)

Supreme Court of California. July 17, 1929.

1. Indictment and information ⇨129(1)—Allegation in indictment that crimes charged relate to single transaction is not indispensable, where that fact appears clearly from context (Pen. Code, § 954).

Where it appears clearly from allegations of indictment or information that two crimes charged therein were connected together in their commission, it is not necessary to allege that fact under Pen. Code, § 954, though better practice to allege in specific terms that offenses charged do relate to same act, transaction, or event.

2. Indictment and information ⇨127—Where from single statement of facts there is doubt as to particular crime which defendant intended to commit, circumstances may be set forth in separate counts with separate charges as to commission of stated crimes (Pen. Code, § 954).

Where from a single statement of facts it appears that a crime has been committed, and there exists a doubt as to the particular crime which the defendant intended to commit, it is proper to set forth the facts and circumstances in separate counts and charge the defendant with as many specific crimes as facts will warrant under Pen. Code, § 954; determination of specific crime of which defendant is guilty being matter for jury.

3. Indictment and information ⇨129(1)—Information charging in first count attempt to murder judge by placing explosive near his dwelling, and charging in second count attempt to injure and intimidate judge by malicious use of explosive, held not defective for failure to show crimes were connected together (Pen. Code, §§ 601, 954, and § 664, subd. 1).

Information charging in first count that defendant attempted to murder judge in violation of Pen. Code, § 664, subd. 1, by placing explosive substance near his dwelling house with intent that fuse should ignite and cause explosion, eventuating in death of judge, and charging in second count that defendant maliciously deposited explosive substance near judge's dwelling house, with intent to injure, intimidate, and terrify judge, in violation of section 601, held not defective for failure to show on its face that the two crimes were connected together in their commission within section 954, since such fact sufficiently appeared, though it was not expressly alleged.

4. Criminal law ⇨878(4)—Conviction for attempt to murder judge by use of explosive held not sustained, in view of conviction on second count of information for depositing explosive to intimidate judge, where defendant admitted use of explosive for that purpose (Pen. Code, §§ 601, 664, subd. 1).

In prosecution for attempt to murder judge by placing explosive substance near his dwelling house under Pen. Code, § 664, subd. 1, and for maliciously depositing explosive with intent to injure and intimidate judge under section 601, conviction for attempted murder held not sustained, where verdict of guilty was likewise returned as on charge of use of explosive to intimidate, and defendant admitted that he used explosive for purpose of intimidating judge to give him favorable decision in pending litigation.

5. Criminal law ⇨48—Defendant is responsible for his crimes, if he knows that act committed is wrongful.

Whether defendant is responsible for his crimes depends on whether he knew nature and quality of act which he committed, and, if so, whether he knew that the act was wrongful and unlawful, and mere inability to reason correctly on plan for executed crime is no defense.

6. Criminal law ⇨1175—Improper submission and verdict of attempted murder held not to require reversal of conviction for maliciously depositing of explosive with intent to intimidate, where such crime was admitted (Pen. Code, §§ 601, 664, subd. 1).

Submission to jury of question of defendant's guilt of attempted murder of judge to use of explosive, in violation of Pen. Code, § 664, subd. 1, though error, and though jury returned a conviction under count for attempted murder, held not to require reversal of conviction returned on another count charging deposit of explosive near dwelling house with intent to injure and intimidate judge, in violation of section 601, where defendant admitted use of explosive to intimidate.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Charles A. Koehn was convicted of an attempt to commit murder and of maliciously depositing an explosive substance at or near a dwelling house with intent to injure and intimidate, and he appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part, with directions.

Superseding opinion 274 P. 595.

Carl E. Lindsay and Lindsay & Gearhart, both of Fresno, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Glenn M. De Vore, Dist. Atty., and Richard K. Stewart, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Fresno, for the People.

SEAWELL, J. The defendant was convicted, September 25, 1928, upon the second trial, in the superior court of the county of Fresno, on both counts of an information which accused him in count 1 with making an attempt to commit murder, in that, on or about May 17, 1928, he did willfully, unlawfully, and with malice aforethought, attempt to kill and murder Hon. C. E. Beaumont, who was then and there a judge of the superior court of the State of California, in and for the county of Fresno. The manner of the attempt to kill is alleged to have consisted in placing a certain explosive and inflammable material at and near the dwelling house occupied by said Hon. C. E. Beaumont, located at 3957 Kerckhoff avenue, in the city and county aforesaid, to which a fuse was attached and lighted by the defendant with the intent that said fuse would ignite said inflammable material and cause an explosion, which would eventuate in the death of said Hon. C. E. Beaumont.

The second accusatory count of the information is substantially in the language of section 601, Penal Code, and alleged that upon the same day as alleged in count 1 the defendant "did willfully, unlawfully and maliciously put, place, deposit and attempt to explode a certain nitroglycerine explosive substance at and near a certain dwelling house occupied by one C. E. Beaumont, located at 3957 Kerckhoff avenue, in the city and county aforesaid, with intent to injure, intimidate and terrify the said C. E. Beaumont."

At the first trial, which resulted in a disagreement by the jury, the defendant was represented by counsel of well-recognized ability. A demurrer, upon general and special grounds, was lodged against each count of the information, the most important objection and the objection specially urged upon this appeal being that more than one offense was charged therein, to wit, "the offense of attempt to commit murder, and the offense of malicious use of explosives, and it does not appear on the face of said information that said two offenses so charged were connected together in their commission, but that said two offenses so charged are different offenses, not connected together in their commission, and not different statements of the same offense, and not offenses of the same class of crimes or offenses." In the respect above pointed out it is urged that said counts violate section 954, Penal Code, which provides that an indictment or information may charge two or more different offenses connected together in their commission, or different statements of the same offense, or two or more different offenses of the same class of crimes or offenses, under separate counts, and, if two or more indictments or informations are filed in such cases, the court may order them to be consolidated. The prosecution is not required to elect between the different offenses or counts set forth in the indictment or information, but the defendant may be convicted of any number of the offenses charged, and each offense upon which the defendant is convicted must be stated in the verdict. Said section further provides that the court may, in the interest of justice, order that the different offenses or counts set forth in the indictment or information be tried separately or divided into two or more groups, and each of said groups tried separately. A verdict of acquittal of one or more counts shall not be deemed or held to be an acquittal of any other count.

Appellant made two objections in the trial court, which were overruled, as to the sufficiency of the information, and which are renewed upon this appeal, to wit, first, that the two offenses are not of the same class; second, that it does not appear upon the face of the information that the two crimes were connected together in their commission within the meaning of section 954, Penal Code.

[1] If the last objection is not tenable, and we are of the view that it is not, it becomes unnecessary to consider the first ground of objection. Counsel's contention in the court below, as renewed here, was that the information does not show upon its face that the two crimes were connected together in their commission. A number of authorities are cited to the effect that in charging under said section 954 it is necessary that care be taken to make it clearly appear that the offenses set forth relate to but one act, transaction, or event. No doubt it is better practice to allege in specific terms that the offenses charged do all relate to the same act, transaction, or event, as suggested by some of the authorities, but, where it appears clearly from the allegations of the indictment or information that such is the case, and a contrary or other construction would do violence to common understanding, an allegation of that which obviously appears is not required.

[2, 3] The counts of the information are identical as to the description of the person upon whom said act was intended to operate, and also as to place, time, and manner of accomplishing said unlawful act, to wit, by the use of an explosive placed at or near the residence of Judge Beaumont, situate at 3957 Kerckhoff avenue, in the city of Fresno. The act as described in each count is the same, and from said act the jury was to determine upon a trial of the case whether the accused placed said explosives at the door of said judge with intent that he should be killed thereby, or, as contended by defendant at the trial, to intimidate or terrify the judge to the extent that he would decide a case then pending in his court, in which the defendant was a party, in his favor.

When from a single statement of facts it appears that a crime has been committed, and there exists a doubt as to the particular crime the accused intended to commit, it is entirely proper to set forth the facts and circumstances in separate counts and charge the accused with as many specific crimes as the facts will warrant. The specific crime intended, or attempted to be committed, is a matter resting with the jury. The demurrer was properly overruled.

Upon arraignment, the accused was represented by counsel. He entered the general plea of not guilty and the special plea "not guilty by reason of insanity." This trial resulted in a disagreement by the jury. Upon the second trial, having dismissed his attorneys, he appeared in propria persona, and at the outset of the trial requested and was granted leave to withdraw the plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity." At the conclusion of the trial, the jury found the defendant guilty on both counts, but in each verdict interlined the words "and for obvious reasons, ask the Honorable Court to exercise leniency in the measure of punishment to be inflicted."

Two of his former counsel entered his defense after conviction, and are prosecuting this appeal. The usual motions were made for a new trial, arrest of judgment, etc., but each was denied, and the defendant was sentenced under both counts, said sentences to run consecutively. An appeal was taken directly to the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 2, and said court affirmed the judgment of conviction on the first count, to wit, an attempt to commit murder, and reversed the judgment of conviction upon the second count, which charged malicious use of explosives. Both the people and the defendant thereafter petitioned for a hearing by this court, which petition was granted, and the cause was transferred to this court for hearing and decision.

We are satisfied that the pleading does not violate the rule as announced in People v. Plath, 166 Cal. 227, 135 P. 954, and other cases decided before and subsequent to the Plath Case, to the effect that it must clearly appear upon the face of the information that the offenses set forth therein relate to but one act, transaction, or event. The pleading is in entire harmony with the provisions of said section 954 in its present amended form, and which section further provides that the prosecution may not be required to elect between the different offenses or counts set forth in the information, but the defendant may be convicted of any number of the offenses charged, each offense being stated in the verdict.

While the pleading is in harmony with the provisions of said section, that is to say, the jury was free to determine from the act the particular crime that the accused intended to commit, we are of the view, from the nature of the two offenses charged, that he could not be guilty of both. The inconsistency of so holding will be latterly considered.

The circumstances of the act of which the defendant was convicted being so unusual, both in their inception and attempted execution, have caused us to examine into the record in an effort to discern as nearly as it may be done the motive of the accused. Our investigation has not proved to be fruitful. Defendant was married and of the age of about 67 years at the time he committed the self-confessed act. He had resided for a period of 30 years upon lands which he had acquired, situated in the Mojave desert, and latterly became involved in litigation. An action for damages in a large sum of money on a breach of contract in connection with the operation of certain mining properties owned by him was commenced against him in the superior court of Kern county, and Hon. C. E. Beaumont of the county of Fresno was assigned to try said cause. The defendant, although represented by counsel, insisted upon personally conducting his cause, and did at times assume control of the proceedings. The judge, at the conclusion of the trial, requested that oral argument be dispensed with, and that the cause be submitted on briefs. Defendant felt disappointed and dissatisfied that he was not given an opportunity to orally argue the cause. He, as well as his attorney, thereafter submitted briefs. The cause being submitted, the judge repaired to his home at the city of Fresno. During the trial the defendant had offered two or three letters written by himself and others, which were excluded from evidence by the court. By this and other rulings and observations made by the court during the progress of the trial, the defendant presaged a decision against him. Having had a large experience with nitroglycerine and explosives, according to his story, he conceived the plan of placing a nitroglycerine bomb, which he had perfectly constructed, at the doorstep of the judge, under cover of night, to be found by him as he went to the front door in quest of his morning newspaper. The bomb was placed at about 1 o'clock a. m. and discovered by the judge later the same morning. The bomb, which weighed a fraction more than three pounds, was equipped with fuse and cap, and upon it was placed a coffee can containing gasoline. The bomb contained all the ingredients essential to cause a violent and destructive explosion. The fuse had the appearance of being charred; that is, it appeared to have been lighted and burned to a certain point and from some cause become extinguished. Shortly after he had thus placed the bomb, the defendant, by reason of his unusual conduct, was detained by a police officer, and his automobile, which he had left parked in a conspicuous place, was searched and found to contain pieces of fuses and other scraps of telltale evidence which readily connected the defendant with the placing of the bomb after its discovery was made. The defendant for a period denied any connection with the placing of the bomb, but finally admitted that he had made and placed the bomb on the judge's porch near the front door. He also stated during the trial, as a witness, that he had carried the bomb in his automobile for two weeks before depositing it, wrapped in such a manner as to protect it from detonation or explosion.

His claim at the trial was that he had charred the fuse before it was placed on the judge's porch, and that it was worthless as a fuse, and it could not have ignited or set the bomb off. His story, told as a witness, was that it was not his purpose or intention to injure the judge, but solely to intimidate and terrify him into doing justice in his cause. He also testified that he expected to be, and it was his purpose to be, apprehended for his act in order that the attention of the public might be called to any injustice that might be done him by an adverse decision, which would mean financial ruin to him.

[4, 5] Returning to the question whether a conviction on both counts of the information may be sustained, we are of the view that the two conclusions are inconsistent with each other and cannot be reconciled by the application of any rule by which the purposes of a rational mind may be determined. If the defendant's purpose to kill the judge had succeeded, no decision would have been rendered by him, and the slaying would have been barren of its terrorizing example even as to another judge who might be called to try the cause, unless it became known that the defendant was responsible for the homicide. If, on the other hand, the bomb was placed near the front door of the judge's residence with the intent of terrorizing and intimidating him, the identity of the defendant as the author of the deed must necessarily become known to him in order to produce the result sought to be accomplished. The act seems to be void of rationality, whatever may have been the end attempted to be attained. From the nature of the case we are unable to perceive upon any theory how the defendant could have intended to commit both of the offenses charged in the information. That he was properly convicted of the malicious use of explosives with the intention of terrifying and intimidating the judge of the court was the defendant's repeated admission at the trial of the case, both as a witness and in the conduct of said cause. His defense was predicated on the assumption that the exigency of the situation justified the means resorted to by him to save himself from hazards which threatened. That the defendant was, to say the least, laboring under abnormal mental agitation at the time of, and for some time prior to, the placing of the bomb at or near the door of the judge's residence, cannot be doubted. It is also equally true that he was able to distinguish between right and wrong, and knew that he was doing a wrongful and wicked act at the time he committed it. The legal question as to mental responsibility is, Did the accused know the nature and quality of the act which he committed, and, if so, did he know it was a wrongful act and one for-bidden by law? From the admissions of the defendant alone, as well as the convincing circumstances of the commission of the act, we are forced to make an affirmative answer to the interrogatory. A person may be unable to reason correctly upon the plan which he is formulating to execute a crime, and, notwithstanding his defective reasoning, be responsible to the law, if he comes within the legal test of the rule above stated. Such is the policy of the law. While the defendant withdrew from the consideration of the law his mental status, we have considered it as a matter of law, for the reason that the case cannot well be discussed without doing so.

The punishment and confinement prescribed by statute for a violation of section 601, Penal Code, defining the malicious and unlawful use of explosives, is from one year to the end of life, in the state prison, and for an attempt to commit murder, not more than 20 years in the state prison. Pen. Code, § 664, subd 1. Said section 601 makes the offense complete when any person maliciously places or deposits, explodes, or attempts to explode, near any building or dwelling house, any dynamite, nitroglycerine, or other chemical compound or explosive "with the intent to injure, intimidate or terrify any human being." The placing of the explosives was done with the expressed purpose of intimidating and terrifying Judge Beaumont. The penalty for such an act, by reason of the lethal and destructive properties of the substances from which bombs are constructed, and the terrifying effect which nitroglycerine and kindred explosives have upon the minds of the public, is greater than the penalty prescribed for an attempt to kill a single person. Therefore, so far as the punishment for the two crimes is concerned, the greater included the lesser.

[6] The prosecution was not required to elect upon which count it would contend for a conviction. The defendant was convicted upon both counts, and there is no question of his guilt of the greater. His admissions in court in effect amounted to a plea of guilty. The submission of the question of his guilt upon the count charging an attempt to murder could not have, under the state of the record, prejudiced the jury in its consideration of the crime which, by his own admissions, he committed.

No other serious questions are presented by the appeal. It is ordered that the judgment pronounced on count 2 of the information, which adjudged defendant guilty of the malicious use of explosives, be, and it is hereby, affirmed; the judgment pronounced upon count 1, which charged an attempt to commit murder, is set aside and vacated, and the trial court is directed to dismiss the count upon which said conviction was had.

It is so ordered.

PERRY v. MAGNESON et al. (S. F. 13062.)

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1929.

1. Dismissal and nonsuit $\S$ 60(2)—Mere lapse of five years between filing of answer and trial does not deprive court of jurisdiction to thereafter try case (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583, providing for dismissal of actions, mere lapse of five years between filing of answer and the date of trial did not deprive court of jurisdiction to thereafter try case.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit $\S$ 79—Only relief granted under statute providing for dismissal for not bringing case to trial is to require order of dismissal on proper showing (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583, providing for dismissal of action where there has been lapse of five years between filing of answer and date of trial, only relief granted is to require on proper showing that an order of dismissal be entered.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 870(2)—Mandamus $\S$ 43—Remedies available to party injured by refusal to dismiss action after lapse of five years are mandamus or review on appeal from judgment (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583).

Where court fails to grant relief provided for by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583, providing for dismissal of action after lapse of five years between filing of answer and date of trial, two remedies are available to injured party, namely, mandamus directed against trial court to compel dismissal, or by noting exception to ruling of court and properly presenting same by bill of exceptions order may be reviewed upon appeal from judgment.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 105, 277—Order refusing to dismiss action after lapse of five years is not appealable order nor one deemed excepted to (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 583, 647).

Order refusing to dismiss action under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583, providing for dismissal after lapse of five years between filing of answer and date of trial, is not an appealable order nor one deemed excepted to under section 647.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 257—No exception having been taken to decision of court refusing to dismiss action, objection will not be considered on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583).

Where no exception was taken to decision of court in refusing to dismiss action for lapse of more than five years between filing of answer and date of trial under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583, it will be presumed that injured party acquiesced in ruling of court, and objection will not be considered on appeal.

6. Principal and surety $\S$ 149—Surety, agreeing to meet liability on bond when determined, waived provision requiring suit thereon to be brought within specified time.

Where building contract bond provided that surety should in no event be subject to suit instituted later than specified date, but surety accepted notice of contractor's default and agreed to waive requirements of bond and notified holder that it would be ready to meet liability, if any, when liability was finally determined, failure to bring suit within time specified did not preclude recovery, since surety cannot hold out hope of amicable adjustment of claims, and thus delay action, and plead delay caused by its own conduct as defense to action when brought.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

Inferences to be drawn from conflicting evidence and what conclusions conflicting evidence warranted held for trial court, and its findings thereon will not be reviewed on appeal.

8. Judgment $\S$ 253(2)—Court may grant relief embraced within issues, including interest not within prayer (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 580).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 580, where answer is filed, court may after trial grant any relief consistent with case made by complaint and embraced within issues, including judgment for interest, though not prayed for.

9. Interest $\S$ 44—Generally interest is allowable from time amount in suit becomes due, if sum is certain or can be made certain.

Generally interest is allowable from time sum in suit becomes due, if sum is certain or can be made certain by calculation.

10. Interest $\S$ 39(3)—Amount due under bond being uncertain and unliquidated and dependent upon reasonable cost of completing building, surety was not liable for interest prior to judgment.

In action on contractor's bond, where amount due by surety depended upon amount found to be cost of completing building based upon reasonable value of necessary labor and materials, and under provisions in bond it was necessary for owner to prove loss before he would be entitled to recover, claim was uncertain and unliquidated and surety was not liable for interest prior to entry of judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by R. A. Perry against O. M. Magneson and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company appeals. Remanded with directions to modify, and as modified affirmed.

C. L. Colvin, of Oakland, and Thomas, Beedy, Presley & Paramore, of San Francisco, for appellant.

F. Eldred Boland and Knight, Boland & Christin, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The defendant United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, a corporation, appeals from a judgment entered against it and in favor of the plaintiff R. A. Perry, on a bond executed by it, conditioned upon the performance of a building contract by the defendant O. M. Magnuson.

On June 10, 1910, plaintiff and defendant Magnuson entered into a contract whereby the defendant agreed to construct a residence and garage for the plaintiff in accordance with certain plans and specifications, and to furnish all labor and materials necessary for such construction, at the agreed price of $23,567, the building to be completed within a designated period of time. Concurrently with the execution of the contract, the defendant surety company executed and delivered to plaintiff its bond in the penal sum of $6,000, agreeing to indemnify plaintiff for any pecuniary loss resulting from the breach of any of the terms and conditions of the contract by the defendant contractor. Magnuson breached the contract by abandoning the work on February 11, 1911. On notification of the abandonment the surety company declined to take any steps in connection with the contract, and the work was completed by the plaintiff-owner, who thereafter instituted this action to recover on the bond. The prayer of the amended complaint was for the sum of $6,000, and costs. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff and against the surety company in the full penal amount of the bond, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. from October 16, 1911, the date of the commencement of the suit, aggregating $12,834.32, together with interest thereon from the date of judgment until paid, and costs. No judgment was rendered against defendant Magnuson, he having been previously adjudged a bankrupt.

It appears that after the completion of the building by the owner many lien suits were filed. As the determination of the action to recover on the bond was somewhat dependent upon the outcome of the lien cases, it was agreed between counsel for the respective parties hereto that the trial of this action should be postponed until the lien suits were finally determined. They therefore entered into a stipulation on November 30, 1915, that this case should be dropped from the calendar, to be restored on five days' notice by either party. The judgment in the lien cases, after two appeals, became final in June, 1919. Shortly thereafter the present cause was set for trial, and was continued from time to time until November, 1922, when the trial actually commenced. Judgment was ordered for the plaintiff. The surety company's motion for a new trial was granted, and on April 30, 1926, the second trial commenced, at which time the surety company objected to proceeding with the case, and moved to dismiss the action for want of prosecution; the same objection and motion having been made prior to the commencement of the first trial. The motion to dismiss was denied, and judgment in favor of the plaintiff was entered on January 28, 1928.

[1-5] Appellant contends that, more than five years having elapsed between the time of the filing of the answers to plaintiff's amended complaint and the date when the trial of the action commenced, and the parties not having entered into a written stipulation extending the time, its motion to dismiss should have been granted under the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 333, 219 P. 1006. The mere lapse of five years between the filing of the answer and the date of the trial does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to thereafter try the case. The only relief granted under section 583, supra, by our decisions has been to require, on proper showing, that an order of dismissal be entered. Rio Vista Mng. Co. v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 1, 5-6, 200 P. 616. If the court fails to grant that relief, two remedies are available to the injured party. He may, by mandamus directed against the trial court, compel the dismissal (Andersen v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 95, 97, 200 P. 963), or, by noting an exception to the ruling of the court and properly presenting the same by means of a bill of exceptions, he may have the order reviewed upon an appeal from the judgment. The appellant took neither of these steps. The order refusing to dismiss the action is not itself an appealable order, and is not one deemed excepted to under section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure. No exception having been taken at the time the decision was made, it will be presumed that the appellant acquiesced in the ruling of the court, and the objection cannot now be urged on appeal. Davies v. Ramsdell, 40 Cal. App. 424, 427, 181 P. 94.

[6] The contractor's bond provided that in no event should the surety be subject to any suit, action, or other proceeding thereon that was instituted later than the 13th day of June, 1911. It is the contention of the appellant, therefore, that this action is barred by the fact that suit was not instituted until October 16, 1911. In this connection, the trial court found that immediately upon the abandonment of the contract by Magnuson, and within 30 days after knowledge of his default, the plaintiff, in writing, as provided in the bond, notified the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company of the fact, showing the abandonment by Magnuson; that the guaranty company declined to assume and complete or procure the completion of the contract, but accepted the notice and "thereupon agreed to and with plaintiff to waive the requirements of said bond that suit be commenced thereon on or before the 13th day of June, 1911, and agreed to and with plaintiff to pay to plaintiff the amount of the liability thereunder when the exact amount of plaintiff's damage be ascertained, and further agreed to and with plaintiff that action might be commenced upon said bond at any time subsequent to said 13th day of June, 1911, when such amount of damage was ascertained." Reasonable intendments and inferences to be drawn from the evidence support the finding. The provision for the limitation of time for the commencement of suit upon the bond was no doubt reasonable in point of time under ordinary circumstances, and, had the surety merely insisted upon a strict compliance with the provision, its position here would be tenable. Fitzpatrick v. North American Accident Ins. Co., 18 Cal. App. 264, 123 P. 209. But the appellant here did not do that. While it declined to take any steps in connection with the contract with Magneson in relation to the completion of the building when the contractor abandoned the work, it notified the plaintiff in writing that it would "be ready to meet its liability, if there is any, upon the bond when the amount of that liability is finally determined." We believe that agreement brings the case well within the rule that a surety cannot hold out a hope of amicable adjustment of claims and thus delay action against it, and then plead the delay caused by its own conduct as a defense to the action when brought. 14 R. C. L. 584; Thompson v. Phenix Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 287, 10 S. Ct. 1019, 34 L. Ed. 408, 413.

[7] The trial court found that after Magneson abandoned the work the plaintiff completed the building according to the plans and specifications, and at the reasonable cost of $16,926.74. The appellant challenges this finding, and contends that it is clearly contrary to the evidence. In considering this contention, it is but necessary for us to say that there is evidence from which both parties to the controversy may argue in support of their respective positions, for the evidence is conflicting in this regard. The inferences to be drawn, and what conclusion the evidence warranted, were matters for the trial court, and its findings preclude the necessity for any inquiry into that subject.

[8] The trial court also found that plaintiff suffered a pecuniary loss in the sum of $10,055.03 by reason of Magneson's breach of the contract, and that he was entitled to judgment against the appellant surety for the full penalty of the bond, $6,000, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from October 16, 1911, the date of the commencement of the action. Judgment was entered accordingly. Appellant contends that in no event was plaintiff entitled to recover interest prior to the date judgment was given in his favor. It advances two reasons for this contention: First, that the damages sought to be recovered in the action were uncertain and unliquidated; and, second, the complaint did not pray for interest. As to the latter point, under the liberal rule prevailing in this jurisdiction, where an answer is filed the court may, after the trial, grant any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issues. Code Civ. Proc. § 580. It may therefore render a judgment for interest, though not prayed for. 14 Cal. Jur. p. 691, par. 15.

[9, 10] As to the time from which interest on the amount found due should have been allowed, respondent asserts that the trial court was correct in awarding interest from the date of the commencement of the suit, on the theory that the action was not one for damages, but was upon an obligation to pay a sum certain, which obligation must be treated as any other instrument calling for the payment of money. The general rule is that interest is allowable from the time the sum in suit becomes due, if the sum is certain or can be made certain by calculation. The test, then, to be applied in the instant case is whether or not the sum found to be due was known and admitted by the appellant to be due to the respondent. Gray v. Bekins, 186 Cal. 389, 399, 199 P. 767. It is apparent that, until the trial court determined the cost of completing the building, based upon the reasonable value of the necessary labor and materials, the amount, if any, due from appellant to respondent upon the bond in question could not be fixed. Had the cost to respondent not exceeded the amount specified in the building contract for the completion of the work, the surety would not have been liable in any sum. Under the terms of the bond the surety agreed to "save harmless the said Oblige [the respondent] from any pecuniary loss resulting from the breach of any of the terms, covenants and conditions of the said contract on the part of said Principal [the building contractor] to be performed." It was necessary, therefore, for the respondent to prove a loss before he would be entitled to recover on the bond; and it follows that, until the amount of that loss should be determined by the judgment of the court, the claim was uncertain and unliquidated. As was said by this court in Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 67, 18 P. 100, 104 (9 Am. St. Rep. 164): "The reason of such denial of interest is said to be that the person liable does not know what sum he owes, and therefore can be in no default for not paying. The damages in such cases are an uncertain quantity, depending upon no fixed standard, * * * and can never be made certain except by accord or verdict. As to such damages there can be no default, and hence the initial point at which to fix the starting of interest is wanting." It follows, therefore, that respondent was not entitled to interest prior to the entry of judgment, and to that extent the judgment was erroneous.

The cause is remanded with directions to the court below to modify its judgment in favor of the plaintiff by eliminating therefrom interest from the date of the commencement of the suit, thereby reducing the amount to be recovered by plaintiff from $12,834.32 to $6,000, the full penal amount of the bond, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from January 28, 1928, the date of the entry of judgment, together with costs of suit; the judgment as thus modified to stand affirmed.

LYNCH v. LYNCH et al. (two cases).
(S. F. 13045.)

Supreme Court of California. July 16, 1929.
As Modified Aug. 12, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

2. Deeds ⇨68(1½)—Deeds executed by deceased to members of family as his voluntary rational act and deed must be sustained by court.

Deeds executed by deceased to members of family, when he was owner of property, as his voluntary rational act and deed, must be sustained by court, and court may not substitute its own ideas of what would have been equitable division of family fortune.

3. Deeds ⇨211(4)—Deed from father to son was not presumptively fraudulent, where no fiduciary relationship existed between them.

Deed from father to son was not presumptively fraudulent, where no business or fiduciary relationship existed between father and son at time father executed deeds.

4. Husband and wife ⇨267(7)—Wife's deed to daughter conveying one-half interest in property was not void, even if it was community property, where wife survived husband who died intestate.

Wife's deed to daughter conveying one-half interest in property was not void, even if it was community property, where wife survived husband who died intestate, since she thereby became vested with one-half interest in community property which passed under deed to daughter as after-acquired interest.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Two actions to set aside deeds by Peter E. Lynch against Thomas B. Lynch and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bert Schlesinger and John L. McNab, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Leo J. McEnerney and Alexander L. O'Grady, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. Plaintiff has appealed from judgments against him in two actions in which he sought to have set aside certain deeds made by his father, Peter Lynch, now deceased, conveying certain property to his brother, defendant herein.

[1] The record consists of 4 volumes of typewritten matter, comprising over 1,800 pages, and the briefs contain lengthy arguments as to the purport of this evidence. The testimony is conflicting upon every matter of importance to the inquiry here, and the trial court has made elaborate findings against plaintiff, and, as stated in his opinion, the trial judge made such findings most reluctantly, with his sympathies enlisted for the plaintiff. Under such circumstances, the findings are conclusive here, as we have repeatedly held.

Two separate pieces of property are involved here, one at Twenty-Third and Mission streets, San Francisco, and the other at Tenth and Howard streets, San Francisco. They will be referred to hereinafter as the Mission and Howard street properties, respectively. In December, 1913, Margaret Lynch, the mother of plaintiff and the record owner of the properties in question, executed two deeds, conveying to Peter Lynch, her husband, and Kathryn C. Lynch, her daughter, respectively, an undivided one-half interest in the Mission street property. In June, 1916, Margaret Lynch conveyed to Peter Lynch the property referred to as the Howard street property.

On June 20, 1916, Peter Lynch executed and delivered to his sons Francis I. Lynch and Joseph H. Lynch deeds conveying to each of them a one-quarter interest in the Mission street property. On June 24, 1916, Peter Lynch executed a deed conveying to his eldest son, Thomas B. Lynch, the Howard street property, which he, after the death of his mother in 1920, conveyed to his sister, the defendant Kathryn C. Lynch, without valuable consideration.

[2] According to the findings of the trial court, the last illness of Peter Lynch continued intermittently from the 18th day of June, 1916, to the date of his death on July 2, 1916, but during that period Peter Lynch was not at all mentally incapacitated from transacting any business or entering into any contracts or unable to understand or comprehend the nature, purpose, or effect of any of his business acts. During the period from the 19th day of June, 1916, to the date of his death, Peter J. Lynch was up and about his home in his usual and customary manner, and while he left his home and was out of doors on or about the 24th day of June, 1916, he did not leave the premises whereon his house was situated during said time. During this period, Peter Lynch did not suffer physical or mental pain and was not either physically or mentally incapacitated from entering into any contracts, or from executing any deeds disposing of his property. The findings negative all the allegations of the complaint respecting the weakened mental and physical condition of Peter Lynch shortly prior to his death, and they also determine, adversely to plaintiff, the allegations of his complaint to the effect that the deceased directed deeds of the property to be prepared in a manner to transfer a portion thereof to plaintiff and that an older brother, defendant Thomas B. Lynch, prepared the deeds contrary to instructions and contrary to the intention of the grantor, and that the said Thomas B. Lynch presented said deeds to the grantor and requested that he sign them. On the contrary, it is found that on the 20th day of June, 1916, Peter Lynch signed, acknowledged, and delivered the deeds involved here, transferring the property to certain of his children, at his own instigation and of his own initiative and volition; that he signed them all in the presence of Margaret Lynch, his wife, Kathryn C. Lynch, his daughter, Thomas B. Lynch, his son, and James F. McCue, a notary public; that each of said deeds was executed and delivered by said Peter Lynch to the grantee named therein in the presence of Margaret Lynch, his wife, Kathryn C. Lynch, and Thomas B. Lynch.

It is also found that Peter Lynch neither had nor needed any separate or independent advice with respect to the preparation or execution of said deeds, and acted in all said matters freely and independently and upon and according to his own will and judgment, and that all said deeds accord with the intention and wish of Peter Lynch; that Peter Lynch never expressed and never had the intention that all of his five children should share equally in his properties, or that any conveyance of any thereof should be made to Peter E. Lynch; that Peter Lynch, the father, at the time of the execution of said deeds knew and understood the contents thereof, and knew and understood the effect of his act in acknowledging, signing, and delivering said deeds, and knew and understood and fully comprehended the nature, purpose, and effect of each and all of said deeds at the time of the execution of the same, and thereby intended to convey the said property described in said deeds to the respective grantees named therein.

The findings then determine, adversely to plaintiff, the allegations of his complaint to the effect that he was misled by his brothers into believing that he would share in the property after his mother's death and into believing that he was an equal owner with them in said property, but, on the contrary, it is found that plaintiff has known since September, 1916, that his brothers and sisters were the owners of the property in dispute.

It appears that after the death of Peter Lynch, the father, the mother and her five children resided together until the marriage of plaintiff, and thereafter the other children resided in the family home with their mother until her death, in May, 1920. The oldest brother, Thomas, then transferred the property received by him from his father to his sister and died before the present action was brought to trial. It appears from the record that there were family reasons to explain the action of the father in not naming the plaintiff herein as grantee in any of these deeds and to explain why the oldest brother did not permit the plaintiff to share in his generosity to his brothers and sisters. Indeed, the trial court found that while Peter Lynch, deceased, had affection for all his five children, by reason of certain conduct of plaintiff, the father had less affection for him than for the other children. It having been found by the trial court that these deeds were executed by Peter Lynch, deceased, when he was the owner of the property, as his voluntary, rational act and deed, this court must sustain them and may not substitute its own ideas of what would have been an equitable division of the family fortune for the ideas of the deceased.

[3] It is also contended that the deed from Peter Lynch to his son Thomas was presumptively fraudulent because a fiduciary relationship existed between them. This contention is destroyed by the findings to the contrary and to the effect that the relationship between the parties was that of the greatest friendship and that Peter Lynch had great confidence in his son Thomas, but that no business or fiduciary relationship existed between them at the time the father executed the deeds.

[4] The only other point requiring discussion is the contention of the appellant that the conveyance by Margaret Lynch, executed in 1913, to Kathryn C. Lynch, her daughter, conveying a one-half interest in the Mission street property, was void because the property was at that time community property of Peter and Margaret Lynch. The trial court found "that it is untrue that said property was at any time subsequent to the 8th day of January, 1916, community property of Margaret and Peter Lynch." The record shows several reasons why the property in question was not community property, but we shall not discuss them, because, assuming that it was community property at the time of the execution of the deed from Margaret Lynch to Kathryn C. Lynch and that Peter Lynch did not direct the execution of the deed by his wife, that deed nevertheless vested in Kathryn C. Lynch an undivided one-half interest in the property which purported to be conveyed by the deed, because Margaret Lynch, the grantor, survived Peter Lynch, who died intestate, and thereby she became vested with a one-half interest in the community property which passed under the deed to Kathryn C. Lynch, as an after-acquired interest.

The judgment in each case is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action to establish the priority of interest in the distributive share of an estate by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company against N. G. Mathews, personally and as administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Wilson, deceased, and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. Superseding opinions in 273 P. 822, and 274 P. 769.

Horace W. B. Smith and P. R. Lund, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Julien E. Pardee, of Susanville, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of defendants, and is presented upon the judgment roll alone. The facts as set forth in plaintiff's complaint and as found by the trial court are briefly these: Thomas W. Wilson died intestate on the 18th day of June, 1920, in the county of Lassen, leaving estate therein to which his three children, George W. Wilson, Rena M. Lucius, and Dorothy Wilson, succeeded share and share alike. On August 2, 1920, George W. Wilson was appointed administrator of the estate of his deceased father, and qualified by giving a bond in the sum of $5,300, with two personal sureties, and entered upon his duties as such administrator. On March 3, 1921, George W. Wilson borrowed from the Growers' Bank of San Jose, Cal., the sum of $2,600, and as security for such loan gave to said bank his promissory note for that amount, together with an assignment of all of his interest in the estate of Thomas W. Wilson, deceased, and in and to all of the property of said estate to which he might be entitled, and all fees and commissions accrued or to accrue to him as administrator of said estate. This assignment was a few months after the making thereof filed with the papers of the estate. On September 12, 1921, the personal sureties upon the bond of George W. Wilson made application to the court to be released from further liability, and on November 10, 1921, the said administrator filed a new bond in the same amount and upon which the plaintiff herein was the sole surety. On June 27, 1922, for value received, and after the maturity of the note, the said Growers' Bank assigned and delivered to the Bank of Lassen County said note, together with an assignment of the interest of said George W. Wilson in the estate of his deceased father, and which assignment was also duly filed with the papers in said estate. On January 8, 1924, the Bank of Lassen County filed a petition in the matter of said estate, praying for the revocation of the letters of administration theretofore issued to said George W. Wilson and for the appointment of N. G. Mathews, one of the respondents herein, as the administrator of said estate. On January 31, 1924, an order was duly made by the said court granting the prayer of said petition, and thereupon said Mathews qualified as such administrator, and has ever since been the administrator of said estate. On April 9, 1924, Mathews as such administrator commenced an action against George W. Wilson and his surety, the plaintiff and appellant herein, seeking to compel said Wilson to make an accounting of his transactions as administrator of said estate, and that it be determined in what amount, if any, said Wilson was indebted to said estate, and that judgment be rendered against him for such amount, and that the plaintiff in that action also have judgment against the said surety for such portion of said indebtedness as it should be found liable for under its surety bond. On or about May 6, 1924, George W. Wilson filed in said court what purports to be a final account of his administration of said estate, and thereafter and upon October 20, 1924, the court in which the above action was pending made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law by which it was held that George W. Wilson was indebted to the estate of said deceased in the sum of $2,807.16, and of this amount his liability for the sum of $2,249.77 had accrued during the period covered by his second bond upon which the appellant herein is surety. Thereafter, and on the 15th day of May, 1925, the appellant herein paid the administrator of said estate in full of its liability as such surety the sum of $2,267.29, and immediately thereafter brought this action against N. G. Mathews as administrator of said estate and the Bank of Lassen County, the purpose of said action being that of obtaining a decree to the effect that after its foregoing payment of the amount for which it had been held liable as such surety to said estate it became subrogated to all of the rights, remedies, and facilities which the estate of Thomas W. Wilson then had or might thereafter acquire to collect said sum of $2,267.29, with interest from said George W. Wilson, and to retain said sum with interest from any distributive share due said Wilson out of the estate of his deceased father, and that the plaintiff's right to have said sum retained for its benefit was superior to the right of the Bank of Lassen County existing by virtue of its transferred assignment from the Growers' Bank of San Jose. Upon the trial of the cause, the trial court found the foregoing to be the facts, but as to the law applicable thereto rendered judgment in favor of the defendants in the action. From such judgment, this appeal has been taken, and is presented upon the judgment roll.

The sole question presented by this appeal is as to whether by his assignment of all of his right, title, and interest in the estate of his deceased father consummated prior to the existence of any liability on the part of said George W. Wilson to said estate arising out of his misuse as such administrator of the funds and properties thereof a prior right had been created in the transferee of said assignment and interest of the assignee thereof to receive from said estate the full distributive share of said Wilson therein, and that such right was superior to the claim of said estate to be repaid the amount of his defalcations out of his distributive share of said estate and hence as to the right of this plaintiff to be repaid the amount which it had been compelled to pay to said estate by virtue of its suretyship.

The appellant argues that, by virtue of its payment of the amount which it was compelled to pay to said estate as the surety of said George W. Wilson, it became subrogated to the right of said estate to retain the said amount of his delinquency as administrator of said estate in making distribution thereof to the heirs of Thomas W. Wilson otherwise entitled thereto. This contention on the part of the appellant is not seriously disputed, but the difficulty is that it does not go far enough to entitle the plaintiff herein to a superior right to the distribution of the interest of said George W. Wilson in said estate in the presence of his assignment and transfer of his entire interest therein prior to the time when his delinquency as such administrator arose.

[1-3] It is well-settled law that the title of a decedent in and to the properties of his estate vests immediately upon his death in his heirs, subject only to payment of the debts of the decedent, the funeral expenses, the family allowance, and the expenses of administration. 9 Cal. Jur., p. 472, §§ 19, 20, and cases cited. It is equally well settled that this right of an heir to assign or to hypothecate his interest in the estate of his deceased ancestor is an absolute right of property, which is subject only to the right of possession in the administrator for the purpose of administration and to the payment of the foregoing charges in the course of such administration. 9 Cal. Jur. p. 477, § 24, and cases cited. This court has had frequent occasion to decide that this right of an heir to transfer his interest in an estate is superior to any claims other than those above enumerated, and that the fact that an heir may be indebted to the estate in any unliquidated and unsecured amount does not give the estate precedence over his assignment of his interest therein prior to the distribution thereof. Estate of Smith, 108 Cal. 115, 40 P. 1037; Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 522, 31 P. 584; Estate of Polito, 51 Cal. App. 752, 197 P. 976; 12 Cal. Jur., p. 483, § 929. In the light of the foregoing authorities, there is no escape from the conclusion that the trial court was correct in its judgment herein to the effect that the Bank of Lassen County by virtue of the assignment to it of the entire interest of George W. Wilson in the estate of his deceased father was entitled to a superior right over that of the plaintiff herein to have distributed to it the share of George W. Wilson in said estate.

The judgment is affirmed.

JONES et al. (L. A. 9461.)

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1929.

1. Easements ☞22—Defendants were bound by notice given by reservation contained in patent in their chain of title.

Notice given by reservation contained in patent in defendant's chain of title was binding upon defendants.

2. Waters and water courses ☞154(1)—Where plaintiffs' predecessors acquired water rights by appropriation while defendants' land was government land, language of patent was sufficient to give defendants notice water had been appropriated.

Where predecessors of plaintiff acquired water rights in defendants' land while defendants' land was government land, language of patent to effect that it was subject to any vested or accruing water rights for mining, agricultural, manufacturing or other purposes and rights to ditches or reservoirs used in connection with such water rights as might be recognized by local customs, laws, etc., was sufficient to give defendants notice that water of spring on property had been appropriated before land was acquired by private owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the San Bernardino National Bank and others against W. J. Jones and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 271 P. 1103.

Jones, Hoyt & Rifkind, of Los Angeles, for appellants Jones.

Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs to quiet title to their rights in a tunnel and pipe line conveying water therefrom and situated on the lands of defendants, and to the easement therefor and to prevent the destruction of the said pipe line by defendants.

[1] It appears, without dispute, that the predecessors of plaintiffs acquired the water rights in question by appropriation while the land now owned by defendants was government land. When patent issued it contained the usual provision: "Subject to any vested or accruing water rights for mining, agricultural, manufacturing or other purposes and rights to ditches or reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as may be recognized by the local customs, laws and decisions of courts, etc. * * *" This patent was duly recorded and whatever notice is given by the reservation contained therein is binding upon the defendants here, as the patent is in their chain of title.

The physical facts at the time defendants purchased the property and took possession thereof appear from the findings of the trial court to be: "Plaintiffs' predecessor entered in and upon lot 9 (now defendants' property) and constructed a tunnel at a spring thereon and thereby developed water in said tunnel and conveyed said water through a pipe line from said spring and tunnel to and across said lots 9 and 8 to the lands of plaintiffs." A concrete bulkhead was constructed in the mouth of the tunnel by one of plaintiffs' predecessors in interest in 1906, causing water to accumulate in a small reservoir, and an underground pipe, at some places three-quarters of an inch and at other places an inch in diameter, extended from the reservoir in a general southwesterly direction about 300 feet to a house on lot 8 and thence in the same general direction approximately 1,500 feet to a house on the plaintiffs' land.

The trial court found that the defendants acquired their property in 1923 with notice and knowledge of facts and circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry as to the existence of rights, claims, and ownerships of plaintiffs in and to the tunnel situated on said lot 9 and the water flowing therein, and that, by prosecuting such inquiry, said defendants would have learned of the existence of such rights. Upon such findings, judgment was entered for plaintiffs, from which the defendants appeal.

[2] The appellants urge that, while the rec ordation of the patent to defendants' land constituted constructive notice to them of its contents, the language thereof was not sufficient to give notice that the waters of the spring upon the property purchased by them had been appropriated before the land was acquired by a private owner; that no actual knowledge is chargeable to defendants. The position taken by appellants, if sound, would make it incumbent upon an appropriator, in order to protect his rights, to give notice to each subsequent purchaser of the servient tenement as to the nature and extent of the rights appropriated.

Conceding, although not deciding, that the physical facts gave no actual or constructive notice to defendants of the nature and extent of plaintiffs' rights, and that the findings upon these matters are not supported by the record, we think the situation here presented is controlled by the holding in Cave v. Tyler, 147 Cal. 454, 82 P. 64. In that case there was a grant by the government to a railroad company subsequent to the congressional act of 1866. Prior to the grant to the railroad company Cave and his predecessors in interest had appropriated the water of Mill creek five miles below the then government land. There was nothing on the government land to give notice of such appropriation, nor was there anything to show that either the Southern Pacific Company or its grantee had either notice or knowledge of such appropriation, nor was there any record thereof except the usual reservation in the patent, as in the case at bar. The court said: "Mrs. Skinner derived title to her land under a grant from the United States to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871. By the provisions of the Act of July 26, 1866, this grant is subject to all water rights which had vested and accrued prior to the grant. The court found that the rights of the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest had accrued prior to that time, and upon this finding the decree is based that the plaintiffs' rights by appropriation and diversion exercised below the lands of the appellant are paramount to her riparian rights. The law upon this subject is not disputed."

To the same effect is the case of Le Quime v. Chambers, 15 Idaho, 405, 98 P. 415, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 76.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHAW v. FEEHAN et al. (S. F. 13014.)

Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1929.

1. Insane persons ⇨51—Signature of superintendent of state hospital for insane to certificate for discharge of patient may be affixed by another under superintendent's direction (Pol. Code, § 2189).

Pol. Code, § 2189, providing that superintendent of state hospital for insane may discharge any patient on filing his written certificate with secretary of board of managers, does not necessarily require that superintendent's signature be affixed by him in all cases, but his signature may be affixed by his secretary or any other person under his direction and authority.

2. Evidence ⇨83(1)—It must be assumed that superintendent of hospital for insane ratified act of his secretary in signing name to certificate for discharge of patient (Pol. Code, §§ 2152, 2189).

It must be assumed that superintendent of hospital for insane, who is chief executive officer of hospital under Pol. Code, § 2152, was conversant with acts of his subordinates and ratified act of his secretary in signing certificate with his own name signed thereto by his secretary in his behalf to secure discharge of patient under section 2189.

3. Insane persons ⇨51—Certificate for discharge of patient from insane hospital, though superintendent's name was attached thereto by secretary, held valid, where certificate was recorded and no attempt was made to set aside discharge or reincarcerate patient (Pol. Code, § 2189; Civ. Code, § 40).

Certificate for discharge of patient from state hospital for insane under Pol. Code, §

2189, though signature of superintendent thereon was affixed by his secretary, held valid, precluding defense that notes and trust deed thereafter executed by former insane person were void for want of capacity under Civ. Code, § 40, where certificate was accepted for filing by secretary of board of managers of hospital and was recognized as regularly issued and was recorded and nothing was done for period of almost 11 years to set aside discharge or to reincarcerate patient.

4. Insane persons ⇨51—Patient's escape from hospital for insane prior to discharge held not to deprive superintendent of power to order his release (Pol. Code, § 2189).

Fact that patient had escaped from state hospital for insane and was absent therefrom at time of granting of discharge held not to deprive superintendent of hospital of power to order release of such patient by filing certificate of discharge under Pol. Code, § 2189.

5. Evidence ⇨63—In action to set aside notes and trust deed executed by one discharged from hospital for insane 11 years before, mental competency at time of execution was assumed and strong showing necessary to warrant relief because of defect in discharge (Pol. Code, § 2189, Civ. Code, § 40).

Where certified copy of discharge of patient from state hospital for insane under Pol. Code, § 2189, had been on file for almost 11 years, and there was no showing that former patient had ever had guardian appointed or was mentally incompetent to transact business at time of execution of notes and trust deed, court, in action by his administrator to set aside notes and trust deed executed by him, was required to assume that he was at time of their execution in full possession of his faculties, and a very strong showing was necessary to grant plaintiff relief because of technical defect in discharge permitting application of Civ. Code, § 40, which provides that no one can make conveyance or other contract after being judicially determined of unsound mind.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Benito County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Action by R. Shaw, substituted in place of Joseph A. Fleming, as administrator of the estate of James F. Fleming, deceased, against James B. Feehan and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with direction.

James B. Feehan and Joseph Farry, both of San Francisco (John B. Lounibos, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

James Snell and A. M. Runnells, both of Hollister, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This action was instituted to set aside and have declared illegal and void two promissory notes, and a trust deed given to secure their payment, on the ground that James F. Fleming, whose name was signed to said notes and deed, had, prior to the date of said notes and deed, by an order and judgment of the superior court of San Benito county, been declared and adjudged to be insane and committed to the state hospital at Agnews, and that he had never been legally discharged therefrom. The facts of the case are undisputed, and show that Fleming was on the 25th day of August, 1909, by an order and judgment of the superior court of the county of San Benito, declared to be insane and so far disordered in mind as to endanger health, person, and property. By said order and judgment he was committed to the state hospital at Agnews for treatment. Shortly after being committed and delivered to said hospital, that is, on September 8, 1909, he escaped therefrom and was never thereafter apprehended or returned to said hospital. On March 31, 1912, there was filed with the secretary of the board of managers of the Agnews State Hospital a purported discharge of said Fleming from said hospital, and on April 8, 1912, there was filed in the office of the county clerk of said county of San Benito a certified copy of said purported discharge, which said certified copy, together with the certification thereof, is in the following words and figures:

"Agnews State Hospital, Agnews, California.

"I, Leonard Stocking, Medical Superintendent of Agnews State Hospital, hereby certify that I do hereby discharge James F. Fleming, a patient at said State Hospital, committed from San Benito County, August 26th, 1909, upon the ground that the said patient has recovered as provided in Sub. 1, Section 2189 Political Code.

"Dated March 31, 1912.

"Leonard Stocking, Medical Superintendent.

"By Geo. B. Waterhouse, Secretary.

"State of California, County of Santa Clara.

"I, L. M. Simonsen, Secretary of the Board of Managers of Agnews State Hospital, hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing copy with the original certificate of discharge of James F. Fleming, the patient therein named, filed with me on the 31st day of March, 1912, and that the same is a full, true and correct copy of such original and of the whole thereof.

L. M. Simonsen,

"Secretary Board of Managers, Agnews State Hospital."

On March 1, 1923, almost eleven years after the filing of said certified copy in the office of the county clerk, said Fleming executed and delivered his promissory note for $1,500 and interest to the Yerba Realty Company, and at the same time and for the purpose of securing the payment of said promissory note he executed and delivered to James B. and Grace S. Feehan a trust deed to certain real property owned by him and situated in said county of San Benito. He later executed a second promissory note for $100.90 in favor of the Yerba Realty Company, which was also secured by the terms of said trust deed. On June 7, 1923, Fleming died, and thereafter

Joseph A. Fleming was appointed the administrator of his estate. On June 13, 1923, said administrator instituted this action. Since the entry of the judgment herein, said Joseph A. Fleming has resigned as such administrator and R. Shaw was appointed administrator of said estate in place of the said Joseph A. Fleming, and the said R. Shaw has been regularly substituted as the plaintiff herein.

It is not contended that Fleming at the time he executed the said notes and trust deed was not in full possession of all his mental faculties, neither is it contended that any advantage was taken of him or that any fraud was practiced upon him in the transaction involving said notes and trust deed, nor is it contended that he did not receive full and adequate consideration for the execution and delivery of said notes and deed.

Section 40 of the Civil Code is as follows: "After his incapacity has been judicially determined, a person of unsound mind can make no conveyance or other contract, nor delegate any power or waive any right, until his restoration to capacity. But a certificate from the medical superintendent or resident physician of the insane asylum to which such person may have been committed, showing that such person has been discharged therefrom, cured and restored to reason, shall establish the presumption of legal capacity in such person from the time of such discharge."

Section 2189 of the Political Code prescribes the manner in which a patient committed to one of the hospitals of this state for the insane may be discharged therefrom. At the time Fleming was discharged from the Agnews Hospital, as claimed by appellants, this section read in part as follows:

"The superintendent of a state hospital on filing his written certificate with the secretary of board of managers, may discharge any patient, except one held upon an order of a court or judge having criminal jurisdiction in an action or proceeding arising out of a criminal action or proceeding arising out of a criminal offense, at any time, as follows:

"A patient who, in his judgment, has recovered. * * *

"When any person is discharged as recovered from a state hospital, a copy of the certificate of discharge, duly certified by the secretary of the board of managers, may be filed for record with the clerk of the superior court of the county from which said person was committed. The clerk shall record the same in a book kept for that purpose and shall keep an index thereof. No fees shall be charged by the clerk for performing such duties. Such certified copy of such certificate and the record of the same shall have the same legal effect as the original, and if no guardian has been appointed for such person as provided by sections 1763 and 1764 of the Code of Civil Procedure, such certificate, duly certified copies thereof and such record thereof shall have the same legal force and effect as a judgment of restoration to capacity made under the provisions of section 1766 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

The trial court concluded that the requirements of section 2189 of the Political Code relating to the discharge of persons committed to a hospital for the insane had never been complied with, in so far as Fleming's purported discharge had been brought about, and therefore held in accordance with the terms of section 40 of the Civil Code that Fleming at the date he signed the promissory notes and trust deed involved herein was legally incapable of executing said instruments by reason of this previous order and judgment adjudicating him to be insane. This decision of the trial court was in accordance with the contention of the respondent made in said court, and now made here for the purpose of sustaining said judgment. The basis of respondent's said contention is that the written certificate filed with the secretary of the board of managers of the Agnews State Hospital, which purported to discharge Fleming as cured, was not signed by the superintendent of said hospital but by Geo. B. Waterhouse, his secretary; that there was no law authorizing the secretary of the superintendent to sign such a certificate; and therefore said certificate was and is void and of no effect in so far as it purported to be a discharge of Fleming from said hospital.

[1-3] The provision of section 2189 of the Political Code regarding this certificate of discharge declares that, "The superintendent of a state hospital on filing his written certificate with the secretary of board of managers, may discharge any patient." Nothing is said in this or any other section of the Code that this certificate shall be signed by the superintendent, although in our opinion the natural inference to be drawn from the language used is that it should bear the signature of that official. This does not mean that in all cases it must be actually and personally signed by the superintendent. If his signature thereto is affixed by his secretary, or by any other person under his direction and authority, the signing of said instrument would be the act of the superintendent himself. There is no showing that the superintendent did not authorize and direct his secretary to sign his name to the discharge of Fleming. From the surrounding circumstances it must be assumed that such authority and direction were actually given by said superintendent to his secretary. The certificate was accepted for filing by the secretary of the board of managers of said hospital. It appears that the hospital authorities recognized this certificate to be regularly issued, as no attempt, so far as the record shows, was ever made to apprehend Fleming for the purpose of restoring him to the custody of said authorities. A copy of said certificate of discharge, duly certified by the secretary of said board of managers, was regularly issued and recorded in the office of the county clerk of the county of San Benito. Nothing was ever done thereafter by said authorities or by the officials of said county, or by any one else during the lifetime of Fleming, a period of almost eleven years as we have already seen, to set aside said discharge or to reincarcerate Fleming under the judgment committing him to said hospital. The only inference to be drawn from these acts of the hospital authorities is that they recognized this certificate of discharge as one issued by the superintendent himself. It must be assumed that the superintendent, who is the chief executive officer of the hospital (Pol. Code, § 2152), was thoroughly conversant with the acts of his subordinates, and therefore if he had not previously expressly authorized the signing of his name to said certificate by his secretary, that he acquiesced and approved such practice and thereby ratified the act of his secretary in filing the certificate with his own name signed thereto by his secretary. Respondent cites the cases of Warren v. Ferguson, 108 Cal. 535, 41 P. 417, and Rauer v. Lowe, 107 Cal. 232, 40 P. 337, in support of his contention that the certificate not having been signed by the superintendent, or one empowered by law to act for said superintendent, is void. These were cases involving street assessments, where the proceedings were in invitum and which were invalid if the statute under which said proceedings were taken was not strictly complied with. We do not think that the same rule should apply in proceedings for the release of a patient from an insane asylum where the result of such a release would be the restoration of the patient to his liberty and freedom. It is therefore our opinion that the certificate of discharge in the case of Fleming was not invalid by reason of the facts shown in this case.

[4] It is further contended by respondent that the superintendent had no jurisdiction to release Fleming, he not being an actual inmate of said hospital at the time of said release. This question was before this court in People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 441, 48 P. 389. In that case the defendant while an inmate in an insane asylum of this state, to which he had been regularly committed by order of court, escaped therefrom. He was never retaken. The resident physician, being of the opinion before his escape that the patient had been fully restored, intended to discharge him. Very shortly after his escape the resident physician had an appropriate record made of the discharge of the patient as recovered. Upon this state of facts this court held: "The statute concerning the management of the asylum provides that the resident physician shall be the executive officer of the institution, and shall discharge such patients as, in his opinion, have permanently recovered their reason.' St. 1875-76, p. 135. And the fact that defendant had escaped when his recovery was thus determined by competent authority is no ground for impeaching such determination. The statute did not make his corporeal presence a condition of the valid exercise of the power to discharge him. See Kellogg v. Cochran, 87 Cal. 192, 25 P. 677 [12 L. R. A. 104]. Respondent relies upon Aldrich v. Barton, 153 Cal. 488, 95 P. 900, as laying down a different rule. The facts in that case are essentially different from those before us and from those before the court in People v. Geiger, supra, as will be readily seen from a reading of the following excerpt from the opinion found at page 496 of 153 Cal. (95 P. 904) of the reported case: "One who has for many years been away from the asylum, claiming, without opposition, to have been discharged by virtue of an order purporting to have that effect, and over whom the asylum authorities do not exercise, or claim the right to exercise any power of restraint whatever, cannot be said to be a 'patient' within the meaning of the law. Such was the condition of the plaintiff, as is found by the court on ample evidence." In that case this court held that the superintendent had no jurisdiction to grant to such a person a discharge for the reason that a prior discharge had been issued to the patient, which, "whether valid or not, was treated as effectual by the asylum authorities and by the plaintiff."

We find nothing in the statute which would deprive the superintendent of the power to grant a discharge to a patient who had escaped from the hospital, and who was absent therefrom at the time of the granting of said discharge. In fact, this court held in People v. Geiger, supra, that a discharge granted under such circumstances was valid, and we see no reason to depart from the ruling announced by the court on that occasion.

[5] The equities in this case are all on the side of the appellants. In good faith they have parted with their money or property in the belief that Fleming was competent to transact business, and that he was not under any restraint which would legally disqualify him from dealing with his property. A certified copy of his discharge had been on file in the office of the county clerk of the county in which the property described in the trust deed was situated for almost eleven years before the trust deed was executed. Presumably during this period of time Fleming had been caring for said property and dealing with it as one competent to care for his own property. There is no evidence that Fleming ever had a guardian appointed either of his person or his property. We have before referred to the fact that the respondent does not seek to avoid said notes and trust deed on the ground that Fleming was mentally incompetent to transact business at the time of their execution. We must assume, therefore, that at the time of this transaction Fleming was in the full possession of all his mental faculties and was in every way mentally competent to transact business. It would require a very strong showing under these circumstances for a court to hold that because of some slight technical defect in Fleming's discharge from the Agnews hospital years before, the appellants in this case are to be despoiled of their money or property of which Fleming received the benefit during his lifetime. Such a case has not been made out. The discharge granted to Fleming, in the words of Mr. Justice Sloss, in Aldrich v. Barton, supra, "whether valid or not, was treated as effectual by the asylum authorities." It must have been so treated by Fleming himself, for the reason that after its issuance he assumed the care and management of his property, even to the extent of borrowing money thereon as evidenced by the execution and delivery of the notes and trust deed involved herein. To permit him or his personal representative under these circumstances to repudiate his acts to the detriment and loss of persons dealing with him in utmost good faith would be to countenance a most flagrant fraud against innocent persons. We do not feel called upon under the facts in this case to pursue such a course.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to the trial court to dismiss the action.

Supreme Court of California. July 17, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 15, 1929.

I. Corporations ⇨225—Stock authorized to be issued on condition that holder waive certain rights should have been included in determining stockholders' liability (Civ. Code, § 322).

Where permit from corporation commissioner, authorizing corporation to sell one share of its stock to each of its five incorporators at par for cash and 254 shares to K. for his option to purchase certain realty, was issued on condition that K. should first execute a written waiver of his right to participate in distribution of corporation's assets, in case of dissolution, until owners of all other securities should be paid in full, and K. executed waiver which was accepted by directors, and contract on basis of which plaintiff was suing to enforce stockholders' liability for corporate indebtedness under Civ. Code, § 322, was executed immediately thereafter, held that the 254 shares issued to K. should have been included in category of subscribed stock in determining stockholder's liability, notwithstanding waiver so filed by K. was rejected by commissioner and a new waiver, which in fact added nothing to the first, was subsequently accepted.

2. Corporations ⇨225—Stock issued under waiver accepted by corporation commissioner should have been included in determining stockholders' liability on contract subsequently ratified (Civ. Code, § 322).

Where contract between plaintiff suing to enforce stockholders' liability for corporate indebtedness under Civ. Code, § 322, was not considered binding until ratified by officers of corporation, which was done after written waiver of right to participate in assets and dividends of corporation in case of dissolution until after other security holders had been paid in full had been filed by certain stockholder and accepted by corporation commissioner, stock subsequently issued under such waiver should have been included in computing stockholders' liability.

Action by Joseph L. Stewart against Louis E. Engelberg and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Arthur L. Shannon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Action upon stockholders' liability for corporate indebtedness (Civ. Code, § 322).

Plaintiff sued each of the five directors of United Income Properties, Inc., a corporation, for a one-fifth of his demand. Issue was joined by all the defendants other than Ray B. Nisbet, who was not served with process. A jury was called in the action and by its verdict fixed the corporate indebtedness at $25,000, and the share of each of the defendants at one-fifth thereof. Judgment passed for plaintiff accordingly. Defendants have appealed upon the full record.

[1] The sole proposition requiring discussion is the claim of defendants that one Harry Klarman owned 254 shares of the subscribed capital stock of the corporation at the time the liability sued upon was incurred, and from this fact it is contended that the liability of each of the defendants was a $\frac{1}{250}$ instead of a $\frac{1}{5}$ of said corporate debt. We agree with this contention of appellants, although we base our conclusion, shown by the following recital of facts to be justified, primarily upon a ground not urged by them:

On and prior to February 27, 1925, Harry Klarman and B. J. Klarman, his brother, were acting in concert to promote the erection at Twenty-Eighth street and San Pablo avenue, Oakland, of a $1,000,000 structure to be known as the Boulevard Hotel. To that end Harry Klarman had secured an option on a building site, and on the date above mentioned he had caused to come into being said United Properties, Inc., a corporation, the charter of which named five persons to act as directors thereof for the first year. On March 17, 1925, at the first meeting of the board of directors, said Klarman proposed in writing to said corporation to assign to it his option for a certain number of shares of stock and a certain amount of money. By resolution of the board this offer was accepted, subject to approval of the state corporation department. On March 19th application was made to said department to confirm this arrangement and to authorize the sale of 12,741 shares of treasury stock to the public. The corporation department made certain objections to this transaction. Later and about April 28, 1925, at the second meeting of the board of directors of said corporation, said Klarman made in writing a second proposal designed to meet the objections of the corporation department. This new proposition was also promptly ratified by the board of directors, the essence of which arrangement called for the issuance to said Klarman of 254 shares of stock in exchange for said option and for promotion stock to the amount of 2,000 shares to be issued share for share as treasury stock was sold. On the same day an amended application for a permit was filed, and thereafter, on May 6, 1925, a permit was duly issued, the material portions thereof here involved being as follows:

"United Income Properties, Incorporated, a California corporation, is hereby authorized to sell and issue 15,000 shares of its capital stock as herein below set forth: 1st. To sell and issue one share of its capital stock to each of its five incorporators, at par for cash, lawful money of the United States, for the uses and purposes recited in its application, and so as to net the applicant the full amount of the selling price thereof. 2nd. To issue to Harry Klarman, 254 shares of its capital stock, in exchange for the considerations recited in its application. * * *

"This permit is issued upon each of the following conditions: * * * (e) That this permit shall not become effective for any purpose unless and until said Harry Klarman shall execute his or their agreement in writing with said company (and file a copy thereof with the Commissioner of Corporations) in which he or they shall, in effect, agree as owner of 2000 shares, herein authorized to be issued to him or them, that in the event of the dissolution or insolvency of said company, occurring while said shares shall be so required to be held in escrow, the owner of such shares shall not, without the consent of said Commissioner, participate in any distribution of assets of the company until after the owners of all other securities shall have been paid the full face or par value thereof. That prior to the sale of any of said shares said Harry Klarman shall duly execute an instrument in writing whereby he or they shall in effect agree to waive the payment and accrual of dividends on any of the shares issued to him or them, until such time as all stockholders, who have paid money for their shares, shall have been paid dividends at the rate of 8 per cent per annum for two consecutive years."

In a bona fide effort to comply with all the requirements of the corporation department, said Klarman submitted to the corporation on May 29, 1925, a letter accepting unreservedly the restrictions imposed by said permit, which letter, after reciting at length the said paragraph (e) above quoted, ended with the following language: "Pursuant to the foregoing, I hereby agree on behalf of myself, my heirs, executors, administrators and assigns to comply with each, every and all of the foregoing provisions of said permit, and will in all respects conform thereto. Harry Klarman."

Thereupon the corporation on June 2, 1925, took the following action with respect thereto: "* * * 'The foregoing agreement is hereby accepted, confirmed and approved this 2nd day of June, 1925. United Income Properties, Inc., By Ray B. Nisbet, Vice-President.' On motion duly made, seconded and carried the following resolution was unanimously adopted: Be it resolved that the foregoing agreement of Harry Klarman be, and the same is hereby accepted, confirmed and approved, and the vice-president is hereby authorized and directed to formally execute on behalf of this company the said agreement of said Harry Klarman."

A copy of the communication of said Klarman and a transcript of the above-mentioned proceedings respecting same were forthwith and prior to June 4, 1925, lodged with the corporation department, whereupon the corporation department communicated with said corporation respecting said waiver in the following language: "* * * In re: United Income Properties, Inc. In connection with the agreements required to be entered into by Harry Klarman under the terms and conditions of the recent permit granted this company by this Department, you are advised that the proposed agreement of Harry Klarman does not constitute an actual waiver of his rights in case of dissolution and an actual waiver of dividends, and it is therefore unsatisfactory. * * *"

Thereafter, and on June 10, 1925, plaintiff, an architect, entered into a contract in writing with the corporation for the making of plans and the supervision of the construction of said projected hotel. But for reasons not necessary to here relate, the whole scheme failed and out of said contract arose this cause of action. The day following the execution of the contract, to wit: June 11, 1925, said Klarman re-executed a new waiver intended to comply fully with subdivision (e) of said permit and to meet the criticism of said corporation department respecting said former waiver, but in our opinion nothing of substance was added that had not been previously included in the waiver already on file.

From the above recital of facts it seems too clear for controversy that 254 shares of stock were on and after June 4, 1925, the date of filing of the first waiver, in the category of subscribed capital stock owned by said Harry Klarman. Every condition of the permit had been complied with. The stock had been fully paid for; only the formal issuance of the certificate remained to be done, but this was not required to bind him. The whole scheme and plan was that of Klarman and his brother, and it would be an undue submission to form and a disregard of substance to hold otherwise than that Harry Klarman was the chief stockholder at the time the contract with plaintiff was entered into. Indeed, Klarman and his brother negotiated the contract with plaintiff, and why they were not made parties thereto is not thoroughly explained in the record.

[2] We reach the same conclusion from another standpoint. Admittedly plaintiff did not consider the contract for architect's fees and other services as binding or subsisting until ratified by the officers of the corporation. This was not done until June 22, 1925. On this date all terms and conditions of the permit had been fully complied with, even to the extent of meeting the technical objection of the corporation department as to the form of the said waiver. On that date Harry Klarman was recognized as the guiding spirit and chief stockholder of said corporation. It may also be noted in this connection that on said 22d day of June, 1925, the defendant R. C. Young retired from the board and B. J. Klarman took his place. It seems but reasonable to hold that the liability to plaintiff was incurred on that day, June 22d, and not on June 10th, the date appearing in the caption of the contract. Unruh v. Kauffman (Cal. Sup.) 270 P. 440.

From these two standpoints at least the judgment is erroneous, and it is hereby reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action of ejectment by the California Packing Corporation against Manuel Lopez, individually and as administrator of the estate of John Lopez, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinions of District Court of Appeal in 273 P. 587 and 274 P. 358.

T. A. Farrell and George A. Work, both of Sacramento, and W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for appellant.

Rufus H. Kimball and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, all of San Francisco, and Joseph M. Raines, of Fairfield, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Appeal from judgment entered upon a directed verdict for plaintiff in an action of ejectment.

The case involves the question of the survivability of rights under a written agreement denominated an "asparagus cropping contract" entered into on February 15, 1924, between plaintiff's predecessor, the Wright Corporation, and John Lopez and John Souza, copartners doing business as John Souza & Co., the pertinent terms of which are substantially as follows: The Wright Corporation covenanted to permit John Souza & Co. to occupy for the cropping seasons of 1924-1934, inclusive, certain lands comprising about 100 acres in the Sacramento River Delta district; and to grow asparagus thereon and intercrops as approved by said corporation, which was to furnish the company with all necessary tools, teams, asparagus roots, etc., and an allowance of $5.50 per acre for the preparation of said land for planting, and to pay it after harvesting, washing, packing, and delivery of the crop, as directed by said corporation, 55 per cent. of the net proceeds of all asparagus and 75 per cent. of all intercrops. Said company covenanted to care for and cultivate said growing asparagus and to harvest, gather, wash, pack, and deliver it as directed by the corporation, to furnish at its own expense all labor necessary for that purpose, and in all respects to care for and improve the land, buildings, and equipment in its possession. Said contract contained the further covenant that: "The second party shall have no right to assign this agreement or sublet the above described land or any part thereof, without the written consent of the first party."

On February 23, 1925, with the written consent of the Wright Corporation, John Souza & Co. assigned said contract to John Lopez. On March 6, 1925, he was accidentally killed. His brother, Manuel Lopez, a minor at the time, but who became of age November 17, 1925, thereupon immediately took up his abode upon the land and assumed charge of the growing of said crops and of otherwise fulfilling in all respects the terms of said contract. On February 10, 1926, he was granted letters of administration upon the estate of John Lopez. In August, 1925, and January, 1926, the Wright Corporation, which had made no objection to his retention of the premises, issued and turned over to him checks made out to John Lopez covering the amounts due under said agreement from the sale of the 1925 bean and asparagus crops. On December 31, 1925, plaintiff, California Packing Corporation, purchased from the Wright Corporation about 5,000 acres of land, which included the 100 acres and pump house here involved. Defendant, then having learned that his right to continue under said contract was questioned, made no further effort to farm the land, but retained his residence at the pump house. Thereafter this action was instituted to eject him and to recover damages in the sum of $100. Upon the trial, at the close of the testimony, the court directed the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff, which was done, and judgment thereon was duly entered in its favor. Defendant has appealed.

[1] If said contract is inherently assignable and survived the death of John Lopez, the correctness of appellant's contention that the court erred in directing the verdict for plaintiff cannot be doubted. Contracts for cultivation of the soil are not generally held to be contracts terminable upon death. Gribbling v. Bohan, 26 Cal. App. 771, 148 P. 530; Husheon v. Kelley, 162 Cal. 656, 124 P. 231; LaRue v. Groezinger, 84 Cal. 281, 24 P. 42, 18 Am. St. Rep. 179. Mute evidence that the contract here did not call for the peculiar skill or personal services of any one individual lies in the fact that the assignor of John Lopez was a copartnership.

signment, hereinabove quoted, forbids only voluntary assignment by the parties; it is not violated by an involuntary assignment by operation of law (Farnum v. Hefner, 92 Cal. 543, 28 P. 602), and the fact that it was necessary to insert it is itself an implication of the inherent assignability of the contract, and hence its inherent survivability. These terms are practically interchangeable. Wikstrom v. Yolo Fliers Club (Cal. Sup.) 274 P. 959, and cases there cited. The presumption is that a party making such a contract intends to bind his executors and administrators. Estate of Fulmer, 203 Cal. 693, 265 P. 920, 58 A. L. R. 430. Furthermore, that said contract was not merely one of employment is shown by its context, particularly by the covenant charging John Lopez with the duty of furnishing at his own expense all labor necessary for cultivation of the crop. Even a contract of employment, coupled with such an interest, would be survivable.

[5] Appellant urges that, although denominated a cropping contract, the agreement really creates an interest in land and is a lease. The above pronouncement renders unnecessary a precise classification of the document, which in any event was inherently assignable and survived the death of John Lopez.

[6-8] Other considerations also justify a reversal of this judgment. Even if it were true that said contract called for such personal service by John Lopez as rendered it terminable upon his death, there would still remain the question of whether said corporation, by its acts and conduct in permitting Manuel Lopez to continue in possession for many months, was not estopped to claim that the agreement ended or that said provision against assignment without its consent was not waived. These are questions of fact for a jury, as is also the question of whether sufficient evidence was adduced to establish plaintiff as an innocent purchaser for value without due notice of defendant's occupancy of said land. The court has the right to direct a verdict only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving opposing evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn therefrom, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality which would support a verdict contrary to the one directed, if given.

The record before us shows that the evidence upon the above issues was not without conflict and was in fact amply sufficient to warrant their submission to the jury. There is evidence that the Wright Corporation permitted defendant to come upon the said land without protest two days after the death of said John Lopez and to remain there for more than nine months without objection, during all this time dealing with its superintendent and spending money, amounting to some $4,000, for cultivation and labor as provided in said agreement; that said corporation during 1925 accepted from him and sold an asparagus crop and intercrop of beans, dividing the proceeds thereof as in said agreement provided and making payment to defendant by check made out to said John Lopez, during all of which time a correspondence was being conducted looking to the transfer of the instrument, therein called a lease, into the name of Manuel Lopez. There is evidence that plaintiff's representative went over said property thoroughly more than once prior to its purchase and learned of the possession of said acreage and pump house by Manuel Lopez. There is evidence that the heaviest expense in connection with growing asparagus in proportion to the profits is that of the first years, and therefore termination of such a contract prior to expiration of the term thereof results in an unjustified loss to the grower. As above stated, such evidence could have resulted in a verdict for the defendant, and it was for the jury to pass upon it.

Judgment reversed.

REDWINE v. TROWBRIDGE et al.★
(Civ. 6835.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 10, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Aug. 2, 1929.

1. Trover and conversion ⚡17—Terms of conditional sales contract held binding as against buyer's judgment creditor and constable selling automobile under execution.

Where plaintiff sold automobile under conditional sales contract reserving title in plaintiff, providing that if buyer failed to make payments on time seller could without demand or notice take possession of automobile, and defendant recovered judgment against conditional buyer in action in which conditional seller was named as defendant but in which no judgment was recovered against him, and defendant constable sold automobile under execution to satisfy judgment, held, that terms of conditional sales contract were binding as against defendants, and, since conditional buyer was in default, conditional seller was entitled to possession of automobile at time of execution sale and therefore had a complete case against defendants for conversion.

2. Trover and conversion ⚡3—Denial of allegation that defendants sold automobile under execution with knowledge of conditional seller's rights created immaterial issue.

Where complaint of conditional seller, suing conditional buyer's judgment creditor and constable who levied execution on automobile, alleged that defendants acted with full knowledge of seller's rights and claims when they sold automobile under execution, defendants' denial of such allegation created an immaterial issue.

3. Execution ⚡184—Conditional seller made party defendant in action by conditional buyer's judgment creditor could make no claim as third party, in execution sale under judgment therein.

Where conditional seller suing conditional buyer's judgment creditor and constable for conversion of conditional seller's interest in automobile by sale thereof under execution was party defendant to action in which judgment on which execution was had was rendered, he was a second party and not a third party, and therefore could make no claim as a third party, as against defendants' allegations that no sufficient third party claim was served on constable.

4. Automobiles ⚡19—Where conditional sale contract was not registered, conditional buyer had no title subject to attachment, conditional seller being owner under statute (Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, subd. e).

Where plaintiff, as conditional seller suing conditional buyer's judgment creditor and constable for conversion of conditional seller's interest in automobile by sale thereof under execution, showed that automobile was registered in name of "U— Garage" and that he was owner of said garage, and no evidence showed that conditional sale contract was registered, no title rested in conditional buyer subject to attachment, and plaintiff was owner of automobile under Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, subd. e (St. 1923, p. 524) and transfer to conditional buyer was incomplete.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Guy Redwine against E. George Trowbridge and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed with direction.

G. E. Redwine, of Ukiah, for appellant.

H. W. A. Weske, of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to recover damages for an alleged conversion of his interest in an automobile. The defendants appeared and filed separate answers. A trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Facts admitted by the pleadings, or found by the court, among others, included the following: The defendant Mathews was constable of Santa Rosa township, Sonoma county, Cal., and the defendant Belden was his bondsman. On the 23d day of October, 1925, the plaintiff was the owner of an automobile. On that date the plaintiff and Jones entered into an executory contract of sale. By the terms of that contract there was a conditional sale to Jones, and the purchaser paid down $300, leaving $979.50 unpaid, and of that sum three installments of $88.94 were past due at the time of the attachment. By the terms of that contract title to the automobile remained in the seller until all payments were made; and if the purchaser failed to make his payments on time the seller could at his option, without demand or notice, take possession of the automobile. On the 23d day of February, 1926, the defendant Trowbridge in the justices' court commenced an action against this plaintiff, Jones, and Morris, to recover a judgment for $104.13. On the same day he took out an attachment which was levied on the automobile. On the 13th day of April, 1926, he recovered a judgment against the defendant Jones for his demand and costs. On the 9th day of May, 1926, Trowbridge took out an execution which directed the constable to levy on the property of the defendant Jones, and the constable proceeded to levy it and did levy it on the automobile. Thereafter notice was duly given, and on the 17th day of May, 1926, at the sale under execution the automobile was sold to the defendant Trowbridge. On the 11th day of May, 1926, this plaintiff served on the defendant Mathews a written claim and demand setting forth his title to the automobile, and therein reciting: "Demand is hereby made upon you for the payment of the balance of the purchase price of the aforesaid automobile amounting to the sum of $979.50." At this point it should be noted that the judgment in the attachment case was entered on the 13th day of April, and the record shows that the case was not dismissed as to this plaintiff, but does not show whether an appeal had or had not been taken, and the time to appeal did not expire until the 13th day of May, two days after the claim and demand just mentioned and referred to. On the 14th day of June, 1926, this plaintiff made a demand on each of the defendants for the possession of the automobile or the payment of the balance due and such demand was refused. At the time of the sale of the automobile by the defendant Mathews to the defendant Trowbridge the automobile was of the value of $1,025.

[1] As against the defendants in the attachment suit, the terms of the conditional sales contract are binding. The title to the automobile rested in this plaintiff. As Jones was in default, under the terms of the contract this plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the automobile at the time of the attachment and at the time of the execution sale. 35 Cyc.

710. It therefore appears that a complete case existed in favor of the plaintiff.

[2] In his complaint the plaintiff alleged that after full knowledge of his rights and claims the defendant Mathews sold to the defendant Trowbridge. That allegation was denied by the defendants. Such denial created an immaterial issue. Poggi v. Scott, 167 Cal. 372, 139 P. 815, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925.

In the third and fourth findings of fact, and in another finding of fact misplaced and appearing as the second conclusion of law, facts are set forth to the effect that the certificate of registration which was in the container attached to the car when the car was attached, showed incomplete title in this plaintiff; in other words, that it showed title in C. L. Bihn. All of these facts were outside of the issues and, as will presently appear, were also immaterial.

[3] In the answers of the defendants they pleaded that no sufficient third party claim was served on the constable. As this plaintiff, Guy Redwine, was a party to the action in the justices' court, he was a second party and not a third party, and therefore had no opportunity to make a claim as a third party.

The defendants claim that this plaintiff had no complete title which would support his action. Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 228 P. 435; General Motors Accep. Corp. v. Dallas, 198 Cal. 365, 245 P. 184. Those cases are not at all in point as to the facts of this case. Balfour v. Burnett, 28 Or. 72, 41 P. 1, 2.

On April 12, 1924, the Ukiah Auto Supply Company negotiated a sale to C. L. Bihn. That sale was registered April 19, 1924, and certificate issued. It was in the car when the car was attached. On October 23, 1925, Ukiah Garage made a purported sale to Jones. On February 4, 1926, a certificate issued to Ukiah Garage, Guy Redwine, proprietor. On April 13, 1926, the car was attached in the possession of Jones. Ukiah Auto Supply Company was Banker and Crawford. (Tr. 71a, 71b). Ukiah Garage was Guy Redwine. Guy Redwine brought this action in his own name. On the trial (Tr. 8) the variance between Ukiah Garage as owner and Guy Redwine as owner was challenged. The reply was that the defendant had not pleaded the defense. Cook v. Fowler, 101 Cal. 89, 35 P. 431. The objection was overruled. The ruling was correct.

[4] As the case was submitted to the trial court the plaintiff showed the car to be registered in the name of Ukiah Garage and that he was the Ukiah Garage. The evidence does not show that the transfer to Jones was registered. It follows that no title rested in Jones subject to attachment and, notwithstanding the contract of October 23, 1925, the plaintiff was the owner (Motor Vehicle Act, § 45, subd. e) and the transfer to Jones was incomplete.

From what we have said it appears that the judgment was erroneously entered in favor of the defendants, and that on the admitted facts and the findings as made by the trial court the judgment should have been in favor of the plaintiff for $1,025, the admitted value of the car.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

One may be civilly liable who, without personally making affidavit required as basis for issuance of criminal complaint, has falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause procured criminal process to issue.

2. Malicious prosecution $\S$ 40—Defense of privilege under statute relating to libel is not bar to action for malicious prosecution (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

Defense of privilege, as provided by Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, relating to libel, is not a bar to an action for malicious prosecution.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action for damages for malicious prosecution by Earl R. Blancett and another against John Burr and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Chauncey Gardner, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. E. Moore, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment rendered against them in consequence of an order sustaining a demurrer to their complaint against defendants without leave to amend the complaint.

The action was for damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiffs by reason of the malicious prosecution of a criminal action against them instituted and maintained by defendants. The gist of the complaint was that "the said defendants, by joint and concerted action, and while contriving and maliciously intending to injure said plaintiffs, falsely, maliciously and without probable cause, procured and caused, certain criminal process to be issued against said plaintiffs, by falsely, maliciously and without probable cause," making a certain specified statement "and others of like import" to a chief of police, by reason of which he made an affidavit and caused a search warrant to issue as against the home of plaintiffs, and also caused a criminal complaint to issue against plaintiffs wherein they were charged with the commission of a designated criminal offense.

[1] Without reference to what may be the necessary allegations in a complaint of the character of that here involved, the principal point suggested and presented to this court by the parties to this appeal is whether one may be civilly liable who, without personally making the affidavit required as a basis for the issuance of a criminal complaint, has falsely, maliciously and without probable cause procured the criminal process to issue.

The general rule appears to be that "one who procures a third person to institute a malicious prosecution is liable in damages to the party injured to the same extent as if he had instituted the proceeding himself, * * *" and "that it is not necessary that the complaint or information on which the prosecution is based should have been signed by the person sought to be held liable in order to establish his liability in an action for malicious prosecution. It is enough if he was instrumental in setting the law in motion and caused the prosecution to proceed." Ann. Cas. 1918A, pages 485, 486, where authorities, including Kinsey v. Wallace, 36 Cal. 462, 480, are cited. To practically the same effect is the declaration of the law in 38 Corpus Juris, 395, where reference is also had to many authorities, and wherein it is stated that the test of liability in an action for malicious prosecution is whether the defendant was actively instrumental or was the proximate and efficient cause of maliciously putting the law in motion.

A case which is nearly parallel in its facts with the instant case is that of Holden v. Merritt, 92 Iowa, 707, 61 N. W. 390. Therein it appears that the defendant furnished an inspector of the United States government with facts on which the inspector filed an information on which the plaintiff was arrested. The defendant insisted that there was no evidence that he had instigated or procured the prosecution. With reference thereto, in part, the court said: "* * * It need not be shown that the defendant ordered or directed the warrant or process to issue, or that he participated in its execution. If he, on his own motion, gave information or made complaint to the officers of the law in such a manner as that, in the regular and ordinary course of events, an arrest must be made, or will probably follow, this is sufficient to warrant the jury in finding him the real prosecutor. [Citing authorities.]”

[2] In support of their contention that the defense of privilege, as provided by section 47 of the Civil Code, is a complete answer and bar to an action for malicious prosecution, respondents rely principally upon the case of Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 236, 28 P. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174. However, so far as the instant question is involved, the point of that case and other authorities to which respondents refer is to the effect that, under the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Code, no civil liability is incurred by one who libels another through the instrumentality of statements contained within the allegations of a criminal complaint. It is apparent that falsely and maliciously instituting and maintaining a criminal action is materially different and distinct from false and libelous words and statements which may be contained in the criminal complaint in the action. If the respective situations were identical and the law applicable thereto were as claimed by respondents, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to ever maintain an action for the malicious prosecution of a criminal action, no matter how reckless and unfounded the statements of the instigator of the criminal process, nor how flagrant or manifest were his bad faith in the matter.

Treating the appeal herein solely in the light of the question presented, that is, whether the complaint was fatally defective in that it disclosed that defendants did not personally make the affidavit which resulted in the issuance of the criminal process against plaintiffs, this court is convinced that the demurrer to the complaint should have been overruled.

It is ordered that the judgment be, and it is, reversed.

1. Appeal and error ☞544(3)—Where record contained no bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript, only errors appearing from inspection of judgment roll could be considered.

Where record contained nothing other than a so-called clerk's transcript and contained no bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript of testimony or of any proceedings had in action, the only errors specified in appellant's brief which could be noticed by appellate court were those appearing from an inspection of judgment roll.

2. Judgment ☞570(5)—Where dismissal does not purport to go to merits, court may not include order precluding plaintiff from instituting another action.

Where dismissal of an action does not purport to go to merits of case, court has no authority to include within judgment of dismissal an order which in effect precludes plaintiff from instituting another action in which merits of controversy may be litigated.

Plaintiff appeals from “the order of dismissal and the judgment * * * and presents for review * * * order denying motion for judgment; * * * order denying motion to return amended answer * * *; order denying motion to vacate order setting trial; * * * order denying motion to strike original answer.”

[1] The record herein contains nothing other than a so-called “Clerk's Transcript”—no bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript of the testimony, or of any proceedings had in the action. In view of such lack of conformity with statutory provisions and the practice regulating appeals, the only alleged errors specified in appellant's brief which may be noticed by this court are those which appear from an inspection of the judgment roll. 2 Cal. Jur. 816, and cases there cited.

[2] Appellant specifies prejudicial error in that by the judgment in question his action was dismissed “with prejudice to the commencement of another action.” The provisions of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure furnish the general authority for the trial court to order a dismissal of an action. As announced by decisions of the Supreme Court of this state, the ordinary rule is that the dismissal of an action does not operate as a bar to another action for the same cause of action as was stated in the action which was dismissed (Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 660, 48 P. 800; Davenport v. Turpin, 43 Cal. 597; Parks v. Dunlap, 86 Cal. 189, 25 P. 916; Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 505, 29 P. 121); but specifically, where the dismissal of an action does not purport to go to the merits of the case, the trial court has no authority to include within the judgment of dismissal an order which in effect precludes the plaintiff from instituting another action in which the merits of the controversy may be litigated. 18 Cor. Jur. 1201, and cases there cited. The case of Lindblom v. Mayar, 81 Wash. 350, 142 P. 695 is particularly in point.

In the instant case the conclusion of this court is that the judgment should be modified by striking therefrom the words "with prejudice to the commencement of another action"; otherwise the judgment should be affirmed. So ordered.

1. Brokers ⇨4—Surety on bond covering damage caused by principal as "real estate broker" held not liable for damages from alleged misrepresentations in broker's sale of note secured by trust deed (Real Estate Brokers' Act, § 9a).

Sale of note secured by deed of trust under which owner of note was beneficiary did not constitute sale or offer to sell or negotiation for sale of real estate or negotiation of loan thereon within Real Estate Brokers' Act (St. 1923, p. 93), defining real estate broker, and surety on broker's bond whose obligation was confined to damages caused by its principal while acting as real estate broker, under section 9a, was therefore not liable for damages from broker's alleged misrepresentations in connection with the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Real Estate Broker.]

2. Evidence ⇨474(18)—Witness who had no general knowledge of property values in vicinity and had never been in apartment house could not testify as to its value.

In action for damages for deceit in connection with sale of note secured by chattel mortgage and trust deed covering apartment house, witness who formerly owned building in vicinity, but whose knowledge of values was confined to his own property, and who had never been on real estate in question, was not qualified to testify as to value of apartment house.

3. Fraud ⇨57—Testimony as to price for which apartment house sold formerly was properly rejected on issue of its value in fraud action.

In action for damages for deceit in connection with sale of note secured by chattel mortgage and deed of trust on apartment house, testimony as to price for which apartment house sold on one occasion was properly rejected on issue of value of apartment house.

In action for damages for deceit in connection with sale of note secured by trust deed on apartment house, error in excluding testimony as to defendant's misrepresentations concerning property in another transaction and failure of court to find value of security or income therefrom or expense of foreclosure was immaterial, in view of finding that defendant's representations were not relied on.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1071(6)—Failure to find on additional issues is immaterial if findings made support judgment.

If findings actually made by trial court are sufficient to support judgment and are sustained by evidence, failure to find on additional issues which could not affect result is not material.

PER CURIAM. An action to recover damages for alleged deceit in connection with the sale by defendant Malmgren to the plaintiff of a promissory note secured by a chattel mortgage and a deed of trust.

Defendant Dempsey, who was a real estate broker, acted for defendant Malmgren in the transaction. The Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, a corporation, on November 28, 1924, as surety for defendant Dempsey, issued to the real estate commissioner its bond in the form prescribed by the Real Estate Brokers' Act, and was joined as a defendant in the action. A general demurrer filed by the corporation was sustained, and a judgment thereon was entered in its favor.

Upon the trial of the action upon the merits judgment was also entered in favor of the other defendants, and from both judgments the plaintiff has appealed.

The promissory note, which was originally for $17,840 and interest, was executed by Carl and Mary White to Rose Johnson on January 15, 1924, and was both as to principal and interest payable in monthly installments. As security therefor the makers executed to trustees a deed of trust to certain real property in San Francisco and also a chattel mortgage upon the furnishings in an apartment house situated upon the property. At the time of the execution of the trust deed there were two prior liens upon the property, aggregating $32,000.

It was alleged that defendant Dempsey, acting on behalf of Malmgren, conducted the negotiations, in the course of which he falsely represented the amount unpaid on the note, the value of the security, the cost of conducting the apartment house, the income therefrom, and that the security for the note was sufficient. The complaint set forth these amounts as represented with those which plaintiff contended were true in fact; the latter with the exception of the cost of conducting the apartment house, which was more, being less than represented. It was further alleged that plaintiff believed and relied upon the representations in making the purchase, and also that he was compelled to foreclose the mortgage and enforce the deed of trust, with the result that insufficient was realized to satisfy the note, all to his damage in the sum of $10,950.

The court found that the plaintiff was informed by the defendants that the balance unpaid on the note was $16,100, when in truth the balance was $16,000, but that both the plaintiff and the defendants were at the time informed by one of the debtors that the first amount was correct; that plaintiff personally examined the property, and after such examination reduced his offer for the note from $12,000 to $11,250, the latter being the amount paid therefor; that none of the misrepresentations averred were made, and that the plaintiff, who was experienced in the purchase and sale of property in San Francisco, relied upon no representations made by the defendants; that he was not misled, and suffered no damage by reason of any of the matters alleged in the complaint.

The appellant contends that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer of defendant corporation and in its rulings upon the admissibility of certain evidence, that the findings are unsupported, and that there was a failure to find on material issues.

[1] We find no merit in the first contention. A real estate broker as defined by the act "is a person * * * who, for a compensation, sells, or offers for sale, * * * or negotiates the purchase or sale or exchange of real estate, or who, for compensation, negotiates loans on real estate * * * for others as a whole or partial vocation." St. 1923, p. 93. It may be conceded that the acts alleged would if committed by one acting as a real estate broker constitute a breach of duty within the terms of the bond. Nittler v.

Continental Casualty Co. (Cal. App.) 271 P. 555. But the transaction in the present case, notwithstanding the owner of the note assigned to the plaintiff his rights as beneficiary under the deed of trust, did not constitute a sale or offer to sell or a negotiation for the purchase or sale of real estate, nor was it the negotiation of a loan thereon within the meaning of the act. Guy v. Brennen, 60 Cal. App. 452, 213 P. 265. The surety company was consequently not liable for the acts complained of, its obligation under the bond being confined to damage caused by its principal while acting as a real estate broker. Real Estate Brokers' Act, § 9a, St. 1923, pp. 93, 96.

[2, 3] Appellant sought to show by a witness who formerly owned a building in the vicinity of the apartment house in question, the value of the latter property. The witness' knowledge of values in the vicinity, so far as appears, was confined to the property owned by him, and it was further shown that he had never been upon the real estate in question or in the apartment house thereon. While it has been held that owners of property may be presumed to have sufficient knowledge of values in the neighborhood to testify to the value of that owned by them (Spring Valley Water-Works v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 540, 28 P. 681), here the witness was not shown to be familiar with values in the neighborhood nor with the property itself sufficiently to form an intelligent or correct judgment as to its value, and his testimony was properly rejected, as was also the offered testimony of a witness as to the price for which the apartment house sold on one occasion.

[4, 5] Appellant also attempted to prove that in another transaction, to which the plaintiff was not a party, defendant Dempsey misrepresented the value of the property. Where fraud in the purchase and sale of property is an issue, evidence of other frauds or fraudulent representations at or near the same time has been held to be admissible (Kornblum v. Arthurs, 154 Cal. 246, 97 P. 420); but in view of the finding—which was fully supported—that none of the representations made by defendant Dempsey were relied upon by appellant, any error in excluding this testimony became immaterial; as was also for the same reason the failure of the court to find the value of the property, the income from or the expense of conducting the apartment house, or the amount expended by appellant in foreclosing the mortgage and enforcing the deed of trust. If the findings actually made are sufficient to support the judgment and are sustained by the evidence, the failure to find on additional issues which could not affect the result is immaterial. Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 90 P. 521.

[6] The evidence shows that appellant at different times for a considerable period previous to the transaction in question had invested largely in real estate and securities in San Francisco; that he was unacquainted with the defendants before the negotiations commenced; that before purchasing the note he carefully investigated the value of the security and, based upon this investigation, reduced his first offer therefor. The testimony sufficiently shows that appellant was a shrewd business man too careful to rely, and that he did not rely, upon any representations by the agent; the latter testifying also that no misrepresentations were made. It further appears that the property, both real and personal, was purchased by appellant at the sales mentioned and that he is now the owner thereof.

We are satisfied, after a reading of the whole record, that the conclusions of the trial court are fully supported, and that no errors are shown which resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

BOYD et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 16, 1929.

As Modified Aug. 5 and Aug. 14, 1929.

1. Prohibition ☞5(1)—“Writ of prohibition” is not writ of error, and should not issue until court has had reasonable opportunity to correct error, if any.

“Writ of prohibition” is not writ of error, and should not issue until the fact finding court has had every reasonable opportunity to correct its error, if any, and statutory provisions for new trial or for appeal are for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Writ of Prohibition.]

2. New trial ☞12—Trial court may stay proceedings pending motion for new trial.

Pending motion for new trial, the trial court has the power to stay proceedings.

3. Trial ☞400(1)—Proposed findings and judgment may be followed by proposed amendments thereto.

Proposed findings and judgment may be followed by proposed amendments to the findings and judgment.

4. Prohibition ☞5(3)—Petitioners for writ of prohibition to stay proceedings to prevent signing proposed findings and judgment, not asking new trial or awaiting signing of findings and judgment and then asking new trial or appealing, held not entitled to writ.

Where petitioners for writ of prohibition to restrain further proceedings so as to prevent signing proposed findings and judgment which trial judge in reply to petition stated he did not intend to sign, did not ask for new trial or await signing of findings or judgment for plaintiff and then ask for new trial and stay of proceedings pending its determination and did not appeal or propose amendments to proposed findings and judgment which would reveal error, they were not in such peril that writ of prohibition was reasonably required.

5. Evidence ☞82—It is not presumed that trial judge will sign any proposed finding or judgment presented to him.

There is no presumption that trial judge will sign any proposed finding or judgment that is presented to him.

6. Evidence ☞82—Presumption is indulged that trial judge, before signing proposed finding or judgment, will await proposed amendments and then accept or reject such of both as he pleases.

Presumption will be indulged that trial judge before signing proposed finding or judgment presented to him will await proposed amendments as law contemplates he shall do, and then accept or reject such of both as he pleases.

Application by O. E. Boyd and others for a writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County and others, to restrain further proceedings in a certain action. Writ discharged, and the proceedings dismissed.

O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, Haas & Dunigan, and Horace S. Wilson, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Tompkins & Clark, D. L. Ault, and John A. Hewicker, all of San Diego, for respondents.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. An alternative writ of prohibition issued out of this court in the usual form, directing the defendants to desist and refrain from taking further proceedings in the case entitled W. F. Carpenter et al. v. O. E. Boyd et al. (No. 228593), pending in defendant court until a certain return date upon which defendants were directed to show cause why defendants herein “should not be restrained and prohibited absolutely from any further proceedings in said action.”

This writ was issued upon a petition which alleges that the judge who heard the case in superior court was about to sign findings of fact and conclusions of law, and a judgment based thereon wherein a valuation of certain corporate stock was made, notwithstanding the fact that the value of such stock was neither the subject of allegations, prayer, or proof in the case. The petition also alleges that the above referred to findings of fact and conclusions of law on their face support a personal money judgment against petitioners and in favor of two certain persons who are plaintiffs in the case for all of the stockholders and not as individuals, and that the referred to proposed judgment was to that effect; that the issue of such stock had never been authorized by the corporation commissioner, and was therefore illegal and void; that the money judgment is so large that the petitioners can neither pay it nor stay execution thereon by giving a bond on appeal.

While it is not necessary here to go into detail of facts, it should be borne in mind that the superior court action was for an accounting against trustees of the affairs of a business enterprise and that the stock referred to was stock of the corporations owning the business and was also in the trust. The complaint in said action also asks that a return of the business and the capital stock be decreed, and, in the absence of defendants' ability to do so, that a money judgment be given for the value thereof. After submission of the case, the judge caused a minute order to be entered by the clerk, which is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"It seems quite clear to me that a return of plaintiffs' stock to them and a restoration of their interests to Carpenters, Inc., and to Carpenter's Stationery Store, Inc., and also of the interests in and control of said two corporations to the said plaintiffs, is not only impracticable but also practically impossible, a money judgment is the only adequate remedy afforded plaintiffs. The judgment will be as contended for by plaintiffs, to wit: $158,792.06. Defendants' compensation will be the ownership and the control of the business converted by them and the profits derived therefrom since December 31, 1928.

"J. O. Moncur, Judge."

The reply of the defendant judge to the petition states positively that he now realizes that an individual judgment would be beyond the issues of the case and that he has no intention of signing any findings or judgment in favor of any plaintiff as an individual, and in the oral argument all parties agree that this phase of the matter is out, and we shall so consider it.

Petitioners, however, contend that their allegations as regards the value and legality of the stock and the impossibility of petitioners to pay or stay the proposed judgment, having been denied in respondents' reply to the petition, these issues should be made the subject of a reference.

[1-3] It will be unnecessary to go further than merely mention that the writ prayed for here is a prerogative writ and its issue appeals to the sound discretion of the court; that the writ of prohibition is not a writ of error and should not be used as such; that as a general rule the writ should not issue until the fact finding court has had every reasonable opportunity to correct its error (assuming for present purposes there is error), and that the statutory provisions for a new trial and for appeal are for that purpose; that, pending a motion for a new trial, the trial court has the power to stay proceedings; that proposed findings and judgment may be followed by proposed amendments thereto.

[4] Petitioners have the right to ask for a new trial, setting out to the trial court the alleged errors. They may await the signing of findings, etc., and a judgment, and then ask for a new trial and a stay of proceedings pending its determination. They may appeal. They may propose amendments to the proposed findings, etc. and judgment, which would reveal the alleged errors. Petitioners have done none of these things. It seems to us that the circumstances of this case do not place petitioners in such peril that the extraordinary assistance of the writ of prohibition is reasonably required.

[5, 6] The sworn reply of the respondent judge states: "That when plaintiffs' supplemental findings and final decree were received by respondent, respondent cursorily looked them over and then put them aside to await any proposed amendments which might be presented by defendants, and did direct counsel for plaintiffs to serve said proposed supplemental findings and final decree upon counsel for defendants." This is but a statement of the usual procedure of a trial judge, and there is no presumption that a trial judge will sign any proposed finding or judgment that is presented to him. The presumption will be indulged in that he will await proposed amendments as the law contemplates he shall do and then accept such and reject such of both as he pleases. In the end, the findings and judgment are the court's. While the petition alleges that the court will sign the proposed documents, both sides of this controversy accept the judge's return that he will not sign the proposed documents with the personal money judgment contained therein. There seems to be no good reason why they should not accept his statement, which is, in effect, that he was not about to sign the proposed documents, but was awaiting a proper time to consider them. If trial courts are not to be accorded this privilege or right, the reviewing courts of the state will be called upon to issue writs in innumerable cases where litigants think the court will go wrong.

Petitioners greatly rely upon the recent case of Baar v. Smith, 201 Cal. 87, 255 P. 827. In that case the trial court not only issued execution where execution was legally restrained by appeal, but included in the judgment orders and directions far outside of the pleadings, the proof, and admissions by the victorious parties to the action. Assistance through the writ of prohibition was urgently necessary to protect the rights of defendants. We do not read the Baar Case as affecting the general principles hereinabove mentioned or as overruling the principles applied in Amos v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 677, 681, 239 P. 317; Woodward v. Superior Court, 95 Cal. 272, 276, 30 P. 535; Wreden v. Superior Court, 55 Cal. 504; Lange v. Superior Court, 11 Cal. App. 1, 103 P. 908; Clark v. Superior Court, 55 Cal. 199; and George v. Beatty, 85 Cal. App. 525, 260 P. 386—the later case being in mandamus.

The petition as it stands modified by concessions made after respondents' return does not appear to us to require any reference or to justify the issuance of the writ prayed for.

The writ is discharged, and the proceedings dismissed.

Neither of the parties to have judgment for costs against the other.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

KEYES v. HAWLEY et al. (Civ. 6827.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 17, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨171(4)—Motorist entering intersection at lawful speed when automobile approaching from right was several lengths away held not negligent in proceeding where collision resulted (Motor Vehicle Act, § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15).

Evidence showing that driver of automobile in which plaintiff was riding as guest entered intersection at lawful speed when automobile approaching from right was two or three lengths away and proceeded through intersection within lawful rate held not to show negligence under Motor Vehicle Act, § 131 (St. 1923, p. 560), as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15, relating to right of way, where collision resulted.

2. Automobiles ⇨171(4)—Automobiles did not "approach intersection at approximately same time" within right of way statute, where one was several car lengths from intersecting line when the other reached curb line (Motor Vehicle Act, § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15).

Automobiles did not approach intersection at approximately the same time within meaning of Motor Vehicle Act, § 131 (St. 1923, p. 560), as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15, relating to right of way, where one was from two to three automobile lengths back of intersecting line of streets when the other was at the corresponding curb line of the intersection.

3. Automobiles ⇨171(4)—Right of way statute applies only where two automobiles are like distance from given point at same time (Motor Vehicle Act, § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15).

In order to put Motor Vehicle Act, § 131 (St. 1923, p. 560), as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15, relating to right of way, into operation, the two automobiles must be approximately a like distance away from given point at same time.

4. Automobiles ⇨171(13)—Motorist actually entering intersection before another approaching from right may assume he will be given right of way (Motor Vehicle Act, § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15).

Under Motor Vehicle Act, § 131 (St. 1923, p. 560), as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15, when motorist has actually entered an intersection before another motorist approaching from his right approaches it, the former may assume that he will be given right of way and permitted to pass through intersection without danger of collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision by Anne L. Dougan against J. B. Hawley and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant named appeals. Pending the appeal plaintiff died and her administratrix was substituted in her stead. Judgment reversed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Treadwell, Van Fleet & Laughlin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This action was brought by Anne L. Dougan, now deceased, against the three defendants, Miller Automobile Company, Louis E. Bagwill, and J. B. Hawley, to recover damages alleged to have been sustained in an automobile accident. The cause was tried with a jury; the action was dismissed in open court as to the Miller Automobile Company, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants Bagwill and Hawley in the sum of $10,000. The defendant Hawley alone appeals upon typewritten transcripts. Pending the appeal the plaintiff died and her administratrix has been substituted in her stead, but for the purpose of clarity we will continue to refer to the original plaintiff as the respondent herein.

At about 11 o'clock in the evening of February 27, 1926, in the city of Sacramento, the respondent was riding with appellant and the latter's wife as their guest in appellant's automobile. The three were seated together in the front seat, Mrs. Hawley riding in the center next to appellant and the respondent riding on the extreme right. The appellant operated a store, which was located on J street, about 150 feet from its intersection with Thirty-First street. He started from this place, going in a westerly direction to cross Thirty-First street, beginning in low gear and changing into second and then third as he reached the intersection, traveling at no time faster than 15 miles per hour. As he approached the intersection of J and Thirty-First streets the defendant Bagwill was seen approaching in his car at a point just south of the intersection of Thirty-First and I streets. The Bagwill car was traveling at a speed of 25 miles per hour or greater. As the appellant reached the easterly curb line of the intersection and proceeded to cross, the Bagwill car was about three car lengths, or 45 feet, northerly from the northerly intersection of the same streets. At this point appellant sounded his horn and proceeded to cross the intersection, and when he reached the middle of the streets he again sounded his horn and speeded up to a rate of approximately 25 miles per hour. The Bagwill car continued on without slackening speed and without swerving to the right or left, and as the front of appellant's car reached a point approximately at the westerly curb line of Thirty-First street it was struck by the front right fender of the Bagwill car upon the rear right fender and rear bumper of appellant's car. The impact turned appellant's car so that it faced north on Thirty-First street abutting the northerly curb line of J street, while the Bagwill car was stopped at a point near the middle of the intersection. As a result of the impact the respondent suffered an injury to her right arm, which caused it to turn black and blue. None of the other parties in either car was injured and the cost of repair to appellant's car was about $11, while the cost of the repair to the Bagwill car was $27. It is the claim of respondent that, though the injury at the time of the accident was slight, complications resulted which brought about a more serious condition for which she sued and for which the jury rendered its verdict. On this appeal the appellant vigorously attacks the medical testimony which was offered to support this claim, but as we are satisfied from our examination of the record that the judgment must be reversed because of the want of negligence on the part of appellant, it is not necessary to consider this question.

[1] As to the cause of the accident the evidence is all one way. The only theory upon which the respondent attempts to support her claim of negligence on the part of appellant is that the Bagwill car had the right of way under her interpretation of section 131 of the Motor Vehicle Act. St. 1923, p. 517. That the evidence does not support the verdict against this appellant seems too clear for argument. Section 131 of the Motor Vehicle Act (amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15), as it stood at the time of the collision, provided that: "When two [automobiles] approach an intersection of public highways at approximately the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have right of way, provided such vehicle is traveling at a lawful speed." (Emphasis added.) The evidence of the respondent is that the appellant approached the intersection at a speed of 15 miles an hour (the lawful speed according to the statute); he sounded his horn and continued to cross at the same rate of speed until he reached the middle of the intersection when he increased his speed in order to avoid a collision with the Bagwill car; that as they entered the intersection she noticed the Bagwill car approaching on the right about two or three car lengths back of the intersection; that Bagwill was traveling faster and at about 20 or 25 miles per hour and did not slow up for the crossing; and that appellant's car was struck in the rear after it had crossed the middle of the intersection and at a time when the front of the car was almost even with the westerly curb line of Thirty-First street. She testified that the Bagwill car did not change its course to the right or left; that the pavement was dry, both streets were well lighted, and both cars carried headlights, which were lighted at the time. The appellant testified to the same effect in all particulars, and added that he first witnessed the Bagwill car when he was approximately 100 feet from the intersection; that the Bagwill car had just then passed the intersection of Thirty-First and I streets, and that he had a clear view because the block forming the northeast corner of the intersection of Thirty-First and J streets was an open park. The appellant also added that when he was in the center of the intersection the Bagwill car was about 50 feet from the line of his car, or about 20 feet from the northerly line of the intersection, and that the Bagwill car was traveling at a rate of about 20 or 25 miles per hour. Mrs. Hawley testified to the facts stated in the testimony of the respondent, except that she said that she did not hear the appellant sound his horn as they approached the intersection, but that she heard this signal for the first time when they were out in the middle of the street, that she then looked up and saw the Bagwill car approaching on the right, and that the Bagwill car was then about two car lengths from the northerly curb of J street. Thus, as between the respondent and the appellant, there is not a shadow of conflict as to the circumstances preceding the collision. The testimony offered by them shows without a doubt that the appellant was not guilty of any negligence in the manner in which he operated the car at that time.

There is some conflict apparent in the testimony of the defendant Bagwill upon which the respondent relies. This witness testified that he first saw the appellant's car approaching when he (Bagwill) "got almost to the pedestrian line," that is, the sidewalk line on the northerly side of the intersection; that the appellant was then approaching at a rate of about 15 miles an hour and entered the intersection at about the same time that he did. He then testified that appellant was traveling at a rate of 25 miles per hour and struck his car, which was traveling at a rate of less than 4 miles an hour and practically standing still at the time of the collision. This witness was so completely discredited in his own cross-examination and by all the other witnesses to the accident, as well as by all the physical facts present, that it is impossible to give his testimony any weight in any particular which might be claimed to be in conflict with the other evidence. However, in analyzing the testimony of this witness there is no material conflict, excepting in that portion of his testimony wherein he states that the appellant entered the intersection about the same time Bagwill did. Inasmuch as he had just testified that when he had reached the pedestrian crossing of the intersection he for the first time saw the appellant's car approaching, and as the admitted fact is Thirty-First street was 80 feet in width and appellant's car was struck on the rear right fender when the nose of the car was opposite the westerly curb, it is patent that appellant not only approached but entered the intersection long before Bagwill did, and that when Bagwill was at the pedestrian line and first saw appellant's car the latter was far across the intersection line. Thus his statement that the two entered the intersection at about the same time was a mere guess unsupported by any physical facts, the most convincing fact dispelling his conjecture being that the right front fender of his car struck the right rear fender and rear bumper of appellant's car, though Bagwill did not change his course.

Respondent also cites the testimony of Mrs. Hawley to the effect that when she heard her husband blow the horn the Bagwill car was about two lengths from the J street intersection. From this respondent argues that, as appellant blew the horn when he first came into the intersection, it must appear that both cars approached the intersection at about the same time, but respondent fails to note that Mrs. Hawley testified that she did not hear her husband sound the horn at the intersection, but that the first she did hear was when they were in the middle of the street. Reliance is also placed upon the testimony of the respondent that, when they reached the curb line of the intersection, she saw the Bagwill car approaching about two or three car lengths back from J street. From this it is argued that both cars approached the intersection at approximately the same time. But this testimony merely goes to corroborate that of the appellant that he was the first to approach the intersection, and that he had actually entered it and was crossing before the Bagwill car had approached the corresponding line of the intersection on J street. From the testimony outlined it is argued that both cars approached the intersection at approximately the same time and that under the provisions of the section of the Motor Vehicle Act the Bagwill car had the right of way. If this is true, of course respondent should not have taken her verdict and judgment against Bagwill, but all her evidence, by which she is bound on this appeal, is to the contrary. What appears to be a conflict in the evidence arises from a confusion of terms in the statute. Section 23 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 520) defines an intersection as "the area embraced within the prolongation of the boundary or property lines of two or more public highways, etc." The respondent emphasized that when she was testifying as to the position of the appellant's car she was speaking of the curb line and not of the property line; that when appellant reached the curb line the Bagwill car was two or three car lengths from the intersection—the northerly property line of J street. Hence, the appellant's car was within the intersection, as the term is used in the statute, before the Bagwill car approached it. In the light of this evidence the respondent misconstrues the plain meaning of the section of the act. It was the evident purpose of the framers of the act to provide that, when two automobiles approach an intersection at approximately the same time so that one must stop in order to let another pass the intersection, then, if the one approaching on the right is proceeding at a lawful rate of speed, each shall have the right of way, but, when the car approaching from the left has entered the intersection and is proceeding across it when the other approaches from the right, it is manifest that the other has the right of way so long as he proceeds at a lawful rate of speed. A similar case arose in Jackson v. Brown, 106 Conn. 143, 137 A. 725, 726, where the plaintiff arrived at the intersection approaching on the left and the defendant approaching on the right was nearly 50 feet from the line of the intersection. The plaintiff's car entered the intersection and had proceeded some distance through it when the defendant's car entered it and the collision occurred. The Connecticut court held that the plaintiff had the right to assume that the defendant would accord him the right of way and that he would have his car under such control that the plaintiff while in the exercise of reasonable care could proceed through the intersection without danger of the defendant's car colliding with him. To the same effect is Keller v. Waddington, 142 Wash. 474, 253 P. 646, and Weber v. Greenebaum, 270 Pa. 382, 113 A. 413. In the latter case the Pennsylvania court, in defining the expression "approach an intersection," said: "It must be assumed that the framers of the statute and the legislature used the word 'approach' in a practical sense; for two vehicles to 'approach' an intersection 'at the same time,' they each, when about to arrive, must be approximately a like distance away from the given point, or this situation must exist at least to such an extent that one using reasonable judgment might anticipate their simultaneous arrival, otherwise they would not, in the words of the act 'approach the intersection * * * at the same time.'"

[2-4] The position of respondent in support of the verdict against this appellant is that, though the Bagwill machine was from two to three car lengths back of the intersecting line of the streets when the appellant's machine was at the corresponding curb line of the intersection, the two machines nevertheless approached the intersection at approximately the same time within the meaning of the vehicle act. To so hold would render the whole purpose of the section meaningless. If a point two or three car lengths from an intersecting line is approximately the same as the intersecting line, then why not five or six or more car lengths? The plain meaning of the section is, as stated by the Pennsylvania court, that to put it into operation the two cars must be approximately a like distance away from the given point at the same time. But when one car has actually entered an intersection before the other approaches it, the driver of the first car may assume that he will be given the right of way and permitted to pass through the intersection without danger of collision. He has the right to assume that the driver of the other car will obey the law, slow down, and yield the right of way if slowing down is necessary to prevent a collision. Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 58, 161 P. 1155, L. R. A. 1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560; Wixon v. Raisch Improvement Co. (Cal. App.) 266 P. 964.

As we read the evidence the appellant approached the intersection at a lawful speed; he reached and passed the intersection when the other car was two or three car lengths away; he proceeded through the intersection still within the lawful rate and did nothing in the operation of the car which was contrary to any provision of law or contrary to what an ordinarily prudent person would have done under the same circumstances.

Because of the want of any proof of negligence on the part of the appellant, the judgment as to him must be reversed on that ground, and this makes it unnecessary to consider the other points raised.

Judgment reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Iona Boyer against Louisa Crichton. From a judgment dismissing the action for want of prosecution, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. M. Anthony, of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. T. Harding, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An appeal from a judgment dismissing the above action for want of prosecution. The action was one to quiet the title to certain real property situated in San Francisco, the complaint (which was filed on June 17, 1919) alleging title in the plaintiff with the right to possession. The original defendants were Louisa and William Crichton, who, on September 3, 1919, filed an answer to the complaint, denying plaintiff's alleged title and right to possession, and averring title in themselves by virtue of a tax deed and that they were in possession of the property. To this answer the plaintiff filed a general demurrer, following which, on February 3, 1922, the court made the following order: "It is ordered demurrer to answer be sustained; defendants granted permission to file amendment to answer setting up items of reimbursement." Thereafter, on March 24, 1922, Louisa Crichton again answered, setting forth substantially the same denials and allegations as were contained in her original answer, and additional allegations as to the amounts paid to the tax collector of the city and county of San Francisco as the purchase price of the property and the amount subsequently disbursed in payment of taxes assessed thereon, with a further allegation that her codefendant, William Crichton, had, before the commencement of the action, conveyed his interest in the property to her. On March 31, 1922, the plaintiff moved the court to strike out the answer last mentioned, upon the ground that the same did not conform to the order permitting an amendment to the original answer, and on October 21, 1922, the motion was granted, the material portion of the order being as follows: "It is ordered by the court that the above motion be and the same is hereby granted with leave for defendant to file items for reimbursement." No other pleading by way of answer was filed by defendant or further proceedings had in the cause until May 6, 1927, when defendant moved to dismiss under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, more than five years having elapsed since the above answers were filed. Thereupon the plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings, which the court denied, and entered its order dismissing the action for want of prosecution.

Appellant claims that, as the effect of the orders with respect to the pleadings of the defendant, no answer remained on file in the case, and no dismissal under the provisions of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, could properly be made.

[1, 2] The intention of the court in making the first order is doubtful, for, as contended by respondent, to sustain a general demurrer to the answer and at the same time allow an amendment to the same pleading was contradictory. As held in Watson v. Lawson, 166 Cal. 235, 135 P. 961, in case of doubt regarding the signification of a judgment, or any part thereof, the whole record may be examined, and, when the judgment admits of two constructions, that one will be adopted which is consonant with the judgment that should have been rendered on the facts and law of the case.

[3] In the present instance the original answer not only denied specifically the material allegations of the complaint, but also alleged facts showing prima facie the title to the property, with the right to possession to be in the defendants. In view of the facts, we are satisfied that no more was intended by the order than to direct the filing of an amendment to the answer setting up the items of disbursement in connection with the purchase of the property and taxes subsequently assessed against the same, and that such is the true construction to be given the order. So construed the original answer was not superseded; the effect of the subsequent order striking out the amended answer being to restore the original pleading. Spooner v. Cady, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 539, 36 P. 104; Wapello State Sav. Bank v. Colton, 143 Iowa, 359, 122 N. W. 149; Adams v. Webb, 104 Okl. 180, 230 P. 878; Hill v. Jamieson, 16 Ind. 125, 79 Am. Dec. 414; Bealle v. Day, 28 Ga. 435.

[4, 5] More than five years having elapsed since the filing of the original answer by the defendants, and the parties not having stipulated in writing that the time be extended, a dismissal, as provided by section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, was proper. Moreover, the court, under the circumstances, which disclose a failure on the part of the plaintiff to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the action, had discretionary power to dismiss (Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 P. 1002; Overaa v. Keeney, 169 Cal. 628, 147 P. 466; Wutchumna Water Co. v. Stevenson [Cal. Sup.] 267 P. 537), and no abuse of its discretion has been shown.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by Frank F. Faria against Manuel Brum Bettencourt and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

O. H. Speciale and Owen D. Richardson, both of San Jose, for appellants.

E. H. Christian, of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title to real property situated in Alameda county and to require the defendant Bettencourt to execute a deed of conveyance in accordance with an oral agreement so to do. The trial court found for the plaintiff, and entered judgment as prayed in the amended complaint. The defendants appeal on typewritten transcripts.

In the month of May, 1911, the plaintiff became engaged to Adeline Bettencourt, the daughter of the defendant Manuel. In consideration for the promise to marry the daughter, to build a home upon the lands described, and to live upon and improve the same, the defendant Manuel promised to convey said lands to the plaintiff. A tract of land, .266 acres in extent, and of about $250 in value, was measured off and marked by this defendant by a substantial fence, and the plaintiff erected on the premises a home at a cost of $3,000, and expended $125 in other improvements. Thereafter the plaintiff and Adeline were married (January 31, 1912), and continued in such relation until November 30, 1927, when a final decree of divorce was entered. The other defendants, Harold and Philip Faria, are the issue of this marriage. The plaintiff and his wife moved into the home constructed by him, and they continued to occupy the premises for about four years. The place was then rented by the plaintiff, who received the rents and paid all taxes and charges thereon.

The trial court found that since the month of May, 1911, and until the trial of the action, the plaintiff had been in the continuous, visible, notorious, and exclusive possession of the premises; that the rental value of the land, exclusive of the improvements made by the plaintiff, did not exceed $10 a year; and that the improvements made by the plaintiff far exceeded the value of the bare land. The evidence is without substantial conflict, except that, on the part of the defendants, testimony was received to show that the promise of the defendant Manuel was to convey the land to the plaintiff's family rather than to the plaintiff alone, and the defendant Adeline testified that she received the rents from the premises after the family had moved, and that she paid the taxes. Evidence was also tendered of a deed executed by the defendant Manuel in 1915 conveying a life estate to Adeline, with remainder to the heirs of the plaintiff and Adeline.

On this appeal the appellants have not attacked the findings as not supported by the evidence, but they attack the evidence as not being sufficiently clear and convincing to establish a trust. If this were an action for that purpose, the cases cited by appellants would be in point, but this is an action to quiet title to one in possession, and the deed of conveyance is demanded merely as incidental relief in order that the legal title may rest with the equitable title.

[1, 2] The appellants argue that respondent is barred by his laches. This defense was not raised in the trial court, but it is presented for the first time on this appeal. Laches is a defense which must be pleaded and proved, unless it appears on the face of the complaint (Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 184 Cal. 226, 193 P. 243), and, in addition to the mere lapse of time in bringing the suit, it must appear that the defendant has been prejudiced by the delay (10 Cal. Jur., p. 530; Victor Oil Co.

v. Drum, supra). No prejudice to any of the appellants appears on the face of the complaint or from any testimony which might be applicable to this defense, if we were to consider the point properly before us.

[3,4] It is argued that respondent is barred by various statutes of limitation. But the respondent was found to have been in possession during the entire period under a claim of title, and, as to him, no statute of limitation would run to divest him of title or possession. As to the wife, she could not obtain title by adverse possession during coverture (Madden v. Hall, 21 Cal. App. 541, 550, 132 P. 291), and this relation continued until the entry of the decree of divorce on the same day this cause was tried. The appellant Betencourt made no claim of adverse possession, and, of course, no claim could be advanced on behalf of the minor children.

Respondent's case is planted upon the rule of Peixouto v. Peixouto, 40 Cal. App. 782, 789, 181 P. 830, 833, where, in a case of similar facts, it was said: "The owner of the equitable title is supposed, for the purposes of a court of equity, to have acquired and to hold the title, and the court will compel the conveyance of the legal title only because the equitable title is not recognized in a court of law; but, where it is recognized, it constitutes ownership, and it cannot be lost by the bar of the statute while the owner is in actual possession and enjoyment of his estate. * * * Since the [vendee] could not be divested of his title by the operation of the statute, it follows that, having the equitable title, he is entitled to enforce a conveyance of the naked legal title as an incident to such equitable ownership. As long as the equitable title exists, it must exist with all its incidents."

The judgment is affirmed.

AMERICAN SODA FOUNTAIN CO. v.
MARTIN. (Civ. 6502.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 18, 1929.

1. Sales $\S$ 52(7)—Evidence, in action on notes given for soda fountain, held to support finding of fraud and misrepresentation in inducing buyer to purchase.

In action on notes given for purchase price of soda fountain, evidence held sufficient to support finding of fraud and misrepresentation as to refrigeration qualities of soda fountain which induced defendant, who, without knowledge of ice cream business, relied on seller's representations, to purchase

2. Sales $\S$ 38(7)—Purchaser may rely on seller's representations regarding facts not within his knowledge, and seller cannot escape liability by showing purchaser might have ascertained representations were untrue.

Purchaser has right to rely on representations of seller as to facts not within his knowledge, and seller cannot escape responsibility by showing that purchaser might have ascertained on inquiry that representations were untrue.

3. Sales $\S$ 41—Rule of caveat emptor does not apply, where seller makes false statements as of his own knowledge, falsity of which is not known.

Where honest dealing is departed from by seller making false statements as of his own knowledge, falsity of which is not known by purchaser, such purchaser has right to rely implicitly on statements, and general rule of caveat emptor does not apply.

4. Evidence $\S$ 434(11)—Parol evidence is admissible to impeach written sales contract for fraud.

Written sales contract may be impeached for fraud, and parol warranty actually made may be relied on rather than written one shown to be fraudulently imperfect; parol evidence always being admissible to prove fraud.

5. Sales $\S$ 272—Buyer having no knowledge of ice cream business, which seller knew, there was implied warranty of merchantability of soda fountain purchased on seller's recommendations (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1771).

Where purchaser intended to enter the ice cream business, which he was not familiar with, and had no knowledge of soda fountain equipment, which seller knew, and on advice of seller that soda fountain purchased would be adequate for purposes intended, seller under circumstances held to have given assurance that soda fountain was adequate or suitable to general purpose or ordinary work for which articles of the same kind are designed, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1771.

6. Sales $\S$ 268(1)—Purchaser not knowing of fitness for purpose, and relying on vendor's judgment, there was warranty that seller had no knowledge of facts destroying inducement to buy (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1767).

Where purchaser had no knowledge as to fitness of soda fountain to be used in ice cream business, and relied on judgment of seller, Civ. Code, $\S$ 1767, providing that one who sells or agrees to sell personal property knowing that buyer relies on his advice or judgment, warrants that neither seller nor agent knows of any fact concerning thing sold which would destroy buyer's inducement to buy, was applicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; H. V. Alvarado, Judge.

Action by the American Soda Fountain Company against A. W. Martin. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. P. O'Brien and Whalen, Harzfeld & O'Brien, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Alva S. Sherlock, of Concord, and Archibald B. Tinning and Tinning & Delap, all of Martinez, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action by the payee of three promissory notes to recover $364.25 and interest alleged to be due from the maker of the notes, which notes represent a portion of the installments of the purchase price of a soda fountain sold by plaintiff to defendant under a conditional sales contract for the total price of $2,217. Certain down payments were made, and the balance under the contract is payable by a number of promissory notes becoming due during the life of the contract, among which are the notes in suit. The defendant, finding that the machine did not function as plaintiff had asserted it would, failed to pay the first notes coming due, and plaintiff brought this action upon such notes, the defendant setting up the following defenses: (1) The fraud of plaintiff arising from the misrepresentation of its salesmen which induced defendant to enter into the contract; (2) total failure of consideration; (3) a breach of the implied warranty of merchantability under section 1771 of the Civil Code. The trial court found for the defendant on all three defenses, and rendered judgment accordingly, and plaintiff has appealed from such judgment, urging that the evidence does not support the findings.

From the record, it appears that the defendant was about to enter the ice cream business in conjunction with a gasoline service station he was operating in the town of Concord; that he had never been in the soda or ice cream business, but had been a telegraph operator before conducting a service station, and had no information at all concerning the ice cream business. He went to San Francisco to investigate equipment, and in the course of his shopping he went into plaintiff's salesroom, and was shown the machine which was afterwards delivered under the contract. It further appears from the record that the agents of plaintiff knew of defendant's ignorance of the ice cream business, as is evidenced by the testimony of plaintiff's manager, which shows that he explained to defendant the most elementary facts concerning ice cream storage. Also plaintiff's salesman, Hugh D. Cameron, told defendant the machine would keep ice cream at a uniform temperature, and laid particular stress on the advisability of buying a mechanical refrigerated fountain over an ice and salt fountain. Cameron went to Concord to look over the possible placing of the fountain in defendant's establishment, and spent several hours there discussing the fountain with defendant and explaining to him its construction and operation. It is apparent that the defendant was wholly ignorant of the ice cream business into which he was about to venture, and plaintiff's agents, skilled men in the business, advised that the automatic refrigerating machine sold by them would keep ice cream at a uniform temperature, and was more suited to his business than a salt and ice pack fountain. It is further apparent that defendant relied upon them to advise him as to the proper equipment upon their knowledge of the purpose for which he intended to use the machine. In order to induce defendant to enter into the contract, plaintiff's agents represented to defendant that this machine would keep ice cream in proper condition; Mr. Dennis, plaintiff's sales-manager, testifying that he told defendant "it would keep his ice cream in a firm condition and that it wouldn't permit him to lose the swell of the ice cream," and according to the testimony of defendant: "He told me it would keep ice cream perfect. It was so insulated that there was no chance for the refrigeration to escape."

There is no question from the evidence but that the machine did not keep the ice cream in proper condition, and that there was continual difficulty due to the ice cream being soft on the top or frozen on the bottom of the containers, and that this condition of the ice cream rendered it valueless for sale. It is likewise clear that the agents of plaintiff led defendant to believe that the device he was purchasing would automatically keep ice cream firm under the conditions confronting him in his place of business. They unequivocally stated that the device would keep ice cream firm and would not permit him to lose the swell. The evidence further shows that under the best conditions a large part of the ice cream spoiled while defendant hopelessly asked for assistance from plaintiff. It further appears that before and at the time of the execution of the sales contract there were other machines on the market designed for the same purpose as the machine sold by plaintiff, which would and did store ice cream for weeks without softening or hardening; that the machine, although sold as having a capacity for storing six five-gallon ice cream containers, was unable to hold them at a temperature which would permit the ice cream to be dispensed therefrom; that approximately two-fifths of the capacity of the machine had to be sacrificed in order to operate the machine without loss of ice cream stored therein. It further appears that from the commencement of the operation of the machine in December until April continuous attempts were made by plaintiff to make the machine operate properly without success, and plaintiff's agent suggested to defendant that he procure other equipment, and finally promised to supply him with a new machine or return him his money. Nothing, however, was done, and plaintiff discarded the machine and purchased another, after which his troubles ceased.

The testimony shows that this defect in capacity was inherent to the machine sold to defendant. W. V. Dennis, plaintiff's manager, testified: "Q. Do I understand, then, that your testimony is, when you set it so it would freeze hard at the top, it was unsatisfactory to have the cabinet so he couldn't dispense below the top? A. It wouldn't be satisfactory, no, to get the best use out of the cabinet we manufactured at that time. It was necessary to get it at a temperature whereby he could dip his cream both at the top and bottom, but unfortunately we hadn't made a soda fountain at that time that would do it." Paul Overmahle, an expert, testified that the machine would not keep the ice cream in a five-gallon container because the brine level was too low and could not be raised; that the machine would have to be rebuilt to store the ice cream to the capacity to which it was designed.

[1] The foregoing testimony and the inferences properly drawn therefrom sufficiently support the finding of fraud and misrepresentation that the false statements and representations were willfully and knowingly made for the purpose of inducing the defendant to enter into the contract; that, at the time of making the representations, the plaintiff's agents and employees well knew that, because of the defective design of the machine, it would not keep ice cream stored therein for more than ten or twelve hours, and in the business of defendant he would require it to be stored therein from three days to a week, and that defendant, wholly relying upon the agents of plaintiff, was induced by reason thereof to enter into the contract and sign the promissory notes, and that plaintiff's agents were skilled in the installation and operation of refrigeration devices of the character of the one sold, and that defendant was wholly ignorant and unfamiliar in the handling and dispensing of ice cream to the retail trade, and relied upon the representations of plaintiff's agents.

[2, 3] There is no merit in appellant's contention "that defendant had ample opportunity to investigate the relative merits, and to inquire into the principles of construction and appearance of other soda fountains." Under analogous circumstances the Supreme Court, in the recent case of Ferguson v. Koch, 268 P. 342, 344, 58 A. L. R. 1176, held: "A purchaser has a right to rely on the representations of his vendor as to facts not within his knowledge, and the vendor cannot escape responsibility by showing that the purchaser might have ascertained upon inquiry that the representations were untrue"—and further: "The general rule is well established that, where parties deal fairly or at arm's length, the rule of caveat emptor applies, but, where honest dealing is departed from by the vendor making false statements as of his own knowledge, the falsity of which is not known to the purchaser, such purchaser has the undoubted right to rely implicitly upon such statements, and the principle has no application. In other words, the vendor must stand mute, or at least refrain from making statements calculated to deceive."

[4] The facts of the present case seem to bring it under the rule announced in Ferguson v. Koch, supra, not only as to the vendee's right to rely upon the representations of the vendor as to facts within his knowledge, but also with respect to appellant's objection that "where there is a written contract of sale reciting the terms and conditions of sale, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove fraud," for in Ferguson v. Koch it is also said: "It is equally well settled, however, that a writing may be impeached for fraud, and a parol warranty really made may then be relied upon rather than the written one thus shown to be fraudulently imperfect." Furthermore, the rule is well established that parol evidence is always admissible to prove fraud. Mooney v. Cyriacks, 185 Cal. 70, 80, 195 P. 922, and cases cited.

[5, 6] Here, as was said in Ferguson v. Koch, supra, "the trial court having found that the false representations were made, and there being ample evidence in the record to support the conclusion, the judgment must stand," and it becomes unnecessary to discuss the other objections urged. It may, however, be said that the finding that there is a failure of consideration is supported; that "the seller is considered to have warranted that it would correspond with the description or exemplar; and from the circumstances he is deemed to have given an assurance that the chattel was adequate or suitable to the general purpose or ordinary work for which articles of the kind are designed." 22 Cal. Jur. 1002; Hoult v. Baldwin, 78 Cal. 410, 20 P. 864. And, as the vendee had no knowledge as to the fitness of the machine for the purpose for which he was intending using it, and relied upon the judgment of the vendor, section 1767 of the Civil Code applies: "One who sells or agrees to sell personal property, knowing that the buyer relies upon his advice or judgment, thereby warrants to the buyer that neither the seller, nor any agent employed by him in the transaction, knows the existence of any fact concerning the thing sold which would, to his knowledge, destroy the buyer's inducement to buy." Clearly, had plaintiff's agent told defendant, as he stated when testifying as a witness: "It was necessary to get it at a temperature whereby he could dip his cream both at the top and bottom, but unfortunately we didn't make a soda fountain at that time that would do it," defendant's inducement to buy would have been destroyed.

KEOWN v. CALIFORNIA PACIFIC REALTY CO. et al. (L. A. 11382)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1929.

1. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 55(1)—Statute authorizing application to Supreme Court to prove bill of exceptions is inapplicable, where trial court for any reason refused to settle exceptions (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 652).

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 652, providing that, if trial judge in any case refuses to allow bill of exceptions in accordance with facts, party desiring bill settled may apply by petition to Supreme Court to prove same, has no application to case where trial court has for any reason refused to settle bill of exceptions.

2. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 51—Refusal to settle bill of exceptions filed too late, where ex parte orders extending time were void, was not error (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 953a, 1054).

Where ex parte orders extending time for settlement of proposed bill of exceptions were ineffectual and void, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1054, providing that time allowed by section 953a, for preparation and settlement of bills of exception, shall not be extended beyond 30 days without consent of adverse party, refusal to settle bill of exceptions was not error.

3. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 55(1)—Refusal to settle bill of exceptions after time allowed therefor held not to furnish reason for Supreme Court to grant relief (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 473, 953a).

Where no sufficient showing before trial court was made, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, authorizing court in furtherance of justice and on such terms as may be proper to allow additional time, to warrant allowance of application for settlement of bill of exceptions after time allowed by section 953a had expired, refusal of trial court to grant relief held not to furnish reason why Supreme Court should grant relief.

4. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 53(3)—Mandamus is proper remedy on trial court's refusal to settle bill of exceptions as required.

Where trial court refused to settle bill of exceptions, proceeding in mandamus to compel trial court to proceed with settlement thereof was proper remedy.

Application by James A. Keown for settlement of bill of exceptions on the trial court's RICHARDS, J. The petitioner has applied to this court for the settlement by it of a bill of exceptions in a certain action entitled California Pacific Realty Company, a Corporation, Plaintiff, v. California Pacific Title Insurance Company, a Corporation, and James A. Keown, Defendants, which action was commenced in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on February 3, 1926, and which, after due service of process upon the defendants therein and after issue joined, came on for trial on January 16, 1928. Upon the trial and submission of the cause, the trial court rendered and entered its judgment on February 17, 1928, in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant James A. Keown, the petitioner herein. Notice of the judgment and the entry thereof was duly served upon the petitioner on February 28, 1928. On March 14, 1928, the petitioner filed his notice with the clerk to prepare the transcript on appeal from such judgment under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure and which, according to the admissions of his petition herein, was too late, as having been filed ten days beyond the time provided in said section. The trial court accordingly refused to permit the petitioner, as appellant therein, to have prepared a transcript upon his appeal under the provisions of said section of the Code; whereupon, and on April 13, 1928, the said defendant filed a second notice of appeal, and on April 20, 1928, moved the trial court ex parte to extend his time to perfect his appeal. The trial court denied his motion, but in doing so allowed the defendant 30 days' additional time to prepare a bill of exceptions upon said appeal. On May 2, 1928, the trial court made a further ex parte order, upon the defendant's application, allowing him an additional 30 days within which to prepare said bill of exceptions. On June 18, 1928, the said defendant presented and filed his bill of exceptions, and on July 9, 1928, applied to said court for the settlement thereof. On July 10, 1928, the respondent upon said appeal, California Pacific Title Insurance Company, presented and filed its objections to the settlement of the appellant's proposed bill of exceptions. The appellant's application for the settlement of said bill of exceptions and the respondent's opposition thereto came on for hearing before the trial court on September 28, 1928; whereupon the trial court refused to take any action thereon, for the assigned reason that it was without jurisdiction so to do. Thereupon the petitioner moved the trial court, upon notice, to extend his time for the settlement of said bill of exceptions, purporting so to do under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He also, on November 28, 1928, gave notice of appeal from the order of the trial court refusing to settle said bill of exceptions. On January 4, 1929, the trial court denied the defendant's application for a further extension of time within which to have settled his aforesaid bill of exceptions. On January 5, 1929, the petitioner filed in this court his petition asking this tribunal to settle his bill of exceptions, and proffering as a part of his application a proposed draft of said bill of exceptions. The respondents herein have presented and filed their opposition to the granting of the petition, supporting the same by affidavits which do not materially controvert the averments of the petition, and with a certified copy of the entries upon the docket of the trial court more particularly identifying the dates upon which the various proceedings were taken to which the petition herein relates.

[1, 2] The only questions presented to this court for decision are, first, as to whether there exists any authority in law empowering this court to grant the petition herein or to make any such order looking to the settlement of appellant's bill of exceptions as is prayed for by his petition herein; second, whether the petitioner has not mistaken his remedy, which should have been by way of mandamus to compel the trial court to proceed with the settlement of his bill of exceptions. Upon the first of these questions we are satisfied that under the authorities this court has no power to settle the petitioner's proposed bill of exceptions. Section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon which he relied for such authority, has no application to a case where the trial court has for any reason refused to settle a bill of exceptions. See 2 Cal. Juris. § 305, p. 578, wherein this subject is fully discussed. See, also, Estate of Dolbeer, 147 Cal. 569, 82 P. 192. But, were it otherwise, upon the merits of the defendant's application to the trial court for the settlement of his bill of exceptions, it sufficiently appears from the averments of his own petition herein that the ex parte orders which he obtained extending the time for the settlement of his proposed bill of exceptions were ineffectual and void as in violation of the provisions of section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which expressly provide, with relation to the preparation and settlement of bills of exceptions, that the time allowed therefor by the Code shall not be extended beyond the period of 30 days without the consent of the adverse party.

[3] With respect to the petitioner's final application, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for relief from his default in preparing said bill of exceptions within the limited time allowed by law, no sufficient showing was made before the trial court to warrant the granting of such relief, nor would the refusal of the trial court to grant the same furnish any reason why this court should undertake to exercise any jurisdiction in the way of granting the relief prayed for by the petitioner herein.

[4] Upon the second question presented herein it would seem to be clear that the petitioner's only possible relief from the adverse action of the trial court in refusing to settle his said bill of exceptions would have been by way of an application for a writ of mandate, for which he has not applied and for which no sufficient showing has been made in his said petition, even if the same could by any stretch of interpretation be held to constitute an application for such a writ.

The petitioner's application is denied.

MERCED SECURITY SAV. BANK v. BENT BROS., Inc. (Sac. 4158.)

Supreme Court of California. July 23, 1929.

1. Evidence ☞595—Trial court must construe evidence in light of entire transaction involved and make necessary deductions therefrom.

Trial court has duty of construing evidence in light of entire transaction involved and making necessary deductions therefrom.

2. Bills and notes ☞525—Evidence held to support finding that indorsee accepted check in settlement of clearance in good faith, for value, without notice of maker's equities or payee's insolvency.

In action on check on which payment had been stopped, evidence held to support finding that check was taken by indorsee bank in settlement of clearance of business between it and payee bank, for a valuable consideration, in good faith, and without notice of equities existing in favor of maker or knowledge of insolvency of payee bank.

3. Banks and banking ☞286—Transaction transferring check in settlement of clearance business held not made to prevent application of assets, as prescribed by banking laws (National Banking Act; 12 USCA § 91).

Where indorsee bank accepted check from payee bank in settlement of clearance in usual course of business, without knowledge of payee bank's insolvency, though previous draft in settlement of clearance had been dishonored, after which indorsee made no investigation, transaction held not made with view to prevent application of assets, in manner prescribed by National Banking Act, 12 USCA § 91.

4. Bills and notes 337—Indorsee of check regular on face, not previously dishonored, taken in good faith and for value, did not have notice of defect in title (Civ. Code, § 3137).

Under Civ. Code, § 3137, providing that, to constitute notice of infirmity in check or defect in title thereto, indorsee must have had actual knowledge of infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that its action in taking instrument amounted to bad faith, where check was complete and regular on its face, and had not been previously dishonored, and was taken by indorsee in good faith in settlement of clearance business, indorsee held not to have had notice of any defect in title of payee bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the Merced Security Savings Bank against Bent Bros., Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, of Los Angeles, and Hugh K. Landram, of Merced, for appellant.

Louis Ferrari, of San Francisco, F. W. Henderson, of Merced, and C. H. White, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. On the 17th day of September, 1926, at Los Angeles, Bent Bros., Inc., the appellant here, drew its check on the Merchants' National Bank of Los Angeles in the sum of $5,000, payable to the order of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Merced. It mailed the check to the Merced bank for the purpose of depositing the amount of the check to its credit. The bank received the check by mail on the morning of September 18, and credited the sum of $5,000 in the usual manner to the account of Bent Bros., Inc. Later in the day it indorsed and delivered the check to the Merced Security Savings Bank, the respondent, in settlement of a clearance of business for that day between the two institutions. At noon, the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Merced closed its doors, and, under orders from the national bank examiner, was not thereafter permitted to resume business.

When the respondent presented the check of Bent Bros., Inc., to the Los Angeles bank on which it was drawn, payment had been stopped, and the check was accordingly dishonored. Respondent thereupon presented the check to Bent Bros., Inc., and its payment was again refused. The Merced Security Savings Bank thereupon brought this action against Bent Bros., Inc., to recover the amount of the check. The trial court found that the plaintiff took the check as an innocent purchaser, and in good faith for value, and without notice of any equities existing in favor of Bent Bros., Inc., and without any knowledge of the insolvency and consequent inability of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Merced to meet its financial obligations. Judgment was accordingly entered for the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

Appellant disputes the correctness of the findings of the trial court, and contends that the evidence not only fails to give them support, but, on the contrary, "conclusively demonstrates that the defendant had the legal right to stop payment of the check, and therefore cannot be held liable by reason of its nonpayment." The evidence upon which appellant relies for support of its contention that the respondent was not a holder in due course, but took the check in question with knowledge of its infirmity, relates to the transactions had between the two Merced banks during the forenoon of Saturday, September 18, in settlement of the balance shown by their clearances for the 17th and 18th. There appear to have been two independent settlements. A draft on the San Francisco correspondent of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank, which it had given to respondent in settlement for the balance due respondent following the clearances on Friday, the 17th, was dishonored. Respondent was notified of that fact by a telephone message from the San Francisco correspondent of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank at about 10 o'clock on Saturday morning. The officers of respondent immediately got in touch with the officers of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank for the purpose of getting "either the cash or satisfactory security" for the amount of its dishonored draft, in order to avoid the necessity of charging it back to the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank or its San Francisco correspondent. It was agreed between them that respondent would accept "notes and any other securities" the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank might have to cover the amount of the dishonored draft. This arrangement appears to have been carried out and adjusted just prior to the closing of the banks for the day; and the officers of the two banks thereupon entered upon the customary Saturday clearance for the business done between the banks on the morning of the 18th. The balance was found to be in favor of the respondent, and the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank indorsed and delivered to respondent, in settlement, five checks which had been drawn in its favor, including the check for $5,000 drawn by appellant, the aggregate amount of the checks being $7,500. It does not appear that there was a clearing house in existence at Merced at this time. The banks seem to have settled their business transactions directly between themselves. At least, that was so in the case at bar, and according to the evidence the settlement on the morning of September 18 was had in accordance with the usual and ordinary course of business between the two institutions. Thus far, the evidence fully sustains the finding of the trial court that the respondent bank took the check in the due course of business between itself and the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Merced, and for a valuable consideration.

The Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank transacted business as usual until 12 o'clock noon on Saturday, September 18, when it closed its doors for the day. On Sunday, September 19, its directors met, and by resolution declared that, inasmuch as the bank was in an insolvent condition, its reserves exhausted, and its credit impaired, its doors would not be opened, but it would be placed in the hands of the national bank examiner, unless the officers of the bank were able to obtain cash from some source to enable it to carry on, before 10 o'clock on Monday, the 20th. Apparently the institution was unable to secure the needed cash, for, by direction of the national bank examiner, it did not thereafter do any banking business. From these facts, and because of the fact of notice of the dishonoring of the draft drawn in favor of respondent in settlement of Friday's clearings between the two institutions, the appellant argues that the respondent was fully cognizant of the insolvent condition of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank, and did not act in good faith in the transaction, in that it took the check after notice of the dishonor of the draft, and did not make, or cause to be made, any investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the funds of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank had been exhausted.

[1, 2] We are of the view that the testimony of the officers of the respondent bank sufficiently shows that the action taken by that bank was neither fraudulent nor taken in bad faith. There is evidence that one or more of the officers of the respondent bank may have had some knowledge at some time on Saturday, the 18th, that "the condition of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank was not altogether satisfactory"; but it falls short of demonstrating that the respondent was acting in bad faith and with a view to protect itself against loss, in the event the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank was insolvent. We are not prepared to accept the construction that appellant advances of the testimony as to what, if any, knowledge the officers of the respondent bank had concerning the affairs of the other institution. The trial court was charged with the duty of construing the evidence, in the light of the entire transaction, and making the necessary deductions therefrom. We are not prepared to hold that it was wrong in reaching the result it did.

[3] Appellant contends that the transfer of the check of the appellant to the respondent bank was null and void, in that it was made after the commission of an act of insolvency, or in contemplation thereof, and made with a view to prevent the application of its assets in the manner prescribed by the National Bank Act (12 USCA § 91). It cites and relies upon National Security Bank v. Butler, 129 U. S. 223, 9 S. Ct. 281, 32 L. Ed. 682; but the facts there were different. We gather from the opinion that the transfer there in question was made after the directors had voted that the bank should go into liquidation, and should be closed to business, and it was made with a view, on the part of the Pacific Bank and of its cashier, who represented it and acted for it in this transfer of its assets, to prevent the application of its assets in the manner prescribed by the National Bank Act, and with intent to prefer the bank to which the transfer was made over other creditors. We are unable to discover in the transaction before us any such motive, either on the part of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank or the respondent, or their officers.

[4] To constitute notice of any infirmity in the check of the appellant, or defect in the title thereto of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank, the respondent must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that its action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith. Civ. Code, § 3137. The check was complete and regular upon its face, and it had not been previously dishonored. It was taken by the respondent in good faith and for valuable consideration, passing by reason of the settlement for the balance due on the clearances on September 18, and respondent had no notice of any defect in the title of the negotiating bank.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF FRESNO v. DILLON et al.
(S. F. 12298.)

207 Cal. 714

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations §173(2)—Duty of commissioner of finance to collect license fees in city of Fresno held within his official bond; "official duties required of him by law" (Const. art. 11, § 8; Fresno City Charter).

Under Const. art. 11, § 8, an ordinance of the city of Fresno, imposing on the license collector the duty of collecting license fees, was superseded by the adoption of a new city charter (St. 1921, p. 1821), creating a department of finance, and imposing on the commissioner of finance the duty of collecting such fees, notwithstanding such duty was not transferred by ordinance, and hence the commissioner's duty of making such collection was among the "official duties required of him by law" within his official bond.

2. Municipal corporations ⇒173(2)—Approval by commissioner of finance of municipal bonds for payment which had already been made rendered commissioner and surety liable on official bond; "official duties required of him by law" (Fresno City Charter).

Although Fresno City Charter (St. 1921, p. 1821) did not impose on commissioner of finance duty of approving municipal bonds for payment by city treasurer, but commissioner had nevertheless approved bonds according to a custom which had developed, where such bonds were presented to him for approval a second time, the duty of withholding his approval as of an unauthorized claim against the city was among the "official duties required of him by law" under his official bond, and therefore a second approval of bonds which had already been paid rendered him and his surety liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by the City of Fresno against Charles F. Dillon and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 273 P. 1106.

Lindsay & Gearhart, of Fresno, and Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. E. Simpson, City Atty., of Fresno, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. The city of Fresno brought an action against Charles F. Dillon and the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company, surety upon Dillon's official bond, as commissioner of finance of the city, to recover license fees alleged to have been collected by Dillon and not accounted for, and the amount of certain illegal payments on municipal bonds authorized by Dillon during his term of office. Judgment was entered in favor of the city, and the defendants have appealed.

The District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, to which the cause was transferred for hearing and determination, affirmed the judgment in toto. On petition for hearing by this court, the appellants do not stress, in fact, we may assume that they concede, the correctness of the judgment in the lower court, as affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, in so far as it relates to the shortage in the license fees collected by Dillon. We are of the view that the judgment as a whole should be affirmed, and we therefore adopt the decision of the District Court of Appeal, written by Mr. Justice SPENCE, pro tem., and concurred in by Mr. Presiding

Justice TYLER and Mr. Justice KNIGHT, as follows:

Dillon was elected to the office of commissioner of finance of the city of Fresno under the new charter which became operative in 1921. His official bond provided: "Now, if the said Charles F. Dillon shall well, truly and faithfully perform all official duties required of him by law, and all such additional duties as may hereafter be imposed on him as such officer by any law hereafter enacted, then the above obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and virtue."

There was a shortage of $5,533.32 in the license fees collected. Dillon approved claims or demands and caused warrants to be drawn for the payment of certain municipal bonds totaling $6,000, and thereafter, when these bonds in some manner were again presented, Dillon approved claims or demands and caused warrants to be drawn for a second payment of the same bonds.

The liability of Dillon individually for his irregularities is not questioned, but counsel for appellants contends that neither Dillon nor his surety is liable on his official bond as it was not the official duty of Dillon to collect the license fees nor to pay municipal bonds involved. No other question is raised on this appeal.

[1] We will first consider the situation with respect to the license fees above referred to. These license fees were collected under the provisions of Ordinance No. 846, which ordinance became effective several years prior to the adoption of the new charter. At that time Fresno was functioning under its previous charter, which created the office of license collector. The ordinance by its terms made it the duty of the license collector to collect the license fees imposed upon various trades, professions, and businesses. The new charter of 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 1821) made no mention of the office of license collector. It created a department of finance headed by a commissioner of finance. Section 1 expressly authorized the city to "license for purposes of revenue and regulation, * * * all businesses, occupations, trades, professions, enterprises and projects and persons engaged therein, and for said purposes to assess, levy and collect license fees. * * *" By section 145 it provided that "All * * * city ordinances, * * * now in force and not inconsistent herewith, shall be and remain in force after this charter takes effect until changed or repealed by the proper authority. * * *" Section 38 provided that "the Commissioner of Finance shall have control and jurisdiction over the keeping of accounts and financial records; the auditing of accounts and claims; the levy, assessment and collection of taxes, special assessments, license fees and other revenues. * * *" In section 55 it provided that "All taxes, special assessments and license fees accruing to the city shall be collected by officers and ex-officio officers of the Department of Finance. All moneys received by any officer or employee of the city for or in connection with the business of the city shall be paid promptly into the treasury."

Prior to the adoption of the charter of 1921, a certain Harry Erickson was serving as license collector. Upon the adoption of the charter and the qualification of Dillon, Erickson was appointed by Dillon as a deputy commissioner of finance. The license fees were thereafter paid into the office of the commissioner of finance; it appearing that Erickson was actually placed in charge of the collection of these fees.

Counsel for appellants takes the position that Ordinance 846 remained in force and effect in its entirety after the adoption of the charter of 1921, and that, as the duty of collecting these fees was never transferred by ordinance from the license collector to the commissioner of finance, it was not the official duty of the latter to collect and account for the fees.

With these conclusions we cannot agree. By article 11, § 8, of the Constitution, it is provided that, upon the approval of a charter, by the Legislature, "it shall become the organic law of such city or city and county, and supersede any existing charter and all laws inconsistent therewith." The general provisions of Ordinance 846 imposing the license fees were entirely consistent with the new charter, and the provisions thereof imposing the duty of collecting the license fees were inconsistent but separable. The new charter of 1921 by express terms gave the "control and jurisdiction over * * * the collection of * * * license fees" to the commissioner of finance. Section 38. The effect of this provision was to transfer to the commissioner of finance all duties with respect to the collection of license fees previously imposed by charter or ordinance upon the license collector. It thereupon became the official duty of the commissioner of finance to collect the license fees in question, and further legislation by ordinance was unnecessary for this purpose.

[2] With respect to the unauthorized approval by Dillon of double payments on certain municipal bonds, counsel urges that no liability exists on Dillon's official bond, as Dillon could not legally make payment of these bonds. The bonds in question were issued in 1916 and were "payable at the office of City Treasurer. * * *" Under section 58 of the charter of 1921 it was provided that "Payment by the city shall be made only upon vouchers certified by the commissioner of the appropriate department, or by the presiding officer of the appropriate board or other division of the city government, and by means of warrants on the city treasury, issued by the Commissioner of Finance. The Commissioner of Finance shall examine all payrolls, bills and other claims and demands against the city; and shall issue no warrant for payment unless he finds that the claim is in proper form, correctly computed and duly certified that it is justly and legally due and payable, that an appropriation has been made therefor which has not been exhausted or that the payment has been otherwise legally authorized, and that there is money in the city treasury to make payment. He may require any claimant to make oath to the validity of a claim. He may investigate any claim and for such purposes may examine witnesses under oath, and if he finds it is fraudulent, erroneous or otherwise invalid, shall not issue a warrant therefor, and, if the situation warrants, shall call the matter to the attention of the City Commission for appropriate action."

By virtue of the broad powers and duties of the commissioner of finance under this section and of section 38 of the charter, a custom developed whereby all claims and demands, including those for payments on bonds, were presented to the commissioner of finance for allowance and approval, and the commissioner would then in the case of bonds retain the bonds and issue warrants in favor of the bondholders upon the city treasurer. That this procedure was unnecessary with respect to city bonds, and that the bondholder was entitled to payment by the treasurer without the approval, allowance, or the issuing of a warrant by the commissioner of finance was ultimately determined in a case involving one of these same bonds of the City of Fresno. Commercial & Savings Bank v. Ewing, 66 Cal. App. 231, 225 P. 476. However, during the time the above-mentioned custom was in vogue, Dillon did approve, allow and cause his deputy to issue a warrant for the payment of a group of these bonds to the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, which warrant was paid by the treasurer. The face of the warrant did not show what bond payments were covered thereby, but the records in the office of the commissioner of finance did so show. The above bonds mysteriously disappeared from the office of the commissioner of finance, and several of them were again presented to the commissioner by various persons for approval and allowance within 30 days after their original presentation. In each instance Dillon again approved, allowed, and caused his deputy to issue warrants for a second payment of these identical bonds. These warrants were also paid by the treasurer, resulting in the double payment by the city of the bonds in question.

There is no doubt, under the authority of Commercial Savings Bank v. Ewing, supra, that it was the duty of the treasurer to pay these municipal bonds upon presentation without the approval, allowing, or drawing of a warrant by the commissioner of finance, and that it was no part of the official duty of the commissioner of finance to pay said bonds or authorize their payment. This does not, however, foreclose the inquiry in the present case regarding the nature and extent of the official duties of the commissioner of finance.

Sections 38 and 58 of the charter of 1921 gave to the commissioner of finance very broad and general powers with respect to the finances of the city, including the auditing and approving of claims and demands and the issuing of warrants therefor upon the city treasury. Upon the issuing of a warrant by the commissioner of finance, payment by the treasurer apparently followed as a matter of course. Section 130 of the charter of 1921 provided: "Every officer who shall approve, allow or pay any demand on the treasury not authorized by law, ordinance or this charter, shall be liable to the city individually and on his official bond for the amount of the demand so illegally approved, allowed or paid." It is from the above-mentioned sections that the nature and extent of the official duties of the commissioner of finance must be here determined. No case construing similar provisions has been called to our attention. A reading of these sections leads to the conclusion that it was the official duty of the commissioner generally to approve and issue warrants for the payment of authorized claims, and that it was likewise his official duty to withhold approval of and refrain from issuing warrants for the payment of unauthorized claims. The fact that it was not his official duty to pay or approve the payment of these municipal bonds in the first instance does not change the situation in the present case so far as the subsequent unauthorized approval is concerned. These bonds and a record of their approval were retained in Dillon's office. Dillon knew, and the records of his office disclosed, that these bonds had been covered by the warrant previously issued by him. When these bonds disappeared from the office and were presented with new demands shortly thereafter, his action in approving their payment a second time and issuing warrants therefor constituted the approval by Dillon of unauthorized demands against the city in violation of his official duty, for which he and his surety are liable on his official bond as provided in section 130 of the charter.

In the case of County of San Luis Obispo v. Farnum, 108 Cal. 562, 41 P. 445, which case is relied upon by appellants, the court, on page 564 (41 P. 446), in discussing whether it was the official duty of the auditor to pay over to the county certain county funds received by him and which it admittedly was no part of his official duty to receive, pointed out that such duty as existed to pay over these funds "did not arise out of his office, nor was it at all different from the duty which would have rested upon him to pay it over had he been a plain citizen not holding any county office." In the present case the duty of withholding approval of any unauthorized claim or demand was a duty imposed upon Dillon officially and not as a private citizen. Dillon's actions here in approving these unauthorized claims and demands and issuing warrants for their payment constituted the wrongful exercise of the general powers conferred upon him in his official capacity as commissioner of finance by the charter.

Counsel also quotes at length from City of San Jose v. Welch, 65 Cal. 358, 4 P. 207, contending that the situation there is analogous to the present case so far as the collection of license fees is concerned. In that case, however, the bond was conditioned upon the faithful performance of the duties of "city assessor and city clerk, according to the laws and ordinances and regulations passed and approved by the mayor and common council of the city of San Jose." By ordinance the duty to collect the taxes was not placed upon this official but upon the collector, and it was there held that the bond was limited in its terms to the duties cast upon the principal by the mayor and common council, and that the liability of the sureties could not be extended. Here the duty to collect the license fees was imposed by charter upon the commissioner of finance, and no further legislation was necessary to create the liability upon the principal and sureties under the terms of the bond, which covered all duties required by law.

The authorities cited by counsel on the general proposition that the liabilities of sureties are to be strictly construed are entirely in accord with our conclusions here.

We conclude that the charter which created the office of commissioner of finance imposed upon that official, as part of his official duties, the duty of collecting license fees, and the duty of withholding approval of and refraining from issuing warrants upon unauthorized claims or demands against the city, and that these duties were "official duties required of him by law" as provided in his official bond.

The judgment is affirmed.

WASTE, C. J. I dissent. The gist of this action is the breach of official duty and not fraud. Norton v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 176 Cal. 212, 215, 168 P. 16. The bonds here in question were legal and outstanding obligations against the city, and, by virtue of the ordinance which directed their issue, both principal and interest were made payable at the office of the city treasurer "upon presentation and surrender," and the provisions of the charter relating to payment of unliquidated claims against the city "do not pretend to supplant these provisions of the ordinance." Commercial & Savings Bank v. Ewing, cited in the majority opinion. When, therefore, Dillon as commissioner of finance, interjected himself into the matter of the payment of the bonds, he was not acting officially but officiously. The loss to the city was as much the result of the second and wrongful payment as it was the result of the unofficial or officious audit and certification by Dillon. It does not seem to me to present a proper case for holding the sureties liable.

CALHOMA OIL CORPORATION et al. v.
CONNIFF et ux. (S. F. 13053.)

Supreme Court of California. July 22, 1929.

1. Mines and minerals ☞52—Lessors' notice held not waiver of past breaches, so as to render admissible evidence of prior violations.

Lessors' notice that, unless lessees strictly complied with their part of lease, lessors would take legal action necessary to terminate lease, did not constitute waiver of past breaches of covenants of lease, requiring continuous drilling, so as to render inadmissible any and all evidence of prior violations.

2. Mines and minerals ☞78(3)—Strict compliance with statute is not required, where lessors, seeking to terminate mining lease, are not directly proceeding under unlawful detainer statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1159 et seq.).

Strict and rigid compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1159 et seq., permitting action for unlawful detainer, is not required, where lessors, seeking to terminate mining lease, are not directly proceeding under such statute.

3. Mines and minerals ☞78(3)—That lessors instituted suit to quiet title one day after serving notice forfeiting mining lease cannot avail lessee, where judgment of forfeiture was entered in action commenced by lessee several weeks after service of notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 1161).

That lessors instituted suit to quiet title within one day after service of notice canceling and forfeiting mining lease could not avail lessee, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, requiring three days' notice, where judgment of forfeiture was entered in action commenced by lessee itself several weeks after service of notice of forfeiture.

4. Mines and minerals ☞78(3)—Lessee, by contesting right of lessors to claim possession, waived defects in notice of forfeiture.

Where lessee all along contested right of lessors to claim possession, any defect in or failure of demand or notice of forfeiture was waived by lessee.

5. Mines and minerals ☞52—Lessees could not dismiss suit to enjoin lessors from interfering with drilling operations, where lessors asked for cancellation of lease (Code Civ. Proc. § 581).

Where lessee instituted action to restrain lessors from interfering with its drilling operations under mining lease, and lessors by their answer asked for cancellation of lease and for restitution of demised premises, court properly refused to permit lessee to dismiss action, since answer asked for such affirmative relief as, under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, would preclude dismissal without lessor's consent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action to enjoin interference with oil-drilling operations by the Calhoma Oil Corporation and another against James E. Conniff and wife. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Gilman & Harnden, of Oakland, for appellants.

Collins & Roan, of Oakland, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. The plaintiff corporation instituted this action to permanently enjoin and restrain the defendants from interfering with its asserted endeavor to continue drilling operations on a tract of land situate in Alameda county, which tract, by written lease bearing date March 19, 1925, had been demised to it for a term of five years by the defendants. The lessors, by way of affirmative defense, alleged in their answer that the lessee had violated a provision of the lease requiring continuous drilling, which violation, it was alleged, caused the lessors, on September 29, 1926, to serve the lessee with written notice of cancellation of the lease. The court below, on sufficient evidence, found the allegations of the affirmative defense to be true, and entered judgment denying the injunctive relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It also declared plaintiff's lease forfeited because of breach of covenant, and ordered restitution of the premises to the lessors. Plaintiff appealed.

[1] As a first contention, appellant urges that the notice of forfeiture served by the lessors was insufficient and defective, and failed to work a forfeiture of the lease and leasehold estate, for the reason that such notice did not comply with the provisions of section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in that it did not demand possession of the demised premises. Two notices were served on the lessee in this case. Two months before giving the final notice, the owners served a preliminary notice or demand, viz.: "This is to notify you and each of you that the lessors under said lease expect to and do rely upon the strict terms and provisions of this lease, and unless the lessee, Calhoma Oil Corporation, strictly complies with its part thereof, that said lessors will take such legal action as may be necessary to terminate said lease and the right of said lessee thereunder." Appellant contended upon the trial, and the point is reiterated upon the appeal, that this constituted a waiver of all past breaches of the covenant of the lease requiring continuous drilling, so as to render inadmissible any and all evidence of such prior violations. We do not so interpret the notice. Rather than constituting a waiver of any of their rights under the lease, the notice served to inform the appellant that the lessors stood upon its strict terms and provisions.

[2-4] The final notice, given immediately preceding the filing by the owners of a suit to quiet title against the lessee, after quoting the continuous drilling clause of the lease, reads: "Ever since the drilling was commenced you have failed to comply with said provision. We therefore wish to advise you that we have declared and do hereby declare said lease forfeited and hereby notify you that you have no further interest under said lease or in or to said property." If this were a summary proceeding for obtaining possession of real property under section 1159 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, there might be some merit in the contention of the appellant that it had not been served with a sufficient notice and demand of possession to entitle the respondents to proceed. We are not prepared to say that insufficient notice was given; but this is not such a proceeding, and a strict and rigid compliance with those sections of the Code is not required, where the lessors are not directly proceeding under the statute permitting an action for unlawful detainer, with its accompanying penalties. Williams v. Edge, 192 Cal. 254, 255, 219 P. 747.

Neither does the three-day period prescribed in section 1161, supra, offer an obstacle to the relief herein sought by and granted to the lessors. The fact that the lessors instituted a quiet title action within one day after service of the notice canceling and forfeiting the lease cannot avail the appellant, for the judgment of forfeiture now complained of was entered in this action—a separate and distinct proceeding—commenced by the lessee itself several weeks subsequent to the service of the notice of forfeiture. Assuming, only, that the owners of the land should have given some other or further notice, the lessee has all along contested, and now contests, the right of the lessors to claim possession. Therefore any defect in or failure of demand or notice may be regarded as having been waived by the appellant. Williams v. Edge, supra.

[5] The court below did not err, as urged by the appellant, in refusing to permit it to dismiss this action. The answer of the respondents asked for such affirmative relief as, under the provisions of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, would preclude a dismissal by the plaintiff and appellant without the respondents' consent. The appellant, by its complaint, sought to enjoin interference with its drilling operations, while the respondents, by their answer, asked for cancellation of the lease under which appellant claims, and for restitution of the demised premises.

The finding, "That the actual drilling on said well was commenced on October 1, 1925, and that said drilling was not continuous, as provided for in said lease; that there were many delays during which times no drilling or work was done on said well, and that during said time when no work was being done on said well it was not occasioned from unavoidable delays, nor from causes commonly known as the acts of God; that plaintiff, Calhoma Oil Corporation, made no effort to drill said well, as in said lease provided, or to a depth to ascertain if oil could be produced, * * *" finds ample support in the record. What we have already said sufficiently disposes of the remaining contentions urged by the appellant.

KEIPER v. DUNN et al. (Sac. 4162.)

Supreme Court of California. July 22, 1929.

1. Boundaries ⇨25—Filing official maps of later survey did not change boundaries established by original official survey.

Boundaries established by an original official survey, with reference to which titles had vested, were not changed by filing of official map of later survey delineating differently located boundaries.

2. Boundaries ⇨37(1)—In action to establish boundary of adjoining lots, evidence held to sustain judgment for defendants.

In action to quiet title, where defendants claimed title to strip of land in question under official survey and plaintiff claimed under subsequent official survey and there had been fence for over 40 years on line claimed by defendants, evidence held sufficient to sustain judgment decreeing defendants to be owners.

3. Evidence ⇨460(6)—Deed conveying lot 8 and 2 feet of lot 7 did not preclude grantee from showing that true description of lot 8 included all land which deed purported to convey.

Deed conveying lot 8 and quitclaiming 2 feet of lot 7, made with reference to a certain survey, did not constitute binding admission that such survey was correct or preclude grantee from showing that true boundary of lot 8 included 2 feet of lot 7, as shown by such survey.

4. Costs $\Rightarrow$ 32(4)—Plaintiff was properly denied costs, where adjudged only to be owner of land to which defendants made no claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 739).

In action to quiet title, where plaintiff was adjudged only to be the owner of land to which defendants admitted plaintiff's ownership, he was properly denied costs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 739.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by John S. Keiper against Winifred B. Dunn and others, as executrix and executors of the will of Chauncey H. Dunn, deceased, and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John C. March and R. Platnauer, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Chauncey H. Dunn and Downey, Brand, Seymour & Dunn, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendants in an action to quiet title. Plaintiff, John S. Keiper, and one Chauncey H. Dunn, at the time of his death, were the owners of adjoining lots in the city of Sacramento. Defendants are the executrix and executors of the will of said Dunn and other persons who assert an interest in the property under him. The action involves a dispute as to the location of the boundary line between said two lots.

The block in which said lots are located is bounded on the west by Fourteenth street, on the north by J street, on the east by Fifteenth street and on the south by K street. Said block is cut by an alley, which runs approximately through the center of the block from Fourteenth to Fifteenth street. The sections of the block on each side of the alley were originally divided into four lots, with an approximate frontage of 80 feet each. Lot 8, which constitutes a portion of the estate of said Chauncey H. Dunn, deceased, is situate at the southwest corner of said block, and lot 7, the western portion of which is owned by plaintiff, adjoins it on the east side. Both lots extend back to the alley.

Plaintiff claims that the boundary line delineated on the map prepared by one Bassett from a survey made by him as city surveyor in 1878 is the true division line between said lots 7 and 8. For many years a board fence lay to the east of said division line indicated on the Bassett map, distant therefrom, according to the testimony of the witness Rooney, 1.97 feet at the line of K Street and 1.4 feet at the alley. The contention of defendants, upheld by the court below, is that the line established by an official survey of 1854, with reference to which sections of the city were laid out, is controlling and that the line of said fence, rather than the line indicated on the Bassett map, is the boundary established by said survey of 1854. The dispute concerns the strip of land between the boundary line of lots 7 and 8 as indicated on the Bassett map and the line to the east thereof, which for many years was marked by said wooden fence.

A three-story building, occupied by defendant Heald's Business College under lease, is situate on lot 8, and extends beyond the boundary line indicated on the Bassett map to the fence line at the alley and to within a few inches thereof at K street. It does not appear that plaintiff or his predecessors ever occupied said strip of land in any manner.

Defendants further alleged that between 1870 and 1880, the boundary line between said lots 7 and 8 being uncertain, the respective owners erected said fence and agreed that it marked the division or boundary line. Defendants also claimed title to said strip of land by adverse possession.

[1, 2] Defendants declare the rule to be that boundaries established by an original official survey, with reference to which titles are vested, are not changed by the filing of an official map of a later survey delineating differently located boundaries. Winchester v. Payne, 10 Cal. App. 501, 102 P. 531; Perich v. Maurer, 29 Cal. App. 293, 155 P. 471. The difficulty in the instant case was to locate the line of the earlier survey. We think the view of the court below that the division line appearing on the Bassett map was not the line of the survey of 1854, but that the fence marked said ancient line, is sufficiently supported by the evidence to sustain the judgment decreeing defendants to be the owners of the parcel of land in dispute.

The map of the early survey, adopted as the official map of the city in 1854, was characterized by witnesses as being fragmentary, inaccurate, and lacking in data and measurements which would enable it to be used as a basis for subsequently locating lots upon the ground. The surveyor preparing it either placed no permanent monuments in the streets, or the monuments became obliterated. The map of said survey showed blocks of uniform size, each divided into eight lots of equal size, with intersecting streets or alleys of uniform width at right angles. The streets as actually developed and used presented a different appearance. Bassett, as city surveyor in 1878, prepared the Bassett maps to supply plats from which property could be located with a greater degree of accuracy. The Bassett maps and the Bassett street intersection monuments are now commonly used in making surveys of lots within the city, and descriptions are generally prepared with reference to said maps and monuments. J. C. Boyd, a licensed surveyor, who was city engineer at one time, testified that Bassett took the physical conditions found on the ground and co-ordinated the system of streets in reference to the physical monuments, or buildings, or occupied positions, placing permanent monuments in the street intersections to serve as future reference points.

It appears, however, from the testimony of said Boyd, that the Bassett survey in a number of instances did not conform to the boundary lines indicated by the physical existence of streets, buildings, concrete walks, and other indices of property lines. Boyd's testimony would indicate that the preponderance of evidence was that the Bassett monuments and maps marking and delineating the block in which said lots are situate did not conform to the original survey. Two plats or maps prepared by Boyd were introduced in evidence as defendants' exhibits. Said plats show that not only does the line of the fence above referred to lie to the east of the Bassett line dividing lots 7 and 8, and also that the building upon lot 8 extends beyond said Bassett line, but also that there exists an old wooden fence commencing on K street, .09 feet east of the Bassett boundary line between lots 6 and 7. The probable inaccuracy of the Bassett line is made more evident by the fact that the fence dividing lots 5 and 6 is 1.55 feet east of the Bassett line at the point where it intersects the alley. The builders of an old shed constructed upon said lot 5 accepted said ancient wooden fence as the division line. Boyd testified that the sidewalks on the block were made at different times by different persons and that the joints were practically even with the fence lines. He estimated the fences as having been built between 40 and 60 years ago, and stated that in his opinion said old fences more correctly represented the lines of the survey of 1854 than did the Bassett intersection monuments and lines.

Ella McCleery, one of the joint grantors from whom defendants' intestate received title, testified that her parents acquired ownership of lot 8 in 1886, and that she became and continued to be familiar with the property from that date until 1912, in which year she and her sisters conveyed it to defendants' intestate. In 1886 an old fence marked the east line of the lot. Said fence existed at the time they disposed of the lot. They claimed up to the fence line. Charles H. King, who lived on the southeast corner of the block, at Fifteenth and K streets, from 1866 to 1880 or 1883, testified that there was a board fence approximately 80 feet from the east side of Fourteenth street, and a residence upon lot 8, but lot 7 was unoccupied and used by children as a playground. J. C. Rooney, a civil engineer, testified that he made a survey in 1911 and found a fence east of the Bassett boundary and along the line to which defendants claim to own.

We think it clearly appears that the fence referred to by the witnesses Rooney, McCleery, and King, and claimed to mark the boundary line, was placed upon the property some time prior to 1873, when the witness King first remembered to have seen it as a young child. In Perich v. Maurer, 29 Cal. App. 293, 155 P. 471, it was asserted, as in the instant case, that there was a discrepancy between the lines of the original survey and the Bassett lines. The law as announced by the District Court of Appeal in that case may appropriately be quoted in sustaining the judgment declaring the fence line as the true boundary in the instant case. In that case, as here, the question was the location of a division line in the city of Sacramento, dependent upon the same surveys and similar facts presented by the instant case. The court said:

"The fence itself is a monument, visible and obtrusive, which has existed for forty years or more, that under the peculiar circumstances of this case is quite persuasive in favor of the claim of defendants. It is a fair presumption that this fence was originally placed upon the true line as then recognized and understood, and it is proper to assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that when the fence was built, either that the contiguous owners had knowledge and information of the lines of the Sutter survey and acted accordingly, or that the true line was uncertain and by agreement it was fixed and marked by said fence. It is not surprising that this fence seemed so important to Boyd and to the trial judge. Its existence for so many years, the recognition accorded it as the true boundary, the acquiescence of the respective owners in the location and the improvements made accordingly, were rightfully regarded as important, if not decisive, considerations in the determination of a line otherwise obscure and uncertain."

[3] The deed to Dunn conveying to him lot 8 and quitclaiming to him the west 2 feet of lot 7, and Dunn's description of the property as lot 8 and the west 2 feet of lot 7 in the notice of completion filed by him under the Mechanics' Lien Law, which descriptions were obviously made with reference to the Bassett map, did not constitute binding admissions that the Bassett survey was correct in the degree that would preclude defendants from showing that the true boundary included approximately 2 feet of the west portion of lot 7 as indicated on the Bassett map. The metes and bounds description of lot 7 prepared by Boyd and adopted by plaintiff in his complaint was a description of lot 7 as delineated on the Bassett map, and the survey of said lot made by him for plaintiff was according to the Bassett lines, and did not purport to be a representation that the Bassett line coincided with the lines of the early survey.

[4] Plaintiff was properly denied his costs. The only portion of the land described in the complaint of which plaintiff was adjudged to be the owner was the land east of the fence but admitted plaintiff's ownership in fee, line, to which defendants asserted no claim, Section 739, Code Civ. Proc.

Judgment affirmed.

PRESTON, J. We think it impossible to find a prototype for the situation presented by the above-entitled appeal. The assignments of error consist of attacks upon the findings of the court below in the settlement of the accounts of a trustee. Counsel writing the brief on appeal suggests at the outset that we call for the services of an accountant to aid our deliberations, and at the same time presents in addition to the voluminous record, a large suitcase full of original documents, which he asks us to examine. In these requests may be found the germ of the error into which the appellants have fallen, for we are asked, in disregard of our established rules of appellate practice, to sit as a trial court to pass upon objections and exceptions to literally a score of items of this account allowed by the court below. No single assignment of error is based upon the contention that no evidence may be found in the record to support the item attacked, and, indeed, no such assignment could be truthfully made. Notwithstanding this failure to conform to our rules of procedure, we have spent considerable time in trying to find a substantial item to which criticism could properly be made by an appellate court, and we have not found one. Counsel has presented his points in an incomplete, piecemeal, and partisan manner. Moreover, his criticisms are promiscuous and without definite object. In fact, his brief is an unrestrained criticism of any and every ruling of importance made by the court below. We are firmly convinced that no good purpose can be served by a prolonged discussion of the much-involved transactions from which this action resulted. Even a short statement of all of the facts would add undue length to this opinion. However, enough will be recited to show the correctness of the observations we have made.

Prior to June 1, 1917, appellants George Bonnefoy and Herbert Shear and defendant F. R. M. Bloomer were a copartnership operating two unrelated business enterprises, one a lime business under the fictitious name of El Dorado Lime Company, and the other a wood and coal business under the fictitious name of Pioneer Wood & Coal Company. The business in both branches was in bad financial condition. Dissension among the partners also existed. The lime business was indebted to plaintiff bank in an aggregate sum of over $34,000, besides accrued interest. The wood business was also indebted to the same institution in the sum of about $25,000. The partnership applied for additional loans from plaintiff. This resulted in an investigation of the properties and a demand by the bank for the payment of all of said indebtedness. To promote payment thereof, and to better secure plaintiff, the copartnership agreed with plaintiff that one George A. Starkweather should be put in exclusive management and control of both enterprises as joint agent of the parties interested.

Said agent took charge of said business and managed and operated the same for a short time. Then on June 13, 1917, said agent, acting on his own account and not for plaintiff, at the solicitation of said copartners, entered into an agreement in writing which had for its object the transfer of both said enterprises and all properties in connection therewith to the said Starkweather as trustee, said trust to last for a period of one year, at the end of which time the trustee might, by the payment of all the indebtedness to plaintiff, cause to be formed two separate corporations, one to take over each of said enterprises; but if said indebtedness was not paid, or if said trustee did not care to proceed further, the property was to be returned to the former partners. In this agreement said trustee was given the fullest power of exclusive management and control of said enterprises, including expressly full power and authority to borrow money, make contracts, and buy for and sell the products of said concerns.

There followed, immediately after the making of this contract, proper transfers to said trustee of all said properties. Thereupon he immediately set about to rehabilitate said concerns, and to that end he began to incur additional indebtedness to plaintiff bank. Among other things, he established the existence of new deposits of lime, built a new plant in connection therewith, including two miles of railroad, together with new and up-to-date equipment for the operation thereof. Said copartners all knew of these efforts being made by the trustee. One of said copartners remained in charge of the said wood business, and his brother was for a time in charge of said lime business under said trustee. The old bookkeeper was continued in the same service under the trustee as had theretofore been performed by him. The agreement of June 13, 1917, was extended for a period of six months, following the expiration of the first year. Said trustee evidently misinterpreted the covenants thereof respecting the exercise of the option to take over said properties by the formation of two corporations for in February, 1918, and before the expiration of one year he caused to be incorporated the defendant, El Dorado Lime & Minerals Company, a corporation, and in December, 1918, he caused the wood and coal to be likewise incorporated under the name of Pioneer Wood & Coal Company, a corporation.

Following the incorporation of the lime business, he caused a bond issue of the corporation, in the sum of $100,000, to be floated and secured by the execution of a deed of trust to the defendant California Trust & Savings Bank. This issue of bonds was used in refunding a certain amount of the old indebtedness of the copartnership held by plaintiff, and in payment of some of the subsequent indebtedness incurred by said trustee. In addition to the bond issue, the lime company, through said trustee, incurred still more indebtedness at plaintiff bank, represented by the issuing of many promissory notes in small amounts. Finally a note for some $40,000, the then total of this last indebtedness, was given and secured by the making of a mortgage by said lime company to plaintiff, which mortgage also covered future advances. The indebtedness against the wood business was also increased by said trustee, and the old indebtedness refunded and carried into new obligations signed by the trustee.

Efforts to rehabilitate both enterprises failed, and on April 15, 1921, the present action was begun. This action took on a peculiar form. Ostensibly it was to foreclose liens held by plaintiff on the properties formerly belonging to said copartnership, but the complaint in addition undertook to set forth all the many transactions that had occurred between the said copartnership and said Starkweather, setting out at length the various contracts and agreements that passed between them, and, in short, it was really a suit for an accounting of the full stewardship of said trustee, in order to ascertain what sums had been advanced by him for the benefit of said trust estate, and to have plaintiff and other creditors subrogated to the rights of said trustee as against the trust estate; also to have a sale of the trust properties and to have personal judgment against said copartners for any deficiency. In this connection, it should be noted, however, that the complaint contained allegations which, if true, would have upheld Starkweather in his contention that he had exercised his option and was entitled to organize the corporations above mentioned, and to have issued to him the quota of stock mentioned in said agreement of June 13, 1917.

The various defendants answered the complaint, and interveners were allowed to appear, the ramifications of which matters are not involved upon this appeal. Appellants by their answer denied that Starkweather had any right to form said corporations, or to issue to himself any stock or shares thereof, and claimed that he had breached his contract or option, in that he had neither paid the original indebtedness of the copartners, nor had he returned the properties, nor had he in other respects carried out the trust agreement, and likewise they demanded an accounting.

The trial of the action started on May 10, 1922, and the first 14 days thereof were consumed in ascertaining whether Starkweather had properly exercised the said option to take over the properties formerly belonging to said copartnership and convert them into said corporations, as provided in the plan set forth in said written agreement of June 13, 1917, and also whether Starkweather, as such trustee, had the right to incur the subsequent indebtedness so incurred by him in the management, control, and operation of said trust property. At the end of this period the court ruled that Starkweather had not done the things that would have given him the right to exercise the option contained in said contract, and that, although these corporations had been organized, they were nevertheless but extensions of the acts of said Starkweather, as trustee, and not in his own right; that Starkweather, as well as the corporations, continued to be but the manifestation of the trusteeship created by said contract; and that it was the duty of said trustee upon a proper accounting and reimbursement of the funds advanced to said trust estate to retransfer the property to its original owners in the specified proportions. The court also held, however, that Starkweather had the right, and had the power and authority under his trusteeship, to incur all indebtedness that had been incurred in his own name and that of the corporations, not only to plaintiff but to certain other specified creditors. The court then ordered Starkweather to file his account, supported by proper vouchers. He did so, but his account was unsatisfactory to the court in some respects, and to appellants, and a further order was made, requiring him to furnish other details in connection with said account. During all this period appellants were insisting that the action be converted into one for an accounting by the trustee to the beneficiaries of said trust.

At this juncture, on April 21, 1923, and with the consent of all the parties, the court appointed a referee with power to administer oaths and examine witnesses, receive oral and documentary evidence, examine into the accounts of said trustee, and segregate the matters pertaining to the trust estate from the matters pertaining to his personal enterprises other than said trust estate, take an account of all moneys and properties expended or used upon the trust property, and in general to make specific findings upon certain questions of fact relating to said account. Later and on May 9, 1923, the order of reference was amended, so as to require a report and findings upon still further details in connection with said account, and provided that the disbursements of said trustee should be segregated under the heads of labor in extraction of products and in development of properties, railroad, railroad rolling stock, machinery, and other equipment, buildings and other improvements, office expense, with discretion in the referee to make still further segregation, if found in order, and directing him to report to the court within the time specified.

The taking of evidence in connection with the reference ended on December 1, 1923. On January 10, 1924, the referee submitted his report and findings to the court. These findings were later, except as modified in one or two particulars, made a part of the findings of fact of the court herein. Ten days were allowed for filing objections. Appellants filed certain objections, covering practically the same grounds asserted in their brief. A hearing in open court was had upon this report of the referee, and additional evidence was received by the court. The court then made an order modifying said account to the extent of about $22,000, and in other respects adopted the referee's report. Unsatisfied with this, appellants were allowed permission to attack said report by affidavits of expert accountants. Counter affidavits were filed, and the court again overruled the attempts to impeach the account. When the findings were made by the court, appellants again filed affidavits attacking the account. The court then gave the matter still further consideration and denied the motion for a retrial.

The testimony heard by the referee was not reported and is not in the record. In addition to the findings of the referee, and disregarding the fact that the evidence heard by him is not before us, and disregarding any presumptions that attend the findings of the referee, it may be observed that the correctness of the report was testified to by the trustee himself, also by the bookkeeper, who had formerly been in the employ of said copartnership, and the correctness of a great deal of it was vouched for by appellant George Bonnefoy himself, as well as by his brother, Victor Bonnefoy, and proper vouchers were filed to support it. Judgment passed establishing the trust indebtedness to plaintiff and fixing the priorities between the parties; it also fixed the trust indebtedness to said trustee, provided for the subrogation of the creditors to the rights of the trustee, and provided, in case of a failure to redeem, for sale of the properties and distribution of the proceeds thereof, and for a deficiency if the sale did not provide for the payment of the total claims.

[1] Under this situation appellants insist that there is ground for this court to interfere and restate this account. The mere recital of the above facts is a sufficient answer to any such request. It is not and cannot be contended that substantial evidence was not received in support of said account as it is rendered. This fact appears over and over throughout the record, and there is no assertion by appellants that substantial evidence is entirely wanting to support it.

Appellants seem to contend that authority was wanting in the trustee to incur this indebtedness subsequent to the execution of the contract of June 13, 1917; but, as above pointed out, said agreement gave said trustee the widest and fullest power of management and control of said enterprises and expressly authorized the incurring of indebtedness in connection therewith. Moreover, appellants stood by during a large part of the period while same was going on and either expressly or tacitly approved it.

[2] Appellants also seem to contend that, inasmuch as the court found that the trustee had not lawfully organized the corporations and taken over the properties of the trust estate, and the complaint alleged that this had been legally done by him, for this reason the case was tried on inconsistent theories, and the judgment should be reversed. The evident answer to this is that at appellants' own request the issues of the case were enlarged, and by consent the action took the form of an accounting between the trustee and appellants, together with the ascertainment of the amount of indebtedness incurred by him on behalf of the trust estate at plaintiff bank and other places. In other words, at their own request and acquiescence, the case took a form not wholly measured by or consistent with the allegations of the complaint. An appreciation of this situation is a complete answer to a great number of criticisms indulged by appellants in their brief. For example, they urge that the complaint only claimed $244,000, whereas the court allowed them 255 odd thousand dollars and that the trustee was credited with a note of some $27,000, which was not mentioned in the complaint or due at the time of filing thereof. The above observation also answers the contention that the notes of the lime corporation were not the indebtedness of the trustee, because not alleged in the complaint.

[3] Another contention stressed by appellants is the claim that Starkweather, as trustee, borrowed money from plaintiff bank, which was charged as advancements to the trust estate by him, and that these moneys were spent upon the trust estate and were charged against the beneficiaries a second time; in other words, that the amounts the trustee credited himself with were doubled as against them. This point was urged many times, and was answered repeatedly by the referee, both in his report and by affidavit. Respondent in its brief has correctly pointed out that the system employed in the accounting was first to ascertain whether the indebtedness claimed by plaintiff and other creditors was indebtedness incurred by Starkweather as trustee. This issue was found in favor of the creditors, but, when the account was taken between Starkweather and the trust estate, these debts were not considered. The true amounts spent by him on the trust estate were calculated independent of these obligations of creditors, and, when the total thereof was ascertained, the decree of the court was that these creditors should be subrogated to the rights of the trustee as against said trust estate, and that the beneficiaries under the law of agency were personally liable for any deficiency. There was no doubling of credits by said trustee. A failure to appreciate this situation brings appellants into error about the item where they contend they were "short-changed."

[4] The court found that the trustee had acted honestly; that the accounts were kept correctly; that, although he mingled some accounts of personal business with the trust account, they were severable, and could be and were segregated; and that said trustee was neither guilty of fraud nor of bad faith. A great many of appellants' statements are predicated upon the assumption of fraud, but in the face of this finding no merit can be accorded them. These and the other findings made have ample support in the evidence. We do not deem further discussion required.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRANDALL v. SCHNOUSER. (L. A. 11259.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 15, 1929.

1. Pleading $\S$ 291(2)—Plaintiff admitted genuineness and due execution of instruments by which he conveyed property to defendant, where not filing affidavit required by statute (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448).

In action to establish partnership for an accounting and division of property, plaintiff admitted genuineness and due execution of deeds and other documents by which plaintiff allegedly conveyed property to defendant, which copies were attached to and made a part of the amended answer, where plaintiff failed to file affidavit in writing denying same, as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448.

2. Partnership $\S$ 77—Transfer of property may be made to another partner for partnership purposes consistent with existence of partnership.

It is consistent with existence of partnership that a transfer of property be made by one or more partners to another partner for partnership purposes.

3. Partnership $\S$ 53—Evidence held insufficient to establish existence of partnership between parties.

Evidence held insufficient to show existence of a partnership between parties who lived together as husband and wife.

4. Evidence ☞151(2)—Testimony as to plaintiff's intention in executing and delivering documents conveying property to defendant held properly excluded.

In action to establish partnership for an accounting and division of property, testimony as to plaintiff's intention in executing and delivering various documents conveying property to defendant held properly excluded.

5. Pleading ☞291(2)—Testimony that plaintiff conveyed property to defendant to save it from foreclosure and loss, due to demand of plaintiff's creditors, held properly admitted, notwithstanding failure to file statutory affidavit (Code Civ. Proc. § 448).

In action to establish partnership for an accounting and division of property, testimony that plaintiff conveyed property to defendant to protect property from foreclosure and loss, due to demands of plaintiff's creditors, held properly admitted, notwithstanding plaintiff's failure to deny genuineness and due execution of the various instruments conveying the property, because not filing affidavit required by Code Civ. Proc. § 448.

6. Partnership ☞328(3)—Evidence held not to establish that transfer of property was for partnership purposes.

Evidence held not to establish that transfer of property by plaintiff to defendant was for partnership purposes.

On motion for nonsuit, evidence and every inference that may be fairly deducible therefrom must be received in light most favorable to plaintiff's claim.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Marshall F. McComb, Judge.

Action by Rexford D. Crandall against Mabel Schnouser, sometimes known as and called Mabel Crandall. From a judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Walter E. Barry and Clarke & Bowker, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. M. Booth, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Plaintiff brought an action to establish a partnership between himself and the defendant, relating back to the month of February, 1918. He prayed for an accounting and for a division of properties. The defendant denied the existence of any partnership, and alleged that all the property involved in the action belonged to her in "her sole and separate right." According to the averments of her amended answer, she and the plaintiff were married in Mexico in June, 1914, after which time they resided and cohabited together as husband and wife. During that period she alleged they purchased and acquired the real and personal property mentioned in the complaint, the consideration therefor having been paid from and out of their joint earnings. She then alleged that on or about the 10th of May, 1927, marital differences arose between herself and the plaintiff, and a dispute ensued as to the right of the plaintiff to expend the income from the real property involved for his own personal recreation and amusement; whereupon, desiring the cease to live and cohabit with the defendant, and intending to live separate and apart from her, plaintiff, in full settlement of their differences and disputes, and for the purpose of providing for the future support and maintenance of defendant, by certain instruments in writing assigned, transferred, conveyed, and set over to the defendant all his right, title, and interest in and to the joint bank accounts of the parties and in and to the personal and real property described in the complaint, all "as her [defendant's] sole and separate property."

By way of a further and separate defense to the action, the defendant alleged that "for some technical reason or law of the state of Baja California [where the marriage ceremony of the parties was performed], the nature of which is not known to this defendant," the marriage of the parties "is and was void," which fact was not known to the defendant, but was known to the plaintiff, who fraudulently concealed the situation from the defendant, in order that he would "not become or be bound by the said ceremony of marriage, * * * while this defendant should and would at all times believe that by reason of the said ceremony she became and thereafter continued to be the lawful wife of the plaintiff, and would, by reason of such belief, cohabit with the plaintiff as his wife, and to the end that any property acquired by the said plaintiff and this defendant, by their joint earnings or the earnings of either of them, after the said ceremony of marriage, would not in fact be or become the community property of the plaintiff and this defendant, and so as to enable said plaintiff to desert and abandon and cease to cohabit with this defendant whenever plaintiff at his pleasure should so select, and without committing any breach of any legal marital obligation to this defendant." It was further alleged that, after the ceremony of marriage performed in Mexico, the parties returned to California, where the plaintiff had at all times lived and cohabited with defendant, and plaintiff, in furtherance of his said fraudulent intent, represented to defendant that she was his wife, and so stated and represented to numerous other persons in the community where plaintiff and defendant maintained their common home and abode. On the strength of this separate defense, defendant alleges that plaintiff "has been guilty of conduct in violation of the fundamental conception of equity, and does not come into court with clean hands."

[1] Copies of the deeds and other documents, by which it was alleged the plaintiff transferred and conveyed the property in question to the defendant, were attached to and made a part of the amended answer. Plaintiff admitted the genuineness and due execution of these instruments by failing to file the affidavit denying the same, which is required by section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The trial of the cause resulted in the nonsuit of plaintiff and judgment for the defendant, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

[2, 3] Appellant argues that this is not an action to set aside the conveyances executed and delivered by him to the respondent, but that he is acquiescing in the conveyances to the extent that he admits their genuineness and due execution. But he is, he contends, only seeking to have property which was put in the name of one partner subjected to the uses and purposes for which it was so transferred. It is, of course, entirely consistent with the existence of a partnership that a transfer of property be made by one or more partners to another partner for partnership purposes. Haight v. Haight, 151 Cal. 90, 90 P. 197. The main question, and the important one, to be first determined in this case, is therefore: Was a partnership established by the evidence in the court below? We do not think the evidence here, as a whole, has that effect.

The appellant testified, in his own behalf, that he and the defendant had lived together as husband and wife, and cohabited as such, since June, 1914, and that at all times after that date, and until in 1927, he had held the defendant out to the public and to the world as his wife. In 1918, at which time plaintiff contemplated engaging in the grocery business with his father, he testified, he and the defendant "made an oral agreement as to [a] partnership," under the terms of which all property (other than that relating to the grocery business) accumulated by their joint efforts by work and buying and deals in property was to be partnership property, "to divide the money and the losses and her living, and so on and so forth, * * * everything we had or accumulated was to be divided on an equal basis." There was no partnership name or style under which the parties did business. No partnership books were kept, no partnership dividends were paid, and there was never any distribution of funds between the parties on a partnership basis. The appellant admitted that he never told anybody there was a partnership between himself and the defendant, and never mentioned copartnership in connection with the transaction until the complaint in this action was filed. "I could not," he testified, "because we [plaintiff and defendant] were living as man and wife," Plaintiff did not repudiate or "denounce" the existence of the marital relation between himself and the defendant until he filed the complaint in the action in 1928. Before that time, on May 10, 1927, on June 28, 1927, and on January 5, 1928, the appellant executed the three instruments set out in the amended answer of the respondent, in each of which he designated the respondent as his wife, and in each of which there is an apt recital that the property so transferred and conveyed is to be the sole and separate property of the respondent.

[4, 5] The appellant sought to testify as to his "intention" in executing and delivering the various documents to the respondent; but the trial court properly sustained the objection of the defendant to any such evidence. Plaintiff was, however, permitted to testify to, and to submit other evidence of, the circumstances under which the instruments were executed and delivered. The substance of such testimony is that in 1927 the appellant and respondent "started to have arguments" in regard to the handling of the property; the respondent charging the appellant was improperly spending money and not taking care of the property. It also appears that appellant was in straitened financial circumstances, and banks and other creditors were demanding security for their claims. The respondent refused to join with the appellant in executing such security, unless the appellant "turned the property over to her to take care of and put in her name." Appellant's testimony in that regard is: "I was forced to make these deeds to protect the property from foreclosure and loss. The bank and creditors were demanding protection, and I was forced to execute them to protect the property from foreclosure and losing it. There were other reasons. The reasons were to provide an income and give her [the respondent] the property to manage, to collect the rents and look after the property the same as I had before I turned it over to her." The conveyances were executed, and respondent thereupon executed the proper instruments to secure the notes and evidences of indebtedness signed by the appellant and delivered to his creditors.

This evidence was properly admitted. The failure to deny the genuineness and due execution of the various instruments conveying the property to respondent, by not filing the affidavit required by section 448, supra, did not estop the appellant on the trial, without further pleading, to introduce any legitimate defense he might have to the instruments, except the defense of want of genuineness and lack of due execution. Garcia v. California Truck Co., 183 Cal. 767, 192 P. 703.

[6] But we share the estimate of the trial court as to the evidence introduced by the plaintiff below. Even admitting, for the purpose of the decision, that a partnership between the parties was established, the evidence falls short of proving that the conveyances in question were executed as partnership transactions. An otherwise manifest intention of the parties clearly appears from the plain and unambiguous recitals of the various instruments executed by the appellant. He has not sought to reform the instruments, and they stand unchallenged as to their recitals and their effect. While it was not inconsistent with the theory of a partnership between the parties that the respondent should assume the obligations which she did in the transaction (Haight v. Haight, supra), by way of securing the various items of indebtedness of the appellant, we are of the view that the evidence does not establish that the transfer of the property was for partnership purposes.

[7] While, upon a motion for a nonsuit, the evidence and every inference that may be fairly deducible from it must be received in the light most favorable to the plaintiff's claim, it cannot be said in this case that there is an inference "reasonably and fairly deducible therefrom" that is "most favorable to the plaintiff."

The judgment is affirmed.

ELMS v. MERRYMAN FRUIT, LAND & LUMBER CO. (S. F. 13021.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

1. Brokers §86(1)—Evidence held to show that broker failed to fulfill contract to secure buyer for timber lands, so as to authorize recovery of commissions.

Evidence held to show that broker failed to fulfill contract to name buyer and conclude sale of timber lands, so as to entitle him to commissions.

2. Brokers §44—Revocation to defeat broker's right to commission must be made in good faith.

Revocation to defeat broker's right to commission must be made in good faith, and not for purpose of defeating his rights.

3. Brokers §88(2)—Evidence of bad faith or fraud on part of defendant in revoking broker's authority to proceed with contract of sale of timber lands held insufficient for jury.

In action by broker for commission for sale of timber lands, evidence of bad faith or fraud on part of defendant in revoking broker's authority to proceed held insufficient for jury.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Charles S. Elms against the Merryman Fruit, Land & Lumber Company.

From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Treadwell, Van Fleet & Laughlin, Resleure & Hill, and Young & Hudson, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

John L. McNab, of San Francisco, and D. E. Perkins, of Visalia, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action to recover a commission of $75,000 on the sale of approximately 12,600 acres of timber land in Humboldt county. The cause was tried with a jury. When the evidence was all in, the court granted the motion of the defendant for a directed verdict. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment entered on the verdict so directed.

The defendant is a family corporation having its office in Los Angeles county. R. C. Merryman is the principal directing officer of the corporation. Other members of the family are nonresidents of this state. The father, A. C. Merryman, since deceased, has been an extensive lumber operator in the state of Wisconsin. He acquired the property in Humboldt county many years prior to the transactions here involved.

The plaintiff was, and had been for twenty-five years or more, engaged in the business of selling, as a broker, sawmills, timber lands, and timber in numerous localities from New York to Kansas City and Minneapolis and in the Southern states. Prior to August, 1922, his residence and place of business was in New Orleans. About that time he moved to San Francisco. When in New Orleans, and some time prior to September, 1921, he addressed a letter to the Holmes Eureka Lumber Company, of which Thomas W. Hine was general manager, inquiring about timber lands in California. Hine is a distant relative of the Merrymans, but his company has no connection with the defendant company. In September, 1921, the plaintiff and Hine had a conference in the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco, at which time Hine informed the plaintiff that the defendant owned a large acreage of timber lands in Humboldt county and was anxious to sell the same. The next day the plaintiff met R. C. Merryman and in the presence of Hine talked over the situation fully. As a result of the conference Merryman requested the plaintiff to work on the sale of the land.

The plaintiff was not given an exclusive agency. Hine and others were given similar authority. From the testimony of the plaintiff it appeared that his engagement was to work upon the sale of the lands, and if he "could produce a buyer" he would be paid a commission of 5 per cent. on the sale price. By letter of August 9, 1922, to the defendant, the plaintiff defined his contract as one under which he was to recover the commission in consideration of his "naming the buyer and concluding the sale." Thereafter he sought to interest possible purchasers, some in this state, and others in various sections of the United States. From time to time he suggested to the defendant numerous plans of financing the purchase and sale, and the possibility of furthering the transaction by obtaining rights of way over the adjoining lands of another lumber company in order to provide a means of access to tide water. The plans did not meet with the approval of the defendant, and especially following his suggestion of obtaining rights of way the plaintiff was notified by letter of July 5, 1923, that the plaintiff's plans did not meet with the defendant's approval, and that the parties hereto "might just as well call our negotiations off until our minds run in a closer channel."

Being further dissatisfied with the plaintiff's subsequent efforts and methods, the defendant, by letter dated September 3, 1923, revoked the authority of the plaintiff to represent it. That the plaintiff acquiesced in the revocation, or at least received the same without objection, cannot be seriously doubted, for he later requested the permission of the defendant to submit the sale of the lands to a certain Michigan lumber dealer. On December 21, 1923, the plaintiff wrote to Mr. Hine to the effect that a friend of the plaintiff's in Chicago was in touch with certain people who were desirous of starting redwood operations, or of taking over a mill in operation, and that said friend had requested the plaintiff to submit something that could be recommended, and that would be available by January 20th. In this letter the plaintiff stated to Mr. Hine that the defendant's lands might be acceptable, if the rights of way could be offered simultaneously with the lands. The letter concluded: "I would greatly appreciate your assistance in the matter, and, if you would consent to join me in the commission, this would be very agreeable." Mr. Hine replied: "The Merryman timber, as you know, is for sale, but the matter of terms and price would have to be taken up with Mr. Merryman."

The lands were sold to the Charles Nelson Company under an option taken in February, 1924. The transaction was concluded in the following April for the purchase price of $1,500,000. Mr. Hine was paid the commission of $75,000, and divided it equally with Mr. H. W. Jackson, who was president of the Northern Redwood Lumber Company, a subsidiary of the Charles Nelson Company, and who accepted the $37,500 on condition that it be applied as a credit on the purchase price to the Charles Nelson Company, which was done.

At all times mentioned in this controversy, James Tyson was the president and directing officer of the Charles Nelson Company. Mr. Merryman was first introduced to Mr. Tyson by Mr. Charles R. McCormick on October 19, 1923. Mr. Merryman asked Mr. Tyson if he would be interested in the defendant's property. Mr. Tyson replied that he was not interested, and gave as his reason that the defendant's lands were not adjacent to his company's properties. Later on Mr. Hine was requested by Mr. Olmstead, a brother-in-law of Mr. Merryman, to find some way of getting logs from the Merryman lands to Humboldt Bay or to tidewater. On November 15th Mr. Hine approached Mr. Jackson, and inquired of him if it were possible to have logs hauled from the Merryman lands to tidewater over the new road Mr. Jackson was then constructing up Mad river. Mr. Hine was informed that it would be necessary for him to see Mr. Tyson about it. About the middle of January, 1924, Mr. Hine called on Mr. Tyson in San Francisco, for the particular purpose of making arrangements for hauling logs from the Merryman lands over the new road. Mr. Tyson rejected the proposition, on the ground that his road was not a common carrier and he did not wish it to become such. During this conversation Mr. Hine first suggested to Mr. Tyson that the Merryman timber might be made available to the mills of the Northern Redwood Lumber Company. Mr. Tyson replied: "You convince Mr. Jackson; he is the operator of the concern. If you convince him it is, we will take the matter up and talk it over; but, until you do, I am not interested in it at all." Mr. Hine then began to work on Mr. Jackson, and convinced him of the availability of the Merryman timber to his mills. The plaintiff never met Mr. Jackson, nor had any correspondence with him, and Mr. Jackson had never heard of the plaintiff until this action was brought.

[1] It is not disputed that the plaintiff first submitted the proposed sale of said lands to the Charles Nelson Company. This was preceded by an interview with Carl Bachen, an employee of the Charles Nelson Company, serving that company as a contact man in the outer office of the president of the company in San Francisco, at which time Mr. Bachen suggested that the plaintiff submit his proposition in writing. Thereupon the plaintiff, under date of April 26, 1923, addressed a letter to the Charles Nelson Company, submitting the sale of said land to said company on terms subject to confirmation by the defendant. The terms of sale were disapproved by the defendant, and thereafter on May 12, 1923, the plaintiff submitted said lands to the Charles Nelson Company, with accompanying maps, on the authorized terms of $2,500,000, one-fifth in cash and the balance in nine equal payments. Four days later the maps were returned to the plaintiff by Mr. Tyson by mail. It cannot be questioned that the plaintiff earnestly endeavored to arouse the interest of the Charles Nelson Company in the purchase of said lands. However, but one conclusion can be drawn from the evidence as to the result of his efforts and that is, that he failed in his purpose. He therefore failed to fulfill the contract, which he himself defined, to name the buyer and conclude the sale.

In Sessions v. Pac. Imp. Co., 57 Cal. App. 1, 206 P. 653, 660, relied upon by the plaintiff, it was said: "To constitute himself the causa causans, the predominating effective cause, it is not enough that the broker contributes indirectly or incidentally to the sale by imparting information which tends to arouse interest. He must set in motion a chain of events which, without break in their continuity, cause the buyer and seller to come to terms as the proximate result of his peculiar activities." This the plaintiff has not shown by the record before us.

[2, 3] The plaintiff contends that, assuming his authority to have been revoked by the letter of September 3, 1923, such revocation was not made in good faith, but was made in fraud of his rights, citing Breen v. Roy, 8 Cal. App. 475, 97 P. 170, Sessions v. Pac. Imp. Co., 57 Cal. App. 1, 26, 206 P. 653, Blumenthal v. Goodall, 89 Cal. 251, 255, 26 P. 906, and Merkeley v. Fisk, 179 Cal. 748, 178 P. 945. The rule is that the revocation must be made in good faith and not for the purpose of defeating the agent's rights, and it is insisted that under the rule the question as to whether the revocation was in good faith or for the purpose of defeating the agent's commission is, in all cases, a matter for the jury and not for the court. The defendant concedes the existence of the rule, but contends that cases may arise where the question of the existence of good faith or fraud is one for the court, and that the present case is such a one.

We think that the defendant's position is the correct one; otherwise, a nonsuit, or a directed verdict could never occur. The question is: Do the facts permit of any other rational conclusion than that the revocation was in good faith? We find no evidence in the record upon which a jury would be justified in finding bad faith or fraud on the part of the defendant in revoking the plaintiff's authority to proceed. Furthermore, we find nothing in the record which would justify a finding that the sale to the Charles Nelson Company was evidently and plainly approaching success when the authority of the plaintiff was revoked. On the contrary, the evidence discloses, without reasonable inferences to the contrary, that the efforts of the plaintiff to arouse any interest in the sale on the part of the Charles Nelson Company had not met with success.

It would serve no useful purpose further to review the record, consisting of 217 exhibits and much oral testimony, in order to demonstrate that the motion for a directed verdict was properly granted. It is enough to say that the record, as well as the arguments and authorities presented by counsel, have been considered with care, and we find no error in the ruling of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

MAYER v. MAYER. (S. F. 13078.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

1. Marriage $\S$ 58(7)—Marriage annulment on ground of fraud may be had for going through ceremony with intent not to consummate marriage and persistence in such intention.

Where one of parties to marriage goes through ceremony with an intention not to consummate marriage by marital intercourse and persists in such intention, annulment will be granted upon application of other party on ground of fraud.

2. Marriage $\S$ 60(7)—Evidence held to show that husband sued for annulment did not go through marriage with intention not to consummate marriage.

In action to annul marriage on ground of fraud, evidence held as matter of law to impel finding that defendant husband did not go through marriage ceremony with fraudulent intention not to consummate marriage by marital intercourse.

3. Marriage $\S$ 60(7)—Evidence held to sustain conclusion that wife's real reasons for desiring marriage annulment were not husband's fraudulent representations.

In wife's action to annul marriage, evidence held as matter of law to sustain conclusion that wife desired annulment because of husband's inability to support her as she had been accustomed to in past and not because of any fraudulent representations made by husband.

4. Marriage $\S$ 60(6)—Fraudulent representations relied on for marriage annulment must generally be pleaded.

Generally fraudulent representations relied on in action to annul marriage must be pleaded.

5. Marriage $\S$ 58(7)—Fraud necessary to avoid marriage must be such as is deemed vital to marriage relationship.

Fraud necessary to avoid marriage must be such as is deemed vital to marriage relationship and fraud which would afford grounds for rescinding ordinary contract will not justify annulment of marriage.

6. Marriage $\S$ 58(7)—Moral turpitude seriously affecting character of impostor furnishes sufficient grounds for annulment of marriage.

Moral turpitude which seriously affects character of impostor furnishes sufficient grounds for annulment of marriage.

7. Marriage $\S$ 58(7)—Fraudulent representations, if made, regarding age, employment, and war record, held insufficient to constitute fraud required to annul marriage.

Fraudulent representations, if made, by husband before marriage, that he was merchant and owner of shoe store business, 28 years of age, and had seen service in France while in army, when in fact he did not own shoe store, but was merely a shoe salesman employed on salary basis, 22 years of age, and had not seen service in France, held insufficient to constitute fraud required to annul marriage.

8. Marriage $\S$ 58(1)—Law should not be required to annul marriage to which there is no legal objection, entered into voluntarily, unadvisedly, and lightly.

Where husband and wife voluntarily entered into marriage state unadvisedly and lightly, law should not be required to give aid in annulling marriage to existence of which there is no legal objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Adrienne Mayer against Jack Mayer for annulment of marriage. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Morgan V. Spicer and Goldman, Nye & Spicer, all of San Francisco, and Julius C. Shapiro, of Kansas City, Mo., for appellant.

George M. Lipman and Harold L. Levin, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Defendant, Jack Mayer, appeals from a decree of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco annulling his marriage with plaintiff, Adrienne Mayer, on the ground that plaintiff's consent thereto was procured by the fraud of defendant.

The parties were married on June 4, 1926, in the city of San Francisco. Plaintiff was 20 years of age and defendant was 22. Plaintiff resided in the state of New York, with her father and stepmother, and with her stepmother was visiting in San Francisco, having arrived during the first week of May. Said stepmother was then 26 years of age. The parties to the marriage met at a dinner given by a distant relative of plaintiff on May 15, 1926, and thereafter saw each other every evening preceding their marriage. On the evening of June 3d, when they had known each other a little more than two weeks, they agreed to marry on the following day. Defendant was employed as a salesman in a downtown shoe store. The marriage took place during his lunch hour at the city hall, a justice of the peace officiating, and was witnessed by plaintiff's stepmother and a friend of defendant. The defendant left plaintiff a few minutes after the ceremony to return to his employment. On the evening of their wedding day, the newly married couple, together with the stepmother and defendant's friend who witnessed the ceremony, had dinner at the States Restaurant upon the invitation of defendant's friend. After dining, the four talked together until 11:30 p. m., according to plaintiff, and until 1:30 a. m., according to defendant, in the lobby of the Stewart Hotel, where plaintiff and her stepmother were staying while in San Francisco. Plaintiff and her stepmother then went to their room in said hotel and defendant and his friend, who were roommates, repaired to the hotel where they resided. On the following day plaintiff and her stepmother left San Francisco for their New York home on a 4 o'clock p. m. train, in accordance with plans made before plaintiff and defendant agreed to marry. It was understood that defendant should follow plaintiff to New York in about six weeks. They did not see each other on the day of plaintiff's departure and did not meet again until the trial of the action herein. Both parties testified that they never lived together as husband and wife.

After an exchange of letters and telegrams, the contents of which will be more fully referred to hereafter, plaintiff, on June 19th, just fifteen days after the marriage, sent defendant a telegram in which she stated that, after having had time to think the matter over, she had concluded that she was "too hasty in getting married," and asked of defendant permission to have the marriage annulled. Defendant replied by telegram: "Don't know what it's about. Will not give my consent."

The amended complaint for annulment was filed August 22, 1927. All allegations of fraud therein contained were denied by defendant, who contends upon this appeal from the decree of annulment that the evidence does not support the findings of fraud, and, further, that the fraudulent representations found by the court to have been made are not such as the law recognizes as grounds for the annulment of marriage.

The court below decreed an annulment on the basis of findings that defendant falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff that he was a merchant and the owner of a shoe store business in the city of San Francisco and of the merchant class, and that he was 28 years of age and had seen service in France while in the army, when in fact he did not own a shoe store, but was merely a shoe salesman employed on a salary basis, and was only 22 years of age, and had not seen service in France during the World War.

[1, 2] In her complaint, plaintiff alleged as a further ground of fraud that "at the time of said marriage defendant had no intention of consummating said marriage." The court did not squarely find on this allegation, but it did find that defendant represented to plaintiff that he would enter into the marriage relation with her, and plaintiff believed, trusted, and relied upon such representations, and was thereby induced to consent to said marriage, and that defendant had not asked plaintiff to live with him as man and wife and at no time had they lived together or cohabited as man and wife.

This court held, in Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 797, 167 P. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184, in line with the weight of authority, that if one of the parties to a marriage goes through the ceremony with an intention not to consummate the marriage by marital intercourse, and persists in such intention, an annulment will be granted upon the application of the other party on the ground of fraud. Anders v. Anders, 224 Mass. 438, 113 N. E. 203, L. R. A. 1916E, 1273. But the findings of the court in the instant case do not either expressly or by clear implication state that defendant went through the marriage ceremony with the intention never to consummate the relationship, and, in view of the facts and circumstances of the case, we are of the view that the evidence, as a matter of law, impels a finding that defendant did not go through the ceremony with such a fraudulent intention.

In support of the contention that said defendant married plaintiff with the design in some way to profit financially from the wealth of her father without consummating the marriage, counsel for plaintiff rely upon his conduct, as testified to by plaintiff, on the day of the marriage and on the following day, when plaintiff left for the East. Plaintiff testified that defendant did not ask her to go with him on the night of June 4th, or to postpone her return to New York. Defendant testified that he asked plaintiff to come with him on said night and to remain in California, but that plaintiff said she disliked San Francisco, and she and her stepmother urged the lateness of the hour and the fact that they had much packing to do as reasons why plaintiff should not go with him on the night of June 4th. The court below found against defendant on this point. Defendant further stated that he called the hotel on the telephone the next day and was informed that plaintiff was not in, whereupon he sent her a corsage of gardenias; that he asked at his place of employment to have the afternoon off, but, as the day was Saturday and the store short-handed, permission was refused him. Plaintiff denied having received the gardenias, and asserted that she and her stepmother were in the hotel throughout the day. Defendant further stated that, upon calling for plaintiff on June 3d, the night before their marriage, plaintiff herself brought up the subject of matrimony by asking him if he still felt about their getting married as he had on the previous night, and he replied that he did.

According to plaintiff, defendant first asked her to marry him on the third night they were together, and thereafter proposed to her every night until she accepted him on June 3d. Defendant admitted having proposed to plaintiff several times. Plaintiff testified that defendant gave as his reason for not going to New York with her his inability to immediately terminate his employment.

After plaintiff reached her home in New York on June 11th, she and defendant exchanged telegrams and letters, which will be briefly noticed here for the insight which they afford into the defendant's intentions in marrying plaintiff and her reasons for desiring an annulment of her marriage to him. The attitude of the parties toward each other, as indicated in said messages, furnishes an irrefutable answer to any claim that defendant married plaintiff with a preconceived intention not to consummate the marriage.

On the day of her arrival home, plaintiff sent two telegrams to defendant. In one she said: "Arrived cannot understand why you don't write love Adrienne." In the other she asked defendant to send "loads of letters and pictures," and said that it seemed an eternity since they had parted. Plaintiff's father also sent a telegram of congratulations to defendant on June 11th, and a second telegram on June 14th asking him when he could come to New York. Defendant testified to having called plaintiff on the telephone from San Francisco on the night of June 11th. Plaintiff denies such a telephone call. A letter written by defendant on June 11th appears in the record. Defendant testified to writing a letter to plaintiff prior to June 11th, but such a letter does not appear in the record. The letter of June 11th was written in an endearing tone. Defendant addressed plaintiff as "Dearest of all," signed himself, "Yours for life," and expressed appreciation of her father's congratulations. In a letter written on June 17th defendant expressed concern over plaintiff's not having written to him, and said he did not think it would be over six weeks before he would be on his way to plaintiff, and then they would "be parted never again." And on June 19th he telegraphed to plaintiff: "No mail since you left. Worried. Wire day letter tonight."

On June 17th plaintiff wrote her first letter to her husband since their marriage on June 4th and posted it for air mail delivery on June 18th. In it she says: "But getting down to brass tacks, old timer, when are you going to let us breathe a sigh of relief and hang up our 'Welcome Home' sign to the 'Prodigal Son'? * * * It is always hard for me to become serious, Jack, dear, haven't said one word that would make you know how lonesome or in love with you I am, but you do read between the lines don't you, old sweetheart, for that's what I've been meaning right along."

On June 19th, just two weeks after their marriage, she sent defendant a telegram in which she said: "After having had time to think matter over have concluded that I was too hasty in getting married. Will you send me your permission to have it annulled. Wire at once."

In response to a telegram from defendant in which he said that he did not know what it was about and would not give his consent, plaintiff sent another telegram and, on June 23d, wrote a letter to her husband in which she said:

"Jack, dear, please don't be a big bear; just say 'Adrienne go out and get all the annulments your little heart desires, and be happy,' while to yourself you can say, 'Well, Jack, my boy, consider yourself well rid of a typical New York flapper—fickle, irresponsible, and untamed,'"

"It's all true, Jack. After turning matters over in my mind, I've decided that I can't really settle down seriously and give up all the pretty things and luxuries and theatre parties and wanderings that I have indulged in so promiscuously. With Daddy, it was always merely to express a desire to go here, to wish to buy this, a desire to do that, with never a thought to money or anything. It is next to impossible for me to become serious or settled down. * * * No, Jack, I can't give up my freedom, my own way, and pretty clothes for anybody."

On June 25th, after she had expressed her desire to obtain an annulment, plaintiff sent defendant a small gift, inclosing a card as follows: "June 25th, To husband Jack. Here's a smoke with Addie's love."

Defendant's reply expressed a lack of ability to understand plaintiff's attitude, and suggested that she come to California, as he would never consent to an annulment in New York. In a telegram of June 28th plaintiff's father requested defendant to come to New York, offering to pay his expenses, if necessary, and on June 29th defendant replied that it would be impossible for him to leave San Francisco. On August 7th plaintiff's father wrote a letter to defendant in which he gave as his daughter's reasons for desiring an annulment the same reasons she had given defendant in her letter of June 23d. On November 9th defendant sent plaintiff birthday congratulations, and on December 16th he wrote asking her if she would approve of his coming to New York. He also testified that he sent her a remembrance for Christmas, which was returned to him unopened. Defendant gave no reason upon the trial for not going to New York other than that he thought it was the place of plaintiff and her father to come to him, rather than for him to go to them, in view of the attitude of plaintiff, and that he was short of funds and did not wish to go at his father-in-law's expense. He left San Francisco February 22, 1927, for Kansas City, Mo., where his father resided, and did not return until shortly before the trial.

It appears that prior to the trial of the action herein defendant had filed suit in New York against plaintiff's father to recover $100,000 as damages for alienation of plaintiff's affections. Plaintiff testified that defendant's attorney had made an offer to her and her father on behalf of defendant to withdraw opposition to an annulment suit upon payment of a sum of money. Defendant denied having authorized his attorney to make any such offer.

In urging a purpose on the part of defendant to realize a financial advantage from his marriage with plaintiff without consummating said marriage, plaintiff does not suggest the precise manner in which defendant intended to thus profit. That he married her with the preconceived intention of making it appear that her father had deprived him of her love and affection and thereafter recovering monetary damages in an alienation of affections suit against said father, or with the idea of so conducting himself that plaintiff would desire to file a suit for annulment, to which he would agree to make no opposition only upon payment of a sum of money, is to attribute a degree of knavery to defendant which does not find support in the record. The letters and telegrams noticed above possess a ring of sincerity. The messages of both are such as are written by young people who are, or imagine themselves to be, much in love. We cannot regard defendant's expressions of love for his bride as simulated and part of a cleverly conceived scheme to mulct her father of money. Said messages reveal a regard and affection for plaintiff utterly inconsistent with a marriage entered into by defendant with a design never to live with plaintiff as husband and wife.

[3] Said communications are also important in consideration of plaintiff's claim to have the marriage annulled on account of the alleged fraudulent representations made by defendant as to his financial standing.

Although plaintiff claims to have sent the telegram of June 19th, in which she stated her purpose to obtain an annulment, because she learned that defendant had falsely represented his financial position and ability to support her, she sent said telegram before she could possibly have learned of the alleged fraud practiced upon her through the only channel from which she claims to have acquired the information. She testified that after she wrote to defendant on June 17th she wrote to the distant relative in San Francisco at whose home she had met defendant, and that it was in a reply letter written by said relative that she first learned of defendant's deception. A reply to a letter written in New York on June 17th, or shortly thereafter, and addressed to San Francisco, could not have been received by mail on or before June 19th, at the time plaintiff sent her telegram, and it is quite unlikely that a reply would have been received on June 23d, the day on which plaintiff wrote to defendant, making plain her desire to obtain an annulment for the insufficient reasons stated by her. At least plaintiff made no reference thereto in the letter of June 23d, nor did her father, in the letter he subsequently wrote in regard to the matter of annulment, charge defendant with practicing a fraud upon his daughter. Plaintiff did not produce the letter written by said relative upon the trial. One of the attorneys for defendant, in an affidavit presented upon motion for a new trial, offered to prove by the testimony of said relative to whom plaintiff claims to have written that said relative had neither received a letter of inquiry from, nor had she written to, plaintiff concerning defendant. Plaintiff's explanation that, although she desired an annulment because of defendant's fraud, she withheld from him the true reason through a desire to be "polite" to him, appears inherently improbable. Likewise lacking in credibility is her explanation that her father failed to charge defendant with fraud in the letter he wrote in attempting to obtain defendant's agreement not to oppose an annulment because plaintiff had not informed her father of said fraud, for the reason that she did not wish him to know the truth. We are therefore of the view that the record, as a matter of law, will sustain no other conclusion than that plaintiff desired an annulment for the reasons stated by her and her father in their letters to defendant, which had nothing to do with any fraudulent representations made by defendant to her.

[4] Plaintiff testified that defendant represented to her that he owned a shoe store, was manager of the store in which he was then employed, and was able to support her in the manner in which she was accustomed to live, and that he told her he was 27 years of age and had seen service in the World War in France. In fact, he was only 22, which was the age he gave in his application for a marriage license, and was employed as a clerk and assistant manager in a shoe store, earning between $45 to $50 a week, and, although he had been in the army in 1919-20, he had never seen service in France. In her complaint, plaintiff makes no reference to fraudulent representations as to age and service in the World War as grounds for annulment. It is the general rule that fraudulent representations, to be relied on, must be pleaded. Defendant denied making the representations set forth in the complaint.

Plaintiff does not claim that defendant represented himself as owning the shoe store in San Francisco in which he was in fact an employee at the time of his marriage. In one instance she stated that he told her he had owned a shoe store, the implication following that he did not then own such a store. Plaintiff did not state that any representations as to the location, size, or other facts concerning said store were made, or explanation offered as to why, if he was the owner of a shoe store, he was not engaged in managing it, rather than in working on a salary basis for another. The alleged representation that he was able to support her in the manner in which she was accustomed to live is very indefinite. Defendant denied absolutely making the representations charged against him, but the court below found in plaintiff's favor on this issue. The indefinite character of the representations alleged to have been made, as well as the circumstance that neither plaintiff nor her father in their negotiations with defendant in regard to the annulment make any reference thereto, tends to strongly corroborate defendant's denial. The business and social standing of defendant could have been easily determined by plaintiff had she made the slightest investigation. Undue haste can only account for a failure to make reasonable inquiry. Plaintiff's statements in her letter of June 23d, probably written before she had received the information as to defendant's alleged misrepresentations, that she could not give up all the luxuries she had indulged in, nor her freedom, her own way, and pretty clothes for anybody, and that with her father she had merely to express a desire, with never a thought for money, furnish strong and convincing evidence that she was aware that defendant did not possess the means to support her in the manner in which she claims to have been living.

[5-7] But, even though said representations were in fact made, they fall short of constituting fraud sufficient to annul a marriage. By reason of the interest of the state and society in the preservation and integrity of the marriage relation, it has been declared that fraud which would afford grounds for rescinding an ordinary contract will not justify an annulment of marriage, and that the fraud necessary to avoid a marriage must be such as is deemed vital to the marriage relationship. Barnes v. Barnes, 110 Cal. 418, 42 P. 904; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 171 Cal. 770, 155 P. 95; Franke v. Franke, 3 Cal. Unrep. 656, 31 P. 571, 18 L. R. A. 375. In the application of this rule it has been held that misrepresentations as to social and financial position are insufficient. More recent cases show a proper tendency to depart from the rigidity of the early decisions. The more modern trend is indicated by such cases as Brown v. Scott, 140 Md. 258, 117 A. 114, 22 A. L. R. 810, where it was held that grossly false representations of an ex-convict and fugitive from justice as to his moral, social, and financial standing constituted ground for annulment at the suit of the young girl whom he had duped into marriage with him. Moral turpitude which seriously affects the character of the impositor would, of course, furnish sufficient grounds for annulment.

The circumstances of the instant case fall far short of presenting the aggravated situation of Brown v. Scott. No charge is made against defendant's morals other than that he made the false representations testified to by plaintiff. He testified that it was his custom to work for a time as a clerk in a shoe store and then to join a ship's orchestra, receiving his passage and board for his services playing the violin. No wide discrepancy appears in the standards of living of the parties. They were married in haste and with little thought of the responsibilities they were assuming.

Since we have held that upon the merits plaintiff is not entitled to an annulment, it is unnecessary to determine the claim of defendant that the court below was without jurisdiction of the action, although the marriage was solemnized in California, for the reason that neither plaintiff nor defendant was domiciled in, or a resident of, California at the time suit was commenced. It is the contention of defendant that in annulment proceedings, as in divorce actions, jurisdiction is dependent upon domicile at the time of commencement of the action. There are essential differences between the two proceedings in nature and effect. Since the validity of marriages is generally determined by the law of the state where the marriage took place, there are cogent reasons why annulment should be sought in the tribunals of that state. In Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 797, 167 P. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184, this court did not decide the precise point argued by defendant, but did hold that section 128, Civil Code, requiring a year's residence in the state and a three month's residence in the county, in divorce actions, was not applicable to annulment proceedings. See, also, McCormack v. McCormack, 175 Cal. 292, 165 P. 930. The citations of opposing counsel in the instant case indicate a divergence of authority on the question here raised. Since it is not essential to the decision of the instant case to decide this issue, and the question is one requiring a more thorough and painstaking research than we feel we would be justified in giving to it at this time, we pursue it no further.

[8] The evidence shows that the parties to this action voluntarily entered into the marriage state unadvisedly and lightly. Under such circumstances the law should not be required to give aid in disentangling a situation to the existence of which there is no legal objection. That a marriage should not be annulled upon the ground of fraud except in an extreme case, where the particular fraud goes to the very essence of the marriage relation, see 16 Cal. Jur. 937; Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 797, 167 P. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184; Richardson v. Richardson, 246 Mass. 353, 140 N. E. 73, 31 A. L. R. 146; Wells v. Talham, 180 Wis. 654, 194 N. W. 36,

KOSTER et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
et al.★ (S. F. 13043.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Railroads ⇨328(1,7)—Motorist held not relieved of duty of stopping, looking, and listening for approaching train by obstructions and noise at intersection.

Notwithstanding obstructions existed at railroad crossing, and that noise at intersection was so great as to overcome noise made by oncoming train, such circumstances would not relieve motorist struck by train of duty of stopping, looking, and listening.

2. Railroads ⇨328(3)—Motorist having insufficient view was required to alight from automobile and take advantage of views afforded.

If motorist, on stopping at place of safety near railroad track, did not have sufficient view of situation looking both ways, he was required to alight from his automobile, go forward a few steps, and take advantage of the views so afforded.

3. Railroads ⇨327(1)—Person approaching railroad track must take advantage of every reasonable opportunity to look and listen.

A person approaching a railroad track, which is itself a warning of danger, must take advantage of every reasonable opportunity to look and listen.

4. Railroads ⇨330(3)—Traveler may not depend on engineer's custom to give appropriate signals, even though such duties are enjoined by law.

Traveler about to cross railway track at place where engineer gives appropriate signals of approach of train may not depend on such custom, or even on a duty enjoined by law, to give such signals.

5. Death ⇨58(1)—Jury may infer ordinary care and diligence of decedent only in absence of direct proof of the fact.

Jury may infer ordinary care and diligence on part of decedent from his character and habits and natural instincts of self-preservation only in absence of direct proof of the fact.

6. Railroads ⇨328(1,7)—Motorist struck by train at intersection held contributorily negligent as matter of law, notwithstanding view was obstructed or that signals could not be heard.

Motorist whose car was struck by train at intersection held guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, notwithstanding that noise at intersection was so great as to prevent a person seated in an inclosed car, as was decedent, from hearing signals of a steam locomotive, since decedent was required in such event to stop his motor and open the door or windows of his car and listen, or, if view was obstructed, not to attempt to cross until he was assured it was safe to do so.

7. Railroads ☞330(2)—Ignorance of fact that watchman was not on duty at intersection would not excuse exercise of due care on part of deceased motorist in crossing track.

Ignorance of fact that no watchman was on duty between 11 p. m. and 7 a. m. at intersection where motorist was struck by train would not excuse exercise of due care on part of decedent in crossing the track.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by Sadie Koster and another against the Southern Pacific Company and another. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Rehearing denied; Langdon, J., dissenting.

Louis Oneal, Wm. F. James, and A. G. Shoup, all of San Jose, for appellants.

Rea & Caldwell and E. M. Rea, all of San Jose, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment entered by the superior court of the county of Santa Clara upon the verdict of a jury awarding the plaintiffs $50,000 as and on account of damages alleged to have been sustained by them by reason of the death of Frank E. Koster, caused by a steam locomotive drawing a passenger train of eight cars, consisting of three diners, two coaches, and three baggage cars, owned and operated by the Southern Pacific Company, negligently colliding with the automobile driven and operated by said Frank E. Koster at a point on said company's railroad track where the same crosses Keyes street, at right angles, in the city of San Jose. The road is operated as a commercial steam railroad. Judgment went against both defendants, Southern Pacific Company and its locomotive engineer in charge, Arthur R. Bullard. Sadie Koster is the widow, and June and Alice Beverly Koster are minor children of said marriage, the latter being a posthumous child. The deceased at the time of his death was 29 years of age, enjoying good health, and was engaged in the bakery business in the city of San Jose, which earned him $8,000 annually.

The collision occurred at about 4:29 a. m., June 18, 1926. Decedent died from injuries received in said collision some 30 or 40 minutes thereafter. His brother, John Koster, a resident of the city of Oakland, whom decedent was attempting to convey to the Market street station, where the former intended to take passage homeward on a Southern Pacific train departing from said station at 4:45 a. m., was also killed. Said Market street station is about 25 blocks distant from the Keyes street crossing, the place where the accident occurred.

The important question in this case is whether the decedent violated the rule of caution commonly known as the stop, look, and listen rule, which is approved by a long line of decisions of this court, as well as by numerous courts of the land, both state and federal, in the light of all the facts and circumstances of the case presented, and thereby barred his heirs of the right to recover damages on account of his death. Other questions of importance affecting the conduct of decedent and the parties defendant are also present, but they are either subsidiary or relative to the main question, first above stated. Whether the judgment may be sustained depends upon the conclusion which the law directs should be made upon a consideration of the facts which account for the injuries which were the proximate cause of Frank E. Koster's death. Some of the important facts are admitted, and the others are so self-evident as to place their existence beyond the realm of serious doubt.

The general course of appellant's main tracks through the section of the city of San Jose where they cross Keyes street is southerly and northerly, and the course of said street is easterly and westerly. The train in question was the regular passenger train moving southerly.

Decedent, Frank E. Koster, resided with his family on Seventh street, between Keyes and Bestor streets, approximately 3 city blocks from the place of collision. It was the rule of decedent to leave his residence each morning between 4 and 5 o'clock for his place of business, which was located on Second street. There is uncontradicted evidence in the record that he was seen to cross the railroad track at Keyes street at the hour of 4 and 5 o'clock a. m. upon a number of occasions, and from its location with reference to his home and business, from which he made daily trips in his Nash sedan, and the nearness of his residence to said Keyes street crossing, it must be assumed that he was quite familiar with said crossing and was aware that a passenger train, traveling southerly, crossed said street at about 4:22 o'clock a. m. each morning. The general course of appellant's main track through the section of the city of San Jose in which Keyes street crossing is situated is on a straight line extending in a northerly and southerly direction.

So far as natural obstacles are concerned, there is nothing to obstruct the view of a person standing at a safe distance from the railroad track at said crossing from seeing a train of cars approaching from the north at a distance of at least 2,000 feet. The morning was clear, and the atmospheric conditions for visibility were good. Although the sun rose at 4:48 a. m. on June 18, 1926, and it was practically daylight at 4:29 a. m., it was nevertheless the rule of the company defendant not to extinguish the headlight on the engine until the train arrived at a station some distance south of said crossing. Said company's roadbed is built upon its private right of way on either side of said crossing, and no limitation is fixed by law as to the rate of speed said company's trains may travel, except when crossing streets within the limits of the city of San Jose. By an ordinance of said city it is provided that it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to operate a railroad train across the intersection of any streets within the city limits of said city at a greater speed than 12 miles per hour, provided said ordinance shall not apply at the intersection of any streets where the person, firm, or corporation operating or running trains or cars shall "regularly maintain flagmen, gates or other mechanical devices for the protection of the public." The company maintained a flagman at said intersection from 7 o'clock a. m. until 11 o'clock p. m. of each day. A notice to that effect was displayed upon the flag station building, which occupied a small space upon the company's right of way near the westerly line of entry upon said company's tracks. The usual standard cross-arm signal gave notice to the traveling public of a railroad crossing at a little distance beyond. The locus quo is near the city limits of said city of San Jose. No high buildings are constructed at said intersection, nor along the railroad company's right of way, in the section of the city we are here considering. By reason of the four corners of said intersection being occupied by factories or industrial plants, the traffic is reasonably extensive. Two of said plants at least, a brick manufacturing plant and the American Can Company, operate at night during the summer season, and were operating at the time the accident in question occurred. It is also in evidence that the boilers of the Ransome-Crummey Paving Company emitted steam, which added to the noise produced by the other two. Indeed, it is the claim of respondents that the noise at said intersection is always so great in the months of June, July, August, and September as to prevent a person in a closed car from hearing an approaching train, or even its bell or whistle. Keyes street is 60 feet in width, and the railroad right of way is approximately the same width at said point of intersection. The grade of the railroad approaching the intersection is slightly ascending.

The northerly view of one proceeding westerly on Keyes street, as was decedent, is continuously obstructed by the American Can Company's building and a high board fence for the full distance of the block extending to the line of said railroad company's right of way. The watchman's shanty, so called, is a small building 8 feet high and $6\frac{1}{4} \times 6\frac{1}{4}$ feet. Said shanty is about 1 foot westerly from said board fence, and sits back 10 feet from the northerly property line of Keyes street. The small space between the shanty and fence was closed with boards. Accepting the contention of respondents, a continuous wall obstructs a northerly view of the main railroad track practically the whole distance of the block, abutting on Keyes street and extending to the westerly line of the shanty. The shanty has a glass door facing southerly, which is on a line with a glass window looking northerly. While a person may see through said glass door and window, a very limited opportunity was afforded thereby for observing an approaching train at any point. At said intersection three tracks cross said Keyes street, to wit, the main or central track, and two side tracks, one on either side of the main track. All tracks are standard gauge, 4 feet $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches between rails. The westerly side track does not materially enter into the case. From the easterly side track, looking northerly after it passes the northerly property line of Keyes street, a spur track bears easterly. It is the claim of respondents that a box car was spotted at a point on the side track 10 feet north of the flagman's station in such a position with relation to the situation already described as to prolong the line of obstruction to the extent that no room was left for a person to sit in a car at a safe distance from the main track and make observation as to whether a train from the north was approaching on the main line. The overhang of a box car is $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet. The distance from the flagman's shanty to the side track is 8 feet $3\frac{3}{4}$ inches. Said track is 4 feet $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches in width. The distance from the westerly rail of the side track to the first rail of the main track is 8 feet 6 inches. Eliminating the box car from the side track, a traveler would have an open space of approximately 21 feet 6 inches in which to make observation for an approaching train. That a single box car, 36 feet 10 inches in length and 9 feet 7 inches in width, should have obstructed the view of an approaching train, consisting of a steam locomotive, three diners, two passenger coaches, and three baggage cars, throughout the entire open space of 21 feet 6 inches, seems improbable.

A serious question is presented as to whether the box car was in the position in which respondents would place it. If its position be changed from said position but a few feet either way, the avenue of vision beyond the car is materially widened or narrowed. The claim as to its position being near the flagman's station may be seriously questioned, there being testimony from a number of apparently disinterested witnesses, whose attention was directed to the matter, that the box car was from 80 to more than 100 feet north of Keyes street. One of these witnesses, F. W. Reiff, the night watchman of the Pacific Coast Cannery plant, situated on the southwesterly corner of the intersection of said Keyes street and the railroad crossing, testified that he made observation of the situation before and shortly after the collision, and the tracks were clear, except a box car stood on the spur track near the gate at the point where said track enters the American Can Company's property. This was a considerable distance north of the point where Police Officers Schwandt and Farley, who, in patrolling their beats, had occasion to pass over the tracks at 2:30 on the morning of the accident, placed the box car. Both police officers testified that a box car was spotted at a point beginning about 10 feet north of the flagman's shanty. Mr. Farley, who was the driver of the machine, stated on direct examination that no view of the track northerly was obtainable until the front wheels of the automobile had passed the east rail of the main track. On cross-examination he stated that, with the front wheels on the west rail of the side track from the position the box car was placed, as he saw the situation, he would say that one could have seen up the main track for half the distance to the next crossing north, approximately 600 feet. This would indicate that the box car was some considerable distance north of the flagman's shanty.

James B. Cushing, a street sweeper employed by the city of San Jose, crossed the intersection at 3:30 on the morning in question. He crossed the track going westerly very slowly operating the street-sweeping machine, and, when upon the side track, he was of the opinion that he was able to see 2,000 feet up the main track. His view before reaching the main track was unobstructed. He saw lights at a northerly street intersection. The car, which is asserted to have been near the flagman's station, was placed much further up the siding by the witness. Otherwise the tracks were clear.

Three witnesses, besides the members of the train crew, testified to hearing the whistle blown before the crossing was reached. Engineer Bullard testified that the bell was started ringing when the train pulled out of the main station at San Jose and was stopped by him after the engine had toppled to its side upon being derailed. The bell operated automatically by air pressure or power. The fireman set the bell in motion at the main San Jose station, and it rang continuously through the suburbs of San Jose until it was turned off by the engineer, as above noted. Two whistle blasts, two long and two short, were given before crossing Martha station, the station immediately north of the crossing at Keyes street. As to the blowing of the whistle at the several crossings, the engineer and fireman David were corroborated by the positive testimony of the train conductor, Conrad, brakeman Dabbs and Bell, and dining car chef McEllant of the train crew. These witnesses, being inside the train, did not notice that the bell was ringing, although one or two testified that it was set in motion at the main station. R. S. Risdon, foreman of the tin plate department of the American Can Company, testified that he was expecting a shipment of tin plate, and was listening for the arrival of the freight train conveying the shipment. He heard the blasts of the passenger engine, which he located at the crossing first above Keyes street. Very soon thereafter he heard a crash or unusual noise, and went to the Keyes street intersection. He testified that there was no car on the siding near the flagman's station, but there was a single car some distance up the track near the gate that leads into the American Can Company's property, as described by other witnesses. Frederick W. Reiff, the watchman heretofore mentioned, testified that he was upon the platform of the Pacific Coast Cannery Company at said crossing in the discharge of his duties and he saw the headlight of the engine when the train in question was at Reed street crossing, some 3,000 feet up the track, and distinctly heard the blasts of the whistle at that distance. John Otto, the engineer for the Vernon-Clay plant, resided on Martha street near the main track of the defendant company's railway. Martha street crosses the track approximately 1,300 feet north of Keyes street. Otto testified that he was awakened on the morning of the accident by whistle blasts before the train reached Martha street, and heard the train afterwards pass. He did not learn of the accident until about 6 o'clock that morning. The box car at that time was about half way between Martha and Keyes streets.

We have made references to the testimony of the several witnesses offered by defendant as to whether or not the bell was rung and whistle blown, for the reason that said testimony is affirmative or positive in character as to the actual occurrence of an event in question in contrast with the negative testimony of persons whose attention was not by reason of some special circumstance drawn to a commonplace event associated with the management of trains.

[1, 2] In an effort to demonstrate that a view of an approaching train was completely shut off by intervening obstacles to a person occupying the front seat of an automobile at any safe distance from the east rail of the main track, respondents had reckoned with all possible elements that would tend to sustain their conclusion, such as widths of tracks, distances separating tracks, dimensions and overhang of box cars, and the position of physical objects and their relation to each other. The physical facts speak for themselves, and there is very small doubt that, had decedent stopped, looked, and listened, as the law required him to do, he would have been warned at a safe distance from the main track of the approach of said train and the hazard he would assume in attempting to cross the railroad crossing ahead of the train. The obstruction complained against consisted of a box car approximately 30 feet in length by 6 feet in width at a point 10 feet northerly from a flagman's station house 8 feet high and 6 feet by 6 feet square. The train was moving up a slight grade under power, and there were no other intervening objects except those in dispute to interfere with the usual warnings that a fuel-burning, steam-propelled train moving rapidly over its rails on a clear morning ordinarily gives of its approach. Assuming that the obstructions existed as claimed by respondents, and that the noise at the intersection was so great as to overcome the noise made by the oncoming train, these circumstances would not relieve him of the duty of stopping, looking, and listening, which, from the evidence, he undoubtedly failed to do. If upon stopping at a place of safety near the railroad track he did not have a sufficient view of the situation looking both ways, it has been held by this court and other courts that the rule of caution required that he should alight from his automobile, go forward a few steps, and take advantage of the view that would thus be afforded. Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675; Thompson v. Southern Pacific Co., 31 Cal. App. 567, 161 P. 21; Baltimore & Ohio Railway Co. v. Goodman, 275 U. S. 66, 48 S. Ct. 24, 72 L. Ed. 167, 56 A. L. R. 645.

The rule prescribing the quantum of caution that should be observed by persons crossing railroad tracks has been many times stated by this court without material deviation from the standard laid down in the case last above cited, written by Mr. Justice Holmes of the United States Supreme Court. The principle of law which governs that case is, in some respects, peculiarly applicable to the instant case. It is there said:

"Goodman was driving an automobile truck in an easterly direction and was killed by a train running southwesterly across the road at a rate of not less than 60 miles an hour. The line was straight but it is said by the respondent that Goodman 'had no practical view' beyond a section house 243 feet north of the crossing until he was about 20 feet from the first rail, or, as the respondent argues, 12 feet from danger, and that then the engine was still obscured by the section house. He had been driving at the rate of 10 or 12 miles an hour but had cut down his rates to 5 or 6 miles at about 40 feet from the crossing. It is thought that there was an emergency in which, so far as appears, Goodman did all that he could.

"We do not go into further details as to Goodman's precise situation, beyond mentioning that it was daylight and that he was familiar with the crossing, for it appears to us plain that nothing is suggested by the evidence to relieve Goodman from responsibility for his own death. When a man goes upon a railroad track he knows that he goes to a place where he will be killed if a train comes upon him before he is clear of the track. He knows that he must stop for the train, not the train stop for him. In such circumstances it seems to us that if a driver cannot be sure otherwise whether a train is dangerously near he must stop and get out of his vehicle, although obviously he will not often be required to do more than to stop and look. It seems to us that if he relies upon not hearing the train or any signal and takes no further precaution he does so at his own risk. If at the last moment Goodman found himself in an emergency it was his own fault that he did not reduce his speed earlier or come to a stop. It is true as said in Flannelly v. Delaware & H. Co., 225 U. S. 597, 603, 32 S. Ct. 783, 56 L. Ed. 1221, 1222, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154, that the question of due care very generally is left to the jury. But we are dealing with a standard of conduct, and when the standard is clear it should be laid down once for all by the courts. See Southern P. Co. v. Berkshire, 254 U. S. 415, 417, 419, 41 S. Ct. 162, 65 L. Ed. 335, 337, 338."

The rule which was established in this state a number of years ago, and which has been uniformly followed to and including the most recent decisions of this court and the District Court of Appeal, is clearly stated in the familiar case of Griffin v. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842. We quote freely from that case, for the reason that it distinguishes the cases usually cited, many of which respondents in the instant case rely upon, as holding that the question of negligence in cases of this class is practically in every case a question for the jury. A reasonable regard for time and space would not justify us in reproducing the review therein made of Cooper v. Los Angeles Terminal Ry. Co., 137 Cal. 229, 70 P. 11; Bilton v. Southern Pacific Co., 148 Cal. 445, 83 P. 440; Antonian v. Southern Pacific Co., 9 Cal. App. 718, 100 P. 877; Eaton v. Southern Pacific Co., 22 Cal. App. 461, 134 P. 801; Martin v. Southern Pacific Co., 150 Cal. 124, 88 P. 701, and others. To this list might be added the more recent cases, Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 53 Cal. App. 194, 190 P. 1059, Gregg v. Western Pacific R. R., 193 Cal. 212, 223 P. 553, and other cases decided since Griffin v. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Co., supra. In all cases in which judgments have been upheld, either the injured party stopped, looked, and listened, or took every opportunity to learn of the approach of the train that a cautious person should have taken in the circumstances of the situation. In practically all of said cases the stop, look, and listen rule is expressly recognized. In restating the general rule in the Griffin Case it is said:

[3, 4] "A person approaching a railway track, which is itself a warning of danger, must take advantage of every reasonable opportunity to look and listen. Holmes v. South Pacific Coast Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 167, 31 P. 834; Green v. Los Angeles, etc., R. R. Co., 143 Cal. 37, 76 P. 719, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68; Hutson v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 704, 89 P. 1093. A traveler who is about to cross a railway track at a place where ordinarily the engineer gives appropriate signals of the approach of the train may not depend upon such custom, or even upon a duty enjoined by law, to give such signals. 'He has no right not to look or listen because he has heard no such signals.' Erie Ry. Co. v. Kane, 55 C. C. A. 129, 118 F. 234, cited in Hutson v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 704 [89 P. 1093]. The same doctrine is announced in Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 232, 53 P. 651, a case in which the negligence of the railroad company's servants in omitting the usual signals was admitted, and in Koch v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 680, 84 P. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521, 113 Am. St. Rep. 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 795, one in which the negligence of the defendant in leaving open the safety gates at a crossing was not held to excuse plaintiff's failure to take any precautions in his attempt to cross the track. See, also, Heitman v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 10 Cal. App. 398, 102 P. 15; Wilkinson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 35 Utah, 110, 99 P. 466; Bates v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 38 Utah, 569, 114 P. 527."

The standard of conduct applicable to all persons upon approaching steam railroad crossings, as laid down in Larrabee v. Western Pacific Railway Co., 173 Cal. 743, 161 P. 750, 752, is applicable to the instant case, in that it disposes of a number of points pressed by respondents. It is there said:

"Nor is it true, as respondent argues, that the deceased's conduct, otherwise clearly negligent is relieved from this reproach by virtue of his right to presume that the defendant would not run its train at an excessive rate of speed in approaching this crossing. Nor does the added circumstance that this was a special train in the slightest change the deceased's legal responsibilities. Railroads are entitled to operate special trains and to operate them at high rates of speed. Their regular trains cannot be and no one expects them to be always on schedule. With all this the deceased was, of course, familiar. The statements in Strong v. Sacramento & Placerville R. R. Co., 61 Cal. 326, and in Whalen v. Arcata & Mad River R. Co., 92 Cal. 669, 28 P. 833, to the effect that the deceased had the right to rely upon the 'performance by those on the locomotive of every act imposed by law upon them when approaching a crossing,' cannot be considered to be the law of this state as affecting the rights and duties of one about to venture to make a railroad crossing. Such a one is not entitled to rely upon such a performance of duty so as to relieve him from the necessity of looking if he does not hear, and of stopping if he cannot see. Suffice it upon this to cite the later case of Koch v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 677, 680 (113 Am. St. Rep. 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 795, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 521, 84 P. 176); Griffin v. San Pedro, L. A. & Salt Lake R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772 (L. R. A. 1916A, 842, 151 P. 282)."

It is conceded by appellants that the defendant company was guilty of negligence in running its train across said crossing at a greater rate of speed than 12 miles per hour, as limited by city ordinance. On the other hand, it is claimed by appellants that decedent was guilty of negligence in attempting to drive across said crossing at a rate of speed in excess of the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517), which provides that the speed of motorists at railroad crossings shall not exceed 15 miles per hour.

The only surviving eyewitness to the accident was the fireman, John H. David, who was occupying a position on the left-hand side of the cab. The testimony of the train crew was that the train was traveling at a speed of 20 or 25 miles per hour. Respondents' contention is that the train, being seven minutes late, and the speed limit commencing at Valbrick station and onward, calling for a schedule of 50 miles per hour, the probabilities that this train was traveling at a much faster rate of speed than testified to by the train crew was strong. It is also argued that the distance the train ran before it was brought to a stop strongly supports their claim that the train was moving at the rate of 60 miles per hour at the time the collision occurred.

Fireman David testified that, when the pilot of the engine was within 10 feet of the north property line of Keyes street, decedent's automobile suddenly appeared coming from the east. The engine bell was automatically working. When he first saw the decedent, he was back of the flagman's shanty. It was his judgment that the engine was nearer to the point where the automobile and engine struck than was the automobile, and from this circumstance he estimated the speed of the automobile at 30 or 40 miles per hour. The whole affair seemed like a flash. Upon first sight of decedent, he called to the engineer to hold the train. The automobile became wedged in beneath the pilot, and was carried, an entangled mass, the entire distance the engine and train traveled after the impact, which was 582 feet. The engine and first car became derailed at a distance of 358 feet, and both traveled on the ties and ground for a distance of 224 feet, when the engine toppled partially to its side. The brakes and mechanism of the engine and train were in good condition, but the brakes failed to operate on the engine and first car after they became derailed.

A physician in the employ of the defendant company who called to attend the decedent at the hospital soon after the accident testified that the decedent, in response to an inquiry as to his name, replied, "It doesn't make any difference, it was all my fault; just give me something to put me out of my misery." Assuming that he made the statement and was conscious as to its effect, it was but a conclusion, and we would not be bound by it, if the facts and circumstances showed that he was not guilty of contributory negligence.

[5] The respondent relies largely upon an indulgence of the presumption that the jury was at liberty to infer ordinary care and diligence on the part of the decedent from all of the circumstances of the case—his character and habits and the natural instincts of self-preservation—to hold the verdict. This can only be done in the absence of direct proof of the fact. The circumstances of the case alone are sufficient to rebut the presumption invoked. In Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651, as to this issue it was said:

"But the cases arising from injuries suffered at railroad crossings have been so numerous, and upon certain points there has been such absolute accord, that what will constitute ordinary care in such a case had been precisely defined; and, if any element is wanting, the courts will hold, as matter of law, that the plaintiff has been guilty of negligence. And, when injury results which might have been avoided by the use of proper care, the plaintiff cannot recover, although the defendant has also been guilty of negligence. In this special case the amount of care as well as the nature of it has been settled.

"The railroad track of a steam railway must itself be regarded as a sign of danger, and one intending to cross must avail himself of every opportunity to look and to listen for approaching trains. What he must do in such a case will depend upon circumstances. If the view of the track is obstructed, he should take greater pains to listen. If, taking these precautions, he would have seen or heard the approaching train, the very fact of injury will raise a presumption that he did not take the required precautions."

Again, in the case of Pepper v. Southern Pacific Co., 105 Cal. 389, 38 P. 974, 976, it was said:

"If he could not see an approaching train because his vision was obstructed, ordinary care for his own safety required him to stop in order that his hearing should not also be obstructed, and, in any event, to make his approach so slowly as to give him complete control," enabling "him to stop instantly if occasion required."

[6] If, as contended by respondents, the noise was so great at said crossing as to prevent a person seated in an inclosed car, as decedent was, from hearing the bell or whistle of a steam locomotive, it was negligence on the part of decedent, who had full knowledge of existing conditions, not to have stopped his motor and opened the door or windows of his car and listened, and if then, granting, for the sake of the illustration, his view was obstructed, he should not have, as a prudent person, attempted to cross unless he was well assured that it was safe to do so. As the court properly instructed the jury, it was incumbent upon him to use the care and caution commensurate with the apparent danger surrounding him when he approached a railroad crossing. If the unfortunate man had observed the rule of conduct which the law prescribed, he would not, in all human probability, have met an untimely death. There can be no question that he did not exercise the care and caution required of him by the law of this state, and which was correctly stated in the following instruction:

"When such a one goes upon a railroad track, he knows he goes to a place where he may be killed, if the train comes upon him before he is clear of the track. He knows that he must stop for the train and not the train stop for him. In such circumstances, if a driver cannot be reasonably sure otherwise whether a train is dangerously near, he must stop, and get out of his automobile, and go forward on foot, to ascertain if a train is approaching."

[7] Had he done so, there can be no doubt that he could have observed the approaching train for a long way up the open track. The decedent was accustomed to cross the intersection in question, and undoubtedly was familiar with the fact that no watchman was on duty between 11 o'clock p. m. and 7 a. m. Ignorance of such fact, however, would not excuse the exercise of due care on his part in crossing the track. Gregg v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 193 Cal. 212, 223 P. 553, presents a case widely different from the instant case on the facts.

From what we have said, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the other instructions or the other points made by appellants. We are satisfied that the failure of decedent to observe the standard of care plainly laid down in numerous decisions of this court and other courts of the land bars the right of respondents to recover in the circumstances of the collision.

ENGELBERG v. SEBASTIANI.

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

I. Interest $\Rightarrow$ 19(2)—Where amount sued for on breach of contract was capable of being made certain plaintiff was entitled to interest as matter of law (Civ. Code $\S$ 3287).

In action for breach of contract to purchase grapes, where defendant accepted only part of property purchased, and plaintiff, suing for entire contract price, prayed for interest, but court gave no instruction in regard thereto, plaintiff was entitled to interest as matter of law by virtue of Civ. Code, $\S$ 3287, where amount of recovery was capable of being made certain by calculation.

2. Trial $\Rightarrow$ 340(5)—Interest due as matter of law may be added to verdict by court (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 626, 664):

Where plaintiff was entitled to interest in amount allowed by court as matter of law on pleadings and proof, there was no issue of fact to be submitted to jury, and court's action in adding interest to amount of verdict was not improper under Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 626, 664.

Action by Louis Engelberg against Sam Sebastiani. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 273 P. 161.

Barrett & McConnell, of Santa Rosa, and Samuel M. Samter, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. On hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2 (273 P. 161). Defendant, Sam Sebastiani, appealed from a judgment entered against him by the trial court in favor of plaintiff, Louis Engelberg, for the sum of $8,122.75. The jury brought in its verdict for the sum of $7,003.39, and the court, upon motion of plaintiff, directed the clerk of said court to add to the amount of the verdict interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the respective dates the several claims comprising the verdict became due to the date of the entry of judgment, and to enter judgment for the amount of said verdict plus interest thus computed. In accordance with the court's direction, the clerk entered judgment for $8,122.75, which included interest. The trial court had given no instruction to the jury regarding the plaintiff's right to interest upon the demands in suit. The defendant contends that said court exceeded its power in directing an allowance of interest to plaintiff.

The action is upon a contract whereby plaintiff agreed to sell, and defendant to buy, the entire crop of grapes growing upon plaintiff's ranch in Sonoma county at the price of $76 a ton. In the first count of the complaint plaintiff sued to recover $3,065.70; the balance of the purchase price remaining unpaid for 85 tons and 150 pounds of grapes actually delivered to, and received by, defendant. In counts 2 and 3 plaintiff sought to recover at the contract rate of $76 a ton for two lots of grapes tendered to defendant, and which defendant refused to accept. Plaintiff alleged that he had sold said lots of grapes on defendant's account, and from the sale of the first lot which defendant refused to accept he had realized $271.55, which he had paid to defendant. As to the second lot, plaintiff alleged that the expenses of sale exceeded the proceeds by $26.05, and this sum he sought to recover, in addition to the price of the grapes computed at $76 a ton.

The jury verdict of $7,003.39 for plaintiff was for the full amount prayed for, but made no allowance of interest, in regard to which the court had given no instruction. In the prayer of his complaint plaintiff asked for interest.

[1] Upon the pleadings and proof, plaintiff was entitled to interest by virtue of the provisions of section 3287, Civ. Code, from the dates his right to receive the several sums sued for became vested in him. There is no merit in defendant's claim that plaintiff was not entitled to interest as a matter of law, for the reason that the recovery sought was not for sums certain or capable of being made certain by calculation. The price of the grapes was fixed by the contract, and the amount that plaintiff should recover was capable of being made certain by calculation. Ryland v. Heney, 130 Cal. 426, 62 P. 616; Brazil v. Azevedo, 32 Cal. App. 364, 162 P. 1049. The amount which plaintiff sought to recover on account of expenses incurred by him in selling on behalf of defendant the grapes involved in count 3 was a sum certain. The contention of defendant that the proof as a matter of law does not show that there was due plaintiff as interest the amount directed to be added to the verdict by the court, for the reason that there exists uncertainty as to the dates when the plaintiff's right to recover the several sums sued for became vested, from which dates interest is to be computed by the terms of section 3287, Civ. Code, is also lacking in merit.

[2] Since plaintiff was entitled to interest in the amount allowed by the trial court as a matter of law, neither section 664 nor section 626, Code of Civil Procedure, renders improper the action of the court in adding interest to the amount of the verdict. Section 664, Code Civ. Proc. provides: "When trial by jury has been had, judgment must be entered by the clerk, in conformity to the verdict. * * *

Section 626 is as follows: "When a verdict is found for plaintiff in an action for the recovery of money * * * the jury must also find the amount of the recovery." Plaintiff being entitled to interest in the amount allowed by the court as a matter of law upon the pleadings and proof, there was no issue of fact as to interest to be submitted to the jury. Although it is the right of the parties litigant in an action where a trial by jury is had as a matter of right to have every triable issue of fact submitted to the jury, in the instant case, had the court instructed the jury as to the matter of interest, plaintiff was entitled as a matter of law to an instruction directing the jury that if they should find for plaintiff to allow interest upon the demands in suit. Since the jury would be without right to disregard the court's direction, which would leave them no discretion in the matter, it can make no substantial difference to defendant whether interest is added to the judgment by the verdict of the jury rendered pursuant to the direction of the court, or by the court instructing the clerk to enter judgment for the amount of the verdict plus interest. In adopting the latter procedure, the court is usurping no function of the jury, for there is no issue of fact involved as to said interest.

In McAfee v. Dix, 101 App. Div. 69, 91 N. Y. S. 464, where the verdict did not include interest to which plaintiff was entitled as a matter of law, the court said:

"Interest was incident to the award of the contract price. * * * The court rightly declared (and, indeed, there was no exception) that interest was the plaintiff's due in event of such a verdict. The jury gave that verdict, and yet for some reason ignored the law as to a matter where it had neither discretion nor—the rate and period being certain—latitude for calculation. It seems absurd that the court is powerless to correct the judgment so as to award that sum which legally belongs to him who has gained the verdict, but that it must recognize this erroneous omission or commission of the jury by depriving the successful suitor either of the benefit of the trial, or by mulcting him of a part of his rightful judgment."

In support of the rule here announced, see 27 R. C. L. 888; Minot v. Boston, 201 Mass. 10, 86 N. E. 783, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 311; 10 Ann. Cas. 753; Lowenstein v. Lombard, 2

App. Div. 610, 38 N. Y. S. 33; St. Louis, etc., Railway Co. v. Oliver, 17 Okl. 589, 87 P. 423, 10 Ann. Cas. 748. In Alpers v. Schammel, 75 Cal. 595, 17 P. 708, relied upon by defendant, the court expressly states that the allowance of interest was not sustained by the record. In so far as said case purports to lay down a rule contrary to the decision herein, it is not the law. Sections 664 and 626, Code of Civil Procedure, are designed to assure to litigants the right to have the determination of the jury on issues of fact.

The jury, in bringing in a verdict where the court grants a motion for a directed verdict, acts in a ministerial capacity. Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 177 P. 283; Gaskill v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 30 Cal. App. 593, 159 P. 200; 24 Cal. Jur. p. 918. It has been held, therefore, that a judgment entered by the court upon the basis of a special finding made by it where the state of the evidence is such that only one judgment can lawfully be rendered is to be given the same effect as a judgment entered upon a directed verdict. Without regard to the procedure followed, the determination is, in law, the act of the court. Umsted v. Scofield Engineering Const. Co., 203 Cal. 224, 263 P. 799. The same reasoning may be applied to sustain the judgment for interest in the instant case.

By the appeal taken by defendant, a number of objections were made to the judgment besides the question of the right of the court to incorporate in the judgment interest upon the sums found to be due. Those questions were sufficiently considered and correctly determined against defendant's contentions by the District Court of Appeal. The plaintiff petitioned this court for a hearing, urging as erroneous that portion of the decision which held that the trial court was without power to incorporate an allowance of interest in the judgment. Defendant did not petition for a hearing. Making no objection upon petition for a hearing to that portion of the decision which was against him, it must be assumed that he was convinced of its legal soundness, and did not feel justified in further urging said other points. Upon examination of said other points, we find no such merit therein as would require or justify a reversal.

Judgment affirmed.

WITTY v. CLINCH et al. (L. A. 10021.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 15, 1929.

1. Principal and agent ⇨180—Agent's knowledge is not imputed to principal, where agent in particular transaction is acting adversely to principal's interest.

Rule imputing agent's knowledge to principal is inapplicable, where facts are such that presumption of communication does not exist as where agent in particular transaction in question is acting adversely to principal's interest.

2. Principal and agent ⇨180—Knowledge possessed by agent adversely interested that property mortgaged was conveyed on condition could not be imputed to assignee of mortgage.

Where assignee of note and mortgage negotiated for assignment through agent who was interested with mortgagee in plot to defraud mortgagor's grantor out of property, assignee was not bound by knowledge of agent that property was conveyed on condition that grantee erect dwelling house on lot.

3. Bills and notes ⇨339—Purchaser of negotiable paper before maturity is not bound to inquire regarding consideration and circumstances leading up to execution.

Purchaser of negotiable paper before maturity is not required to make inquiry of makers as to consideration and circumstances leading up to its execution.

4. Bills and notes ⇨525—Inadequacy of price paid for negotiable paper before maturity is not sufficient of itself to raise inference that instrument was tainted.

Inadequacy of price paid for negotiable paper before maturity is not of itself sufficient to raise inference or suspicion that purchaser was buying a tainted instrument.

5. Bills and notes ⇨509—Purchase of note before maturity for grossly inadequate price with knowledge on inquiry of maker's solvency without inquiry as to consideration is circumstances to be considered in determining good faith.

Purchase of note before maturity for grossly inadequate price with knowledge on inquiry previously made of maker's solvency, but without inquiry as to consideration, is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether purchase was made in good faith, and is of itself sufficient to arouse suspicion of prudent person and put him on inquiry.

6. Bills and notes ⇨525—Mortgages ⇨270—Evidence supported finding that assignee of note and mortgage was innocent purchaser for value.

Evidence held to support finding that assignee of note and mortgage was an innocent purchaser for value.

7. Bills and notes ⇨167—Fact that note is secured by mortgage or trust deed does not render it nonnegotiable (Civ. Code, § 3265).

Under Civ. Code, § 3265, promissory note is not rendered nonnegotiable by fact that payment is secured by mortgage or trust deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action to foreclose a mortgage by E. B. Witty against Colin N. Clinch and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Anna M. Parsons and another appeal. Affirmed.

Page, Nolan, Rohe & Freston and Rohe & Freston, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Adair & Adair, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. The defendant Anna M. Parsons was on the 21st day of April, 1924, the owner of lot 61 of Hollywood Heights Tract in the county of Los Angeles. On or about said date she conveyed said lot to defendant Nan K. Clinch, wife of defendant Colin N. Clinch. It was agreed by said parties at the time of said conveyance that the purchase price of said lot was to be the sum of $3,000, and that in payment thereof Colin N. Clinch and wife should execute to Anna M. Parsons four promissory notes for $750 each, secured by a trust deed to said lot. It was further agreed that Clinch and wife should execute their note for $5,000, secured by a mortgage upon said lot, and that said mortgage should take precedence over said trust deed when filed for record in the office of the county recorder of said county. In consideration of the execution and delivery to the Clinches of said deed with the right to mortgage said lot to secure said note of $5,000, said Colin N. Clinch agreed to erect upon said lot a dwelling house to cost not less than $5,000. In pursuance of said agreement, Colin N. Clinch and wife executed their promissory note for $5,000 in favor of W. A. Prole, together with a mortgage on said lot to secure the same. They also executed four promissory notes for $750 each in favor of Anna M. Parsons, together with a trust deed of said lot to secure said notes, and said trust deed was made subject to said $5,000 mortgage of W. A. Prole. Clinch failed to comply with his contract to construct a dwelling house on said lot. He did not build or commence the building of any house thereon. Prole, through the efforts of Clinch, sold said note of $5,000 secured by said mortgage to the plaintiff herein for $1,500, which sum was actually paid by plaintiff for said note and mortgage. Default was made in the payment of said note, and this action was instituted to foreclose said mortgage. Anna M. Parsons and the Hellman Trust & Savings Bank, the trustee named in said trust deed, appeared in said action and filed an answer to plaintiff's complaint, in which they set up the agreement under which said mortgage was executed and delivered, and the violation of said agreement by Clinch, and further alleged that plaintiff paid no consideration for the said note and mortgage, and that she took said note and mortgage with full knowledge of the terms of the agreement under which it was given. The trial court found that plaintiff paid to said W. A. Prole the sum of $1,500 for said note and mortgage, and that at the time of the purchase by her of said note and mortgage she had no knowledge of any of the transactions between Clinch and wife on the one hand and Anna M. Parsons and the Hellman bank on the other, and that she was an innocent purchaser before maturity of said note and mortgage, and for a valuable consideration, to wit, for said sum of $1,500. It accordingly rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,500, besides interest, attorney's fees, and costs. From this judgment Anna M. Parsons and the Hellman bank, now known as the Merchants National Trust & Savings Bank, have appealed.

[1, 2] The principal point made by the appellants on their appeal is that the respondent was not an innocent purchaser of said note and mortgage without notice, and therefore the note and mortgage purchased by her was subject to the defense that the consideration therefor totally failed. In support of this contention, the appellants rely in part upon the finding of the court that Colin N. Clinch acted as the agent both of the respondent and of W. A. Prole in the transaction in which the plaintiff purchased said note and mortgage from said Prole. The evidence clearly shows that the respondent had no actual knowledge of the true consideration of said note and mortgage. If Clinch was acting as her agent in said transaction, he never revealed to her the fact that the consideration for said note and mortgage was that he would construct upon said lot a dwelling house. Nor did he give respondent any information as to the true consideration of said note and mortgage at the time he was negotiating with her for the sale of said note and mortgage. Counsel for respondent challenges the correctness of said finding, and contends that there is no evidence to support the same. The evidence supporting it is extremely weak, and its sufficiency is extremely doubtful. Respondent had an agent named Gustavus, upon whom she appears to have solely relied in negotiating for the purchase of said note and mortgage. But, conceding that Clinch did act in some respects as the respondent's agent, it is most apparent that his interest in such transaction was adverse to that of the respondent. He was interested as the agent of Prole, and as the arch conspirator in the plot to defraud the appellant Parsons out of her property, to negotiate said note and mortgage. He would not, of course, have been expected to disclose to a prospective purchaser the nefarious part he was acting in said transaction, for the simple and single reason that such disclosure would defeat his own purpose, as no one in all probabilities would have been willing to purchase said note and mortgage if he were informed in advance of his purchase of the facts surrounding its execution and delivery. Under these circumstances, the knowledge of the agent is not imputed to the principal. This rule is well established and generally accepted. It is stated in 1 Cal. Juris, p. 852, as follows: "Since the rule imputing to the principal the knowledge of the agent rests upon the presumption that the agent will communicate his information, the rule is inapplicable where the facts are such that the presumption of communication does not exist, as where the agent, in the particular transaction in question, is acting in an adverse interest to that of his principal. In such transactions the attitude of the agent is one of hostility to the principal, and it would be absurd to suppose that he would communicate to the principal any facts within his private knowledge affecting the subject of his dealing, unless it would be his duty to do so if he were wholly unconnected with the principal."

[3-6] Appellants further contend that under the facts and circumstances shown in this case the respondent is not a bona fide purchaser without notice of the fact that the consideration for said note and mortgage had failed. In this connection appellants assert that the fact that respondent purchased said note and mortgage for less than one-third of the face value of said note was of itself sufficient to put a prudent and reasonable person upon inquiry as to the consideration of said note. It has been definitely held in this state that the purchaser of negotiable paper before maturity is not required to make inquiry of the makers as to the consideration and circumstances leading up to its execution (Schoen v. Houghton, 50 Cal. 528; Kopperud v. Cookson, 50 Cal. App. 180, 194 P. 748), and that inadequacy of price paid is not of itself sufficient to raise an inference or suspicion that the purchaser was buying a tainted instrument (Kopperud v. Cookson, supra). It has further been held that the purchase of a note before maturity for a grossly inadequate price with knowledge, upon inquiry previously made, of the maker's solvency, but without inquiry as to the consideration of the note, is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether the purchase was made in good faith, and is of itself sufficient to arouse the suspicion of a prudent person and to put him upon inquiry as to the consideration. Jordan v. Grover, 99 Cal. 194, 33 P. 889; Burns v. Bauer, 37 Cal. App. 251, 174 P. 346.

In the present action there is no evidence that the respondent herein had any knowledge of the solvency of the maker of said promissory note, or that any inquiry was made by respondent as to the solvency of said maker. On the other hand, we may infer from the evidence that respondent purchased said note and mortgage relying almost wholly upon the value of the lot covered by the mortgage. After investigating the value of said lot, she was informed by A. C. Gustavus, her agent, that it was worth in the neighborhood of $3,000. She therefore agreed to advance on said note and mortgage the sum of $1,500. The trial court with all these facts and circumstances before it held the respondent to be an innocent purchaser for value. There was a further fact which we think is of material importance, and which may well have influenced the trial court in arriving at the determination it did. This fact was the agreement on the part of the respondent to resell said note and mortgage to Clinch and wife at any time within six months after the date of said purchase, upon Clinch and wife paying to her the sum of $1,620 and interest thereon from date of purchase at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. Appellants contend that this agreement constituted the transaction a mortgage or pledge instead of a sale. But, even if so, respondent would undoubtedly have a qualified ownership of said note to the extent of her loan as against appellants, and that is all that she has been awarded by the judgment herein. This agreement to accept $1,620 for an assignment of the note and mortgage to Clinch limited respondent's actual interest in said note and mortgage, provided Clinch complied with the terms of said agreement, to said last-named amount. She was not, therefore, acquiring absolutely a security of the value of $5,000 for the sum of $1,500, but only an interest in said security to the extent of $1,620, with a possibility of becoming the owner of the security itself. The fact that Clinch failed to repay to her the amount agreed within the stipulated time did not change the character of the original contract between him and the respondent. He was given the right to purchase, and, in case he exercised such right, the total amount which the respondent would have received would have been the sum of $1,600 and interest. The difference between this amount and the sum of $1,500, which respondent paid for the note and mortgage, was not so great, the trial court may well have held, as to arouse the suspicions of the respondent that the note was not what it purported to be. The trial court having found that the respondent was an innocent purchaser for value, we are of the opinion that there was substantial evidence in the record to support such finding. It will not, therefore, be disturbed on appeal.

[7] Appellants rely upon the case of Briggs v. Crawford, 162 Cal. 124, 121 P. 381, in support of their contention that the respondent is not an innocent purchaser for value, and therefore not entitled to recover in this action. The facts in that case are in many respects similar to those in the present action, and it was held that the assignee of the note and mortgage held the same subject to all infirmities or objections which could have been set up against it in the hands of the original mortgagee. That case was decided, however, under the law in force at the date of the execution of said last-named note and mortgage. A note secured by a mortgage at that time was a nonnegotiable instrument, and a purchaser thereof, even for full value and without notice of any defect or infirmity therein, took said instrument subject to all equities in favor of the maker thereof. Said note and mortgage were executed on or about December 1, 1908. In 1923 section 3265 of the Civil Code was amended, and since said amendment a promissory note, executed subsequent to said amendment and otherwise negotiable, is not rendered nonnegotiable by the fact that its payment is secured by a mortgage or trust deed. The promissory note and mortgage involved herein were executed April 12, 1924. The case of Briggs v. Crawford, supra, is therefore inapplicable under the present state of the law.

Appellants make the point that practically the entire evidence admitted in the case was without the issues thereof. There is no merit in this point.

The judgment is affirmed.

MURNANE v. LE MESNAGER et al.★
(L. A. 9939.)

Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1170(5)—Variance does not require reversal unless appellant has been prejudiced thereby (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-471, 475; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-471, 475, and Const. art. 6, § 4½, not every variance between pleading and proof necessitates reversal of a judgment, but only where appellant is misled to his prejudice or his substantial rights have been affected thereby.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1170(5)—Parties having proceeded with trial after court's announcement that it was necessary to be liberal with evidence and offer of continuance and permission to amend, elements of surprise and being misled were not considered on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-471, 475; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where trial court, after perusing pleadings announced that it would be necessary "to be more or less liberal as to the evidence," to determine the cause, but if situation was one of surprise, court would continue matter and give more time for preparation, and, if that were not desired, would proceed and at conclusion of trial, if necessary, would permit litigants to amend pleadings, and with this understanding parties proceeded with trial, reserving their objections to introduction of evidence, held that elements of surprise and being misled because of alleged variance between pleadings and proof were not required to be considered by appellate court under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-471, 475, and Const. art. 6, § 4½.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1170(5)—Judgment on cause of action not pleaded nor warranted by its averments cannot be sustained (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-471, 475; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Fundamental principle of pleading is that plaintiff must recover, if at all, on cause of action set out in complaint, and not on some other which may be developed by proofs, and a judgment rendered on cause of action not set out in complaint, and not warranted by its averments, cannot be sustained, except as this rule is modified by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-471, 475, and Const. art. 6, § 4½.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1170(5)—Though cross-complaint asserted interest in realty under oral trust, admitting evidence of right to "dower," amount of which was within grantee's discretion, held not prejudicial variance (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-471, 475; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where cross-complaint, in action to determine interest in real property, was drawn on theory that property transferred by deed to grantee for life came to her under contemporaneous oral agreement subjecting property to a trust in cross-complainant's favor as to undivided one-third interest, and that grantee subsequent to grantor's death renounced such trust, admission of cross-complainant's evidence that she was entitled under said deed to a "dower," amount of which was purely within discretion of grantee, and that she had exercised it by declaring that one-third of property should go to cross-complainant on grantee's death, held not to prejudice adverse parties because of variance under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469-471, 475, and Const. art. 6, § 4½, since under such evidence cross-complainant continued to assert her right to same interest in same property under same deed, and adverse parties were accorded every opportunity to meet evidence so produced.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1048(6)—Refusal to permit cross-examination in court of witness previously testifying by deposition held not prejudicial error.

Trial court's refusal to permit cross-examination in court by adverse parties of witness who had previously testified by deposition held not prejudicial error, where court permitted said adverse parties to call witness as their own witness, which was done.

WASTE, C. J. There are presented herein three appeals from a judgment determining the respective rights and interests of certain of the parties hereto in and to certain described property, and removing and appointing a trustee thereof. The several parties, whose first names only will be frequently used to designate them, are in substantial agreement upon the following facts: George Le Mesnager, Sr., a native of France, came to the United States and to California some time prior to the year 1877. His first wife, Concepcion Le Mesnager, died in 1892, leaving as her issue four children, viz., Louis, George, Jeanne, and Louise. Two years subsequent to the death of his wife, George Le Mesnager, Sr., married the defendant, cross-defendant, and appellant, Marie Le Mesnager. The issue of this marriage was one daughter, Yvonne Le Mesnager, now known as Yvonne Fraval de Coatparquet, also named as a defendant and cross-defendant herein. By the execution of two deeds, one prior and one subsequent to his second marriage, George Le Mesnager, Sr., transferred and conveyed to Marie Le Mesnager, his second wife, all of the real property, herein involved, situate in the county of Los Angeles. Thereafter, and in 1906, for business convenience, there was organized, under the laws of this state, a corporation known as the Mesnager Land & Water Company. The only stock ever issued by this corporation was 10 shares to George, Sr., president; 280 to Marie, vice president; and 10 shares to Louise, secretary-treasurer. In the month of June, 1906, Marie Le Mesnager transferred to this corporation all of the property theretofore conveyed to her by her husband. At the outbreak of the world war, George Le Mesnager, Sr., went to France to assist the cause of his native country. In the year 1916 he returned to Los Angeles on furlough. The hazard incident to his proposed return to the war zone apparently prompted him to seriously consider making disposition of his worldly accumulations among the several members of his family, and on June 16, 1916, he caused the Mesnager Land & Water Company to transfer and convey to his two sons, through the regular corporate channels, a described parcel of land containing some 1,540 acres. This was accepted by the grantees as their interest and share in and to all of their father's property. Three days thereafter, or on June 19, 1916, a second deed was executed and delivered by the corporation. As this entire cause revolves around this deed, we quote it in part as follows:

"This Indenture, made the 19th day of June, in the year of Our Lord nineteen hundred and sixteen, between the Mesnager Land & Water Company, a corporation, duly incorporated at Los Angeles according to the laws of California, the party of the first part, and Marie Le Mesnager of the same city, county and state, the party of the second part,

"Witnesseth:

"That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of five dollars ($5.00) and other valuable considerations, gold coin of the United States of America, to said company, in hand paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, has remised, released and forever quit-claimed, and by these presents does remise, release and forever quit-claim, unto the said party of the second part and to her heirs and assigns, all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in the county of Los Angeles and state of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to-wit: * * * [Here follows a description of the property.]

"Said quitclaim and interest into the said land herein described or if sold by the party

Marie received and accepted this deed, and caused it to be recorded. Subsequent to the execution of this latter deed, George Le Mesnager, Sr., returned to France, where he remained until the close of hostilities. The year 1919 found him again in California. In March, 1922, he and his wife Marie gave to one W. S. Sparr, named as a defendant herein, an option to purchase for $635,000 all but a small fraction or portion of the lands conveyed to Marie by the deed quoted from above. This option was thereafter acted upon, and Marie, her husband joining with her, transferred to the defendant D. P. Putnam, nominee of the option holder, 1,234.10 acres of land, the amount covered by the option. Fifty thousand dollars of the agreed purchase price was paid upon delivery of the deed, and the balance, secured by mortgage, was to be paid in annual installments of an equal amount. The deferred payments were to bear interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. Shortly thereafter, and in the year 1922, Marie and her daughter Yvonne moved to France, where they have since resided. George Le Mesnager, Sr., died in September, 1923.

This action was instituted by the surviving husband of Louise, a daughter of the first marriage, as administrator of his deceased wife's estate, to have the deed of June 19, 1916, construed, and to have it judicially determined and decreed that the estate of the deceased daughter was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in the property conveyed by said deed, or in its proceeds, subject only to a life estate in favor of Marie and to the rights of the defendant Jeanne, also a daughter of the first marriage. When this action was commenced, the defendant Marie had collected on the principal of the mortgage approximately $200,000. There remained unpaid on account of interest a sum in excess of $140,000. Marie still retains title to a small fraction (51.15 acres) of the parcel conveyed to her for life by the corporation, which is of an approximate value of $50,000.

In accordance with the prayer of the amended complaint, the trial court appointed the Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank as receiver, and issued an injunction pendente lite. Answers to the amended complaint were duly filed by the defendants Marie, Yvonne, and Jeanne. The latter filed, also, a cross-complaint, later amended, in which, after alleging many of the matters above narrated, it is prayed that she be adjudged to be the owner of and entitled to an undivided one-third interest in the property conveyed by the Mesnager Land & Water Company to the defendant Marie, or in the proceeds thereof, subject only to a life estate in Marie. The appointment of a receiver and the removal of Marie Le Mesnager as trustee was also requested. When the cause came on for trial, it was announced that a settlement had been reached between the plaintiff and the defendants Marie and Yvonne Le Mesnager. This resulted in the cause going to trial solely upon the amended cross-complaint of Jeanne and the answers thereto. This amended cross-complaint became the basis of the judgment which was entered, and from which the appeals, brought here on a single transcript, are being prosecuted by the defendants and cross-defendants Marie and Yvonne Le Mesnager and the plaintiff and cross-defendant James P. Murnane, as administrator of the estate of his deceased wife.

The cross-complaint of Jeanne Le Mesnager, which, therefore, becomes of the greatest importance, after setting forth many of the matters hereinabove related, avers, in substance, that at the time of the execution and delivery to Marie of the corporate deed, the provision thereof reading: "Said quitclaim and interest into the said land herein described or if sold by the party of the second part, the amount of money or other consideration derived for the sale to revert to Yvonne Le Mesnager and Louise Le Mesnager after the death of second party or before, just as she may judge to be the best, trusting to her also that she will reasonably and according to what she thinks is right, furnish a dower to Jeanne Le Mesnager," was orally agreed by and between George Le Mesnager, Sr., and Marie Le Mesnager, named therein as life tenant, to mean and intended to mean, and at all times should be construed to mean, that Marie held the property therein described in trust for the use and benefit of the three daughters of George Le Mesnager, Sr., viz., Louise, Jeanne, and Yvonne, each of whom should receive an undivided one-third interest therein upon the death of Marie Le Mesnager; that such understanding and agreement was the sole consideration and inducement and the moving cause for the execution and delivery of said deed; that subsequently and in May, 1922, Marie Le Mesnager renounced such trust and claimed to be the owner of the property free and clear and discharged of any trust in favor of the three daughters, as intended in said deed, and as orally understood and agreed (italics added); that upon learning of Marie's changed attitude of mind, George Le Mesnager, Sr., threatened to institute legal proceedings against her looking to the recovery of the property unless she executed a writing evidencing the purport and terms of such prior oral agreement and understanding as to the respective rights of the three daughters in and to the property; that George Le Mesnager, Sr., refrained from instituting such legal proceedings on the promise of Marie to execute such written declaration of the trust under which it had theretofore been agreed and always understood she held the property; that up to the time of his death in 1923, George Le Mesnager, Sr., placed full faith and reliance on said promise of Marie Le Mesnager, and believed that she had executed the writing agreed upon; that Marie, on the other hand, never intended to comply with her promise in this regard, and consequently did not execute such written declaration of trust, but, on the contrary, steadfastly refused to do so, and subsequent to the death of George Le Mesnager, Sr., renounced the trust in favor of the three daughters and under and subject to which she was to hold the property during her lifetime. (Italics added.) The cross-complaint then prays, among other things, that it be decreed that the cross-complainant was at all times from and after the contemporaneous oral agreement, above referred to, between George Le Mesnager, Sr., and Marie Le Mesnager, and up to the time of the sale of the greater part of the property to the defendants Sparr and Putnam, the owner of and entitled to an undivided one-third interest in and to all of the property conveyed by the corporation to Marie, and after such sale was, and ever since has been and now is, the owner of and entitled to an undivided one-third interest in and to the proceeds of such sale; that it be further decreed that Marie Le Mesnager never has been the owner of said property or any part thereof, or of any interest therein, other than having been invested with the right to have and take the rents, issues, and profits thereof during her lifetime; and "that she has at all times been holding the title to an undivided one-third interest therein, as trustee for the use and benefit of cross-complainant. * * * (Italics added.)

More briefly stated, the cross-complaint is drawn on the theory that the property transferred by the corporation to Marie Le Mesnager for life came to her, by virtue of the contemporaneous oral agreement and understanding of George Le Mesnager, Sr., and the grantee, subject to and impressed with a trust in cross-complainant's favor as to an undivided one-third interest, and that Marie had, subsequent to the death of George Le Mesnager, Sr., renounced such trust. The allegations of the amended cross-complaint were generally, or specifically, denied by the plaintiff and other cross-defendants, who, in their answers thereto, reiterated their allegations to the effect that the two sisters of Jeanne, or, rather, that Yvonne and the estate of Louise, are each the owners of an undivided one-half interest in the property conveyed by the deed of June 19, 1916, and in its proceeds, subject to a life estate in favor of Marie Le Mesnager, and subject, also, to a dower interest in favor of the cross-complainant Jeanne. Certain of the cross-defendants alleged, more specifically, that Marie Le Mesnager, so far from repudiating the trust, has at no time asserted that she was the owner of the real property conveyed by the deed, but has at all times recognized that all her rights were governed by the terms of that instrument. They also specifically allege that Jeanne has no interest in the matter other than the power of Marie Le Mesnager to furnish her (Jeanne) with a dower in case of the latter's marriage.

Such were the well-defined issues when the cause came on for trial. The plaintiff and the defendants Marie and Yvonne, having reached a settlement, the trial proceeded upon the amended cross-complaint of Jeanne Le Mesnager and the answers thereto. The cross-complainant was thereupon called as a witness in her own behalf, and sought to show a different state of facts from those alleged in her cross-complaint. In the language of her counsel, instead of proceeding to establish the trust as to a definite one-third interest under the oral understanding and agreement pleaded, she proposed to show that she was entitled, under the terms of the deed, to a "dower," the amount of which was not fixed or definite, but was "purely within the discretion" of Marie Le Mesnager, who "had the right, under that instrument to exercise that discretion at any time"; and that she (Marie) had exercised it. Over the objection of the adverse parties that they were surprised and that the proof offered was not in accord with the allegation of the cross-complaint and was, therefore, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and not binding on the adverse parties, the cross-complainant was permitted to testify and to offer other proof that her step-mother had declared to her that the property conveyed by the deed had been transferred to her (Marie) "during her life and that she was to receive all the proceeds and then after her death it was to be equally divided among" the three girls, Louise, Yvonne, and Jeanne, the cross-complainant.

Timely objection to the offer of proof and the evidence on which the findings rest was made by the parties adverse to the cross-complainant that such evidence was res inter alios acta, and not binding upon the other parties to the deed, being a declaration made by the defendant Marie without the consent or knowledge of such persons. These objections were overruled. The trial court made findings which purport to respond to the substituted theory of the cross-complainant and to conform to the evidence received over the objection of the cross-defendants. These are to the effect that, during the time George Le Mesnager, Sr., was home on furlough from the war in France, he requested Marie Le Mesnager, "as trustee under the terms of the deed dated June 19, 1916, to her from said Mesnager Land & Water Company, to exercise the right and duty given her by said deed to state, determine and fix what portion or sum or dower Jeanne Le Mesnager was to take in said real property or in the proceeds derived from the sale of the whole or any part thereof. Thereupon, said defendant and cross-defendant Marie Le Mesnager declared Jeanne's dower or portion was then and there fixed by her at and was one-third of said real property or one-third of the proceeds derived from the sale of the whole or any part thereof; and that each of the other daughters, Louise and Yvonne, would thus likewise receive a one-third interest * * * that * * * she * * * Marie Le Mesnager should take and receive for her own use and benefit during her life, only the rents, issues and profits * * * and that upon her death the said real property remaining unsold and the corpus of the proceeds derived from any sale or sales of all or any part of said real property should be divided, the one-third to each of said three daughters, i. e., Louise, Jeanne and Yvonne, share and share alike." Further findings are to the effect that Marie Le Mesnager agreed that she would execute, acknowledge, and deliver a "writing making declaration of trust setting forth specifically the portion of the real property or the portion of the proceeds derived from the sale of the said real property or any part thereof, which she as trustee under said deed had fixed as a dower for Jeanne Le Mesnager and specifically setting forth the terms of her agreement with the said George Le Mesnager, Sr., deceased as to her declaration, interpretation, construction, intention and meaning of the provision contained in said deed respecting and concerning the interest of the said Jeanne Le Mesnager in and to said real property or the proceeds derived from the sale * * * that [she] never has executed or delivered any such writing * * * but * * * has from time to time declared to * * * Jeanne Le Mesnager and other members of the family * * * and to others, that the foregoing [the agreement between George, Sr., and Marie found by the court] was the construction as agreed upon between her and the said George Le Mesnager, Sr., deceased as to the terms of said deed with reference to the rights of herself and of the three daughters in and to the said real property and the proceeds derived from any sale or sales thereof." Other findings are that the interpretation of the language of the deed of June 19, 1916, and the declaration by Marie Le Mesnager as to the exercise of her right and duty, as trustee, in fixing and declaring that Louise, Jeanne and Yvonne should receive a one-third interest in the remainder of the trust "was reasonable, right and just, considering * * * all the surrounding circumstances," and that the provisions in the deed respecting cross-complainant Jeanne Le Mesnager and the interpretation of the right of Marie to declare the interest of Jeanne "were never intended by either George Le Mesnager, Sr., deceased, or the defendant and cross-defendant, Marie Le Mesnager, to be dependent upon, limited by, or in anywise affected by her marriage or failure to marry, her entering a convent or failing to enter a convent, or any other restriction except fair, just and proper distribution of the property conveyed by said deed, or the proceeds derived from the sale thereof, among the daughters" of George, Sr., and Marie, "taking into account the circumstances, conditions and provisions that had been made for all of the children" of said George, Sr., and Marie.

Judgment resting on these findings was entered as prayed for by Jeanne in her amended cross-complaint.

[1] An answer to the suggestion that there was in this case a failure of proof to support the judgment is found in the statute which provides that, where the allegations of the claim or defense to which the proof is directed is unproved only in some particular or particulars, but not in its general scope and meaning, the case is merely one of variance. Code Civ. Proc., § 471. And full and adequate remedy could have been afforded all parties by an order of amendment of the pleading upon such terms as might be just. Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 250, 88 Pa. 911, citing Code Civ. Proc., § 469. Variance between the allegations in a pleading and the proof is not to be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits. The code also provides that the court must, in every stage of an action (and that means on appeal, as well as in the trial of the cause), disregard any error, improper ruling, or defect in the pleadings or proceedings, which, in the opinion of the court, does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. It must appear from the record that the error, improper ruling, or defect was prejudicial and caused substantial injury before the judgment rendered may be reversed or be held to be affected by it; and it must further appear that a different result would have been probable if such error, ruling, or defect had not occurred or existed. Code Civ. Proc., § 475. Not only do these code sections require this court, under such circumstance, to determine from an examination of the entire record, whether or not there has been a miscarriage of justice before reversing a judgment, but the state Constitution is equally mandatory and imperative. Const., § 4½ of art. 6. It therefore indubitably follows that it is not every variance that will necessitate the overthrow of a judgment. Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 724, 127 P. 66.

[2] Where a variance is not material, and does not actually mislead the adverse party to his prejudice, the court may find the facts according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment without costs. Code Civ. Proc., § 470. If it appears that the party has been misled, the court may order the pleading to be amended upon such terms as may be just. In this case, the trial court, after a careful perusal of the pleadings, and a consideration of the deed about which the cause revolved—an instrument which the court well characterized as one "that is not altogether clear"—announced to the counsel for the respective parties that the case appeared to be one in which it would be necessary "to be more or less liberal as to the evidence," in order to determine the cause; but if the then situation was one of surprise, and prejudicial to their clients, it would continue the matter and give more time for preparation; and, if that were not desired, the court would proceed, and "at the conclusion of the trial," if necessary, upon motion of counsel "for any of the litigants to amend their pleadings," they would be permitted to do so. With this understanding the parties appear to have been willing to and did proceed with the trial, reserving their objections, on various grounds, to the introduction of the evidence. The elements of "surprise" and being "misled" need not, therefore, be further considered, for the appellants were accorded suitable opportunity to protect themselves against, or to recover from, either.

[3] The question, then, to be considered is whether the admission of the evidence tending to substantiate the new theory of the cross-complaint—evidence not responsive to the facts pleaded in the amended cross-complaint—worked any material prejudice to the cause of the adverse parties. We are not losing sight of the fundamental principle of pleading that "a plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the cause of action set out in the complaint, and not upon some other which may be developed by the proofs." Schirmer v. Drexler, 134 Cal. 134, 139, 66 P. 180, 183; Reed v. Norton, 99 Cal. 617, 34 P. 333. The allegata and probata must correspond, and a judgment rendered upon a cause of action not set up in the complaint, and not warranted by its averments, cannot be sustained either upon principle or authority. Elmore v. Elmore, 114 Cal. 516, 519, 46 P. 458; Chetwood v. California Nat. Bank, 113 Cal. 414, 45 P. 704. But the doctrine of variance and the penalties to follow when it appears has been greatly mitigated in this state by the provisions of our code (Higgins v. Graham, 143 Cal. 131, 134, 76 P. 898), which have already been referred to.

[4] In this case the cross-complainant was asserting a right to an undivided one-third interest in and to real property under the terms and provisions of a deed which she set out in her pleadings. Under the proofs adduced by her at the trial, she continued to assert her right to the same interest in the same property under the same deed. By means of the evidence introduced by her, her claim, as presented in her cross-complaint, was not unproved in its general scope and meaning, but only in some particulars. As to those particulars, it seems to us, as it did to the trial court, the parties adverse to the cross-complainant were accorded every opportunity to meet the evidence which was produced by her. The deed under which all the parties claimed an interest in the property permits of the construction contended for by the cross-complainant in introducing her evidence, and was accepted by the trial court, whose duty it was to pass upon its terms and effect. It is immaterial to us what was meant by the parties who caused the deed to be executed when they used the word "dower" in providing for Jeanne's portion. The trial court has found that, under the discretion given the trustee, Marie, she fixed and determined that portion to be an undivided one-third interest, and that, under the circumstances surrounding the execution of the deed, including the deed itself, the exercise of discretion by the trustee, Marie, was justified, and that the result was equitable and just to all the parties to the litigation. Whether or not all she did in the premises was a sufficient declaration of the interest Jeanne should have, and whether or not she did all things she was claimed to have done in that regard, were matters for the determination of the trial court. We are not prepared to say that the evidence does not support its conclusions in both matters.

[5] We find no prejudicial error in the refusal of the trial court to permit the cross-examination in court by appellants of the witness Haas, who had previously testified by deposition. The court permitted the appellants to call Haas as their own witness, and that was done.

As, under the sections of the code (Code Civ. Proc. 469 and 470, supra), where the variance is not material, the court may either direct the fact to be found according to the evidence or may order an immediate amendment, it having adopted in this case the first course, and found the facts in accordance with the evidence, the judgment is affirmed.

HILLS v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(L. A. 11307.)

Supreme Court of California. July 29, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨173—Power to grant family allowance is exclusively creature of statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1466).

Power to grant a family allowance is purely and exclusively creature of statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 1466.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨180—Surviving husband is not entitled to family allowance under statute (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1465, 1466).

Surviving husband is not entitled to family allowance under Code Civ. Proc. § 1466, authorizing allowance, where property set apart is insufficient for support of widow and children or either, since only persons entitled to family allowance are widow and children or either, in view of section 1465, authorizing court to set aside exempt property for use of surviving husband or wife.

3. Statutes ⇨225—Sections of Code of Civil Procedure relating to setting apart exempt property and granting family allowance should be construed together, since they relate to same subject (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1465, 1466).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1466, authorizing court to make extra family allowance, and section 1465, authorizing court to set apart exempt property for use of surviving husband or wife, must be construed together, since they relate to the same subject.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨180—Word "family" in statute authorizing court to allow family allowance does not include husband (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1465, 1466).

Word "family" in Code Civ. Proc. § 1466, authorizing court to make family allowance where property set apart is insufficient for support of widow and children, does not include husband, in view of section 1465.

Preston and Richards, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Application by Arthur M. Hills for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles and Harry R. Archbald, Judge of Department 2 of such court, to compel respondent to grant a petition for family allowance. Petition denied.

E. W. Cunningham, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Hewitt, McCormick & Crump, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Petitioner herein applied to the probate court of the county of Los Angeles for a family allowance out of the estate of his deceased wife. The petition was denied, and petitioner thereafter filed in this court his petition for a writ of mandate directed against said probate court and the judge thereof "commanding them to set said Petition for Family Allowance for further hearing, and upon such further hearing to make an Order granting Petitioner a family allowance." No question is raised but that mandamus is the appropriate remedy to test the question herein presented. The petition herein sets forth that the petitioner is the surviving husband of Eugenie Thompson Maginnis Hills, deceased; that her estate was in course of administration in said probate court; that petitioner had filed in said probate court a petition for a family allowance out of the estate of said deceased; and that said court denied said petition. A general demurrer was filed to the petition herein. The petitioner has annexed to, and made a part of, his petition herein copies of his said petition for a family allowance presented to said probate court and of the order of said court denying said petition. The following facts appear from said petition and order: That said deceased at the time of her death left surviving her her said husband, the petitioner herein; that petitioner is without any estate of his own; that throughout the married life of deceased and petitioner said deceased paid out of her own estate all living expenses of herself and said petitioner; that the property of said estate exempt from execution is not sufficient for the support and maintenance of petitioner; and that said deceased left no children or issue surviving her.

[1] The power to grant a family allowance is purely and exclusively the creature of statute. In re Noah, 73 Cal. 583, 588, 15 P. 287, 2 Am. St. Rep. 829; In re Welch, 106 Cal. 427, 432, 39 P. 805; Estate of Heywood, 149 Cal. 129, 130, 84 P. 834; Estate of McSwain, 176 Cal. 280, 168 P. 117. The sole provision to be found in the statutes of this state giving to the courts authority to grant a family allowance is contained in section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section, so far as the same is material to the purpose of this proceeding, reads as follows: "Court may make extra allowance. If the property set apart is insufficient for the support of the widow and children, or either, the court or a judge thereof must take [make] such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family, according to their circumstances, during the progress of the settlement of the estate.

[2, 3] It would appear from a simple reading of this section of the code that the only persons whom the Legislature intended should be entitled to an extra or family allowance under this statute or Code section were the "widow and children or either." This conclusion is further strengthened when this section is read in connection with the article of the Code of which section 1466 is a part, and particularly when read in connection with section 1465 of said article. These two sections relate to the same subject, and should be construed together. Estate of McSwain, 176 Cal. 280, 168 P. 117. Taking such parts of these two sections together as are pertinent to the question before us, they read as follows: (Section 1465) "The court may on petition therefor, set apart for the use of the surviving husband or wife, or in case of his or her death, to the minor children of the decedent, all the property exempt from execution, including the homestead." (Section 1466) "If the property set apart is insufficient for the support of the widow and children, or either, the court or a judge thereof must take [make] such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family. * * *" It seems inconceivable, after mentioning the husband in section 1465 as one of the persons to whom the exempt property might be set apart, that the Legislature, had it intended that he should be entitled to a family allowance under section 1466, would not have expressly mentioned him in this section also. That his name was designedly omitted from section 1466 is apparent from a most cursory reading thereof, and is most persuasive of the conclusion that it was not intended that he should share in the benefits of said section.

[4] It is contended by appellant that the word "family" includes the husband as well as the wife and children, and that, when section 1466 refers to "an allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family," it was intended to include the surviving husband in estates of the deceased wife as well as the wife and children in estates of the deceased husband. The husband, if living, is, of course, a member of the family. Upon his death, the remaining members of the household constitute the family. The term is used in the statutes indiscriminately to designate the family in these two different stages or conditions. For instance, in section 1464 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that, when a person dies "leaving a widow or minor" child, they are entitled to remain in possession of certain property, including "the wearing apparel of the family." The word "family" in this section could not refer to nor include the husband. It must be, therefore, limited to the widow and minor children. Again, in section 1469 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where, if the deceased left a widow, and minor children, the whole of the property may be set aside to the widow. Before this can be done, however, a notice must be given requiring "all persons interested to appear on a day fixed to show cause why the whole of said estate should not be assigned for the use and support of the family of the deceased." In this section the word "family" unquestionably refers to the widow and children, if there be any children, and to the widow alone, if the deceased left no children. It cannot in any sense include the husband, for the provisions of said section can only become operative upon his death. On the other hand, section 1468 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it now reads, uses the word "family" in an entirely different sense. By its provisions a homestead set apart by the court for the use of the family, "if the decedent left a surviving spouse and no minor child, is the property of such spouse." Clearly, under the terms of this section, the word "family" as used therein, in case the surviving spouse were the husband, would include him with the surviving children, if the deceased left children, but, in case no children survived the deceased, the "family" would consist of the husband alone. These are the only instances in which the word "family" is used in this article of the Code. It is plain to be seen that it is used in some instances to include the husband and in others it is limited to the wife, or wife and children. We must therefore look to the text of the several sections of the Code in which the word "family" is used in order to determine the sense in which it is employed in any particular section. As we have already seen, when we look to the particular language of section 1466, and especially when we read section 1465 and section 1466 together, the conclusion is apparent that the word "family" as used in the latter section does not include the husband.

[5] Petitioner relies upon certain language used by this court in the Estate of McSwain, supra, to the effect that the family referred to in section 1466 consists of the same persons as those expressly mentioned in section 1465, "that is, the surviving husband and wife, if any, and the minor children, if any, of the decedent." That was a proceeding wherein the administratrix of the estate, who was also the widow of the deceased, had appealed from an order of the probate court directing the payment of a certain sum from the funds of the estate for the maintenance, education, and support of the minor child of the deceased and of his surviving wife. It appears in said estate that the court had made an adequate allowance to the widow for the support and maintenance of the family of said deceased, consisting of herself and her said minor child; that said minor child voluntarily left her mother's home after the death of her father, and thereafter through her guardian petitioned for, and was given, a separate allowance from said estate. It was this order from which the mother of the child, who was also administratrix of the estate, appealed. It is quite evident that the question of whether the husband was a member of the family as this term was used in section 1466 was not before the court, and therefore that any language found in the opinion purporting to determine that question was not necessary for the decision of said appeal, and must be regarded as obiter dictum. There may also be found in other decisions brief and fragmentary expressions of the court as to the meaning of the word "family," but an examination of the cases in which these occur will show that they have no bearing whatever upon the question now before us. On the other hand, in Estate of Parkinson, 193 Cal. 354, 224 P. 453, this court quite recently expressly construed together sections 1464 and 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In that case the contention was made that the word "family," as used in said section 1466, should be confined to cases where an actual family status existed at the date of the decedent's death. In answering this claim, the court said: "We can see no reason for giving any such restricted significance to the use of that phrase in that section, nor, in fact, in making any distinction between the application of section 1464 and section 1466 of said Code in that regard. Both of these sections are dealing with the support of the widow and minor children, if any, of the decedent, the one before and the other after the return of the inventory." While we are in hearty agreement with the construction thus placed upon these two Code sections, we cannot claim this case as a controlling authority, for the reason that the question of the husband's right to a family allowance was in no way involved in that action, and the language quoted above was not used by the court in reference to such question. It is not necessary, however, for us to depend upon any such uncertain and indefinite expression of this court relative to the construction to be placed upon said section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We are satisfied from its context and from the use of the word "family" in other Code sections that by no fair or reasonable construction of the term can it be distorted into an authoritative declaration authorizing the probate court to grant a family allowance to a husband out of the property of the deceased wife's estate.

Section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure substantially in its present form was enacted in the year 1872, and has ever since said date been in full force and effect. It is curious that during the long period of time intervening between the date of its enactment and the present the question of a surviving husband's right thereunder to a family allowance has never been before any of the appellate courts of this state. This circumstance can only be explained by the fact that its terms are so clear and plain that no person before the institution of the present proceeding has ever had the temerity to claim at least in these courts that it accorded to the husband the right to a family allowance from the estate of his deceased wife.

There is another circumstance which we think well to mention at this time, and which we think clearly shows that the Legislature, at which the original section 1466 was adopted, never considered that there had been enacted legislation giving the right to a husband to claim a family allowance from his wife's estate. At the same session of the Legislature at which section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure was originally enacted there was also enacted section 969 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provided for appeals in probate proceedings. Among the probate orders made appealable by this section of the Code was an order against or in favor of "making an allowance for a widow or child." We find no provision in the Code adopted at that time giving an appeal from an order against or in favor of making an allowance for a husband. The only reason that we can perceive for the failure on the part of the Legislature at that time to have provided for an appeal from such an order was that it never occurred to the Legislature that by the enactment of section 1466 it had provided for the making of any such allowance to the husband. Section 969 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been incorporated in, and made a part of, section 963 of the same Code. This latter section has been amended at various times since the old section 969 was made a part thereof, but the provision taken from section 969 relative to an appeal from an order making an allowance for the widow or child has never been changed in any respect, and it maintains to-day the precise phraseology of the original section enacted in 1872. During all this time no amendment or other provision has ever been enacted providing for an appeal from an order making an allowance to the husband. We might well infer from the absence in our Code of Procedure of such a provision that it has been the settled conviction of the Legislature as well as of the people generally during all these years that there was no statutory authority for the granting of an order making a family allowance to the husband. If there had been any idea in the minds of the several legislators, who proposed and enacted the various amendments to section 963, that a husband was entitled to an order for family allowance out of his wife's estate, we would naturally expect that in amending said section there would have been inserted there during some of these various sessions a provision for an appeal from such order, as long as said section gave the right of an appeal from a like order in favor or against a wife or child. It therefore appears to us that the Legislature enacting section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure never intended by any of the provisions thereof to give to the husband the right to a family allowance from the estate of his deceased wife. Neither are we of the opinion that the three later Legislatures at which section 1466 had been readopted in slightly modified form, but without changing it in respect to the designation of the persons entitled to a family allowance, had any thought or intention that there was being enacted legislation that would give to a husband the right to claim a family allowance.

As we view the question before us, it was never the intention of the Legislature, nor has it by any reasonable construction to be placed upon section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorized the court, to grant the order for which the petitioner applied. It was proper, therefore, for the court to deny his said application.

His petition herein therefore is hereby denied.

PRESTON, J. I dissent. The sole question presented by this original proceeding in mandate and general demurrer to the petition is: Do the provisions of section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorize granting to a surviving husband a family allowance out of the estate of his deceased wife?

Petitioner, a surviving husband without estate of his own, and who throughout his married life was supported and maintained out of his wife's property, seeks a family allowance from her estate now in the course of probate. He alleges also that the estate possesses no real property out of which a homestead might be carved, and that the exempt property is insufficient for his support.

The power of the court to grant a family allowance from the estate of a deceased person is purely statutory. McSwain's Estate, 176 Cal. 280, 168 P. 117. The solution of the problem before us, therefore, rests upon the interpretation given to sections 1465 and 1466, Code of Civil Procedure, which read in part as follows:

"1465. All Property Exempt From Execution to Be Set Apart for Use of Family.
 * * * Upon the return of the inventory,
 * * * the court may * * * set apart for the use of the surviving husband or wife,
 * * * all the property exempt from execution, including the homestead selected.

* * * If none has been selected, * * * the court must select * * * a homestead for the use of the surviving husband or wife and the minor children. * * *

"1466. Court May Make Extra Allowance. * * * If the property set apart is insufficient for the support of the widow and children, or either, the court * * * must take [make] such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family, according to their circumstances, during the progress of the settlement of the estate. * * *

In brief, the contention of respondents is that under the latter section a condition precedent to allowance by the court of maintenance for the family is that the property set apart be insufficient for the support of the widow and children; hence, where there is neither widow nor children, the granting of a family allowance is unauthorized. This contention of respondents, however, is in the face of a contrary holding of this court. In re Garrity, 108 Cal. 463, 38 P. 628, 41 P. 485.

In that case the right to a family allowance was before the court, and it was contended that, inasmuch as real estate existed out of which might be set apart a homestead, until this was done the granting of such allowance was unauthorized, and would further be unauthorized, unless it was found that, after setting apart a homestead, it, together with the exempt property, would be insufficient for the support of the family. The court, ruling that the right to a family allowance existed independent of these conditions, said: "The right of the family to an allowance for its support is not, however, contingent upon a previous order setting apart a homestead for its use. Whether a homestead be set apart or not, section 1466 confers upon the court the power, in its discretion, to 'make such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family according to their circumstances during the progress of the settlement of the estate.'"

Respondents' position may again be summed up in the contention that the word "family" as used in section 1466 excludes a surviving husband. It is to be noted that this section is one of a series of sections relating to "provision for the support of the family." It is easily demonstrable from the text of sections 1464, 1465, and 1468 of this chapter that the word "family" includes the husband—the deceased husband in section 1464 and the surviving husband in the other two sections. Why then should the word be given a meaning in section 1466 that excludes him? It is easily to be supposed that circumstances may exist which entitle him to as much consideration as a widow and minor children are entitled to, and we find no foundation upon which to base a legislative intent to deny him the same right accorded them.

The majority opinion admits the husband is a constituent part of the family, but cuts him off. I presume he should be too gallant to claim such allowance! The opinion ignores the effect of In re Garrity, supra, a case of controlling importance.

It is true that this question has not been squarely presented in any previous decision of this court, but the case of In re Garrity, supra, goes a long way towards foreshadowing the conclusion herein reached. It is also true that in Phelan v. Smith, 100 Cal. 158, 170, 34 P. 667, 671, the court uses this language in referring to said chapter of the Code, especially including said section 1466: "The term 'family' throughout the chapter is used as synonymous with and as representing the surviving wife or husband and children, if any."

In McSwain's Estate, supra, this court considered the question of a separate allowance to be made to a minor child of deceased after an allowance had been made to the surviving wife for her support, and used these words: "Sections 1465 and 1466 relate to the same subject. The latter obviously refers to the conditions described in the former. They should be construed together, and, so construed, it is obvious that the family referred to in the latter section consists of the same persons as those expressly mentioned in the former section, that is, the surviving husband and wife, if any, and the minor children, if any, of the decedent."

A similar construction of the word is found in Re Lamb, 95 Cal. 397, 407, 408, 30 P. 568, 571, where the court was considering section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to setting aside a homestead to the surviving spouse, and used this language: "It is true that the word 'family' in its ordinary signification refers to two or more persons, and, as used in the section just referred to, will include those living under the same roof as kindred or dependents, and under one head, thus constituting a family, as that term is generally understood; but this word, as used in the statute concerning probate homesteads, is not to be so restricted in its meaning as to exclude the only survivor of the family [e. g. the husband] of which the deceased was a member. The object of the statute is to preserve the family home for the use and benefit of the survivor or survivors of those occupying it as such, and the right of the surviving husband or wife to retain this home for such period as the court may direct does not depend upon the fact that there are children or others who may share in its use."

It is true, as respondent contends, that there is certain language in Estate of Steehler, 195 Cal. 386, 395, 233 P. 972, which might be considered at variance with the above quotations, but an examination of the holding there made shows that the question before us was not involved, and the language relied upon was used arguendo, and was therefore not determinative of the issue we are considering.

I am therefore of the opinion that under said section the surviving husband, as a constituent element of the family, is entitled to a family allowance out of the estate of his deceased wife, and it is the duty of the court, sitting in probate, to make such suitable allowance to him as under the circumstances may be deemed just and proper.

I think the peremptory writ should issue.

MARDESICH v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES
et al. (Civ. 6636.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 1, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨772—City department of water and power held relieved from default for delay in filing brief, owing to mistake in records.

Although failure of appellants for more than 30 days after transcript was filed to serve and file opening brief, as required by rules of practice, was negligence, it was not entirely inexcusable, and motion for relief from default was granted, where delay was due to mistake in records of appellant, department of water and power of city.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Action by Joseph Mardesich against the City of Los Angeles and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. On motion by plaintiff to dismiss appeal, and by defendants for relief from default. Motion to dismiss denied; motion for relief from default granted.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and W. B. Mathews, Kenneth K. Scott, and Francis H. Lindley, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robert W. Bruce and R. Dean Warner, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The respondent has made a motion to dismiss the appeal in this case on the ground that the appellants failed for more than 30 days after the transcript was filed to serve and file their opening brief, as required by the rules of practice in this court. Appellants' points and authorities were not on file when the motion was filed on June 11, 1929, but were presented and filed on July 5, 1929, or four days before the hearing of the motion. The appellants have made a motion to be relieved of their default, and in this regard show by affidavits that a deputy city attorney in the department of water and power was in active charge of this litigation; that in the office of the legal division of the department of water and power a system has been established whereby it is and has been the duty of the chief clerk therein to keep a record of all civil actions in which the city of Los Angeles or the department of water and power are parties, together with a calendar of dates for appearances, hearings, appeals, etc.; that this clerk for some reason received no card advising her of the filing of the transcript in the present case, as is customary, but that during her unavoidable absence from the office her assistant received notice of the transfer of the cause from the Supreme Court to this court; that, inasmuch as this notice did not mention the filing of the transcript, the assistant made no record of the time for filing the brief, and it escaped the attention of the clerk and counsel. It is further shown by the affidavit of the deputy city attorney that the clerk in charge has been in the office for the past three years, and charged with the responsibility of making proper entries on the calendar; that he has relied thereon for that length of time, and "has found few, if any, mistakes in the calendar system"; that he was very busy in the trial of cases during the period of time involved.

No doubt there was negligence on the part of counsel and his office. We think, however, that the negligence was not entirely inexcusable, and that the circumstances are sufficiently similar to the cases of McCabe v. Healey, 139 Cal. 30, 72 P. 359, and Alexander & Co. v. Martz (Cal. App.) 265 P. 881; that the same rule ought to be applied.

Motion to dismiss denied. Motion for relief from default granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Two actions for services by H. C. Asher against J. D. Martin and another. The actions were consolidated, and, from a single judgment for plaintiff against defendant named, defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Morgan J. Doyle, of San Francisco, and Walter M. Gleason, of Oakland (Norman J. Ronald, of counsel), for appellant.

W. H. Stammer, of Fresno, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. These two actions for services rendered were consolidated for trial before the court without a jury. Plaintiff had a single judgment against the defendant Martin in the sum of $1,376.08, but was denied judgment against the Growers' Association. The defendant Martin has appealed from the judgment upon typewritten transcripts.

The controversy arises out of the alleged employment of the plaintiff by the defendant Martin to assist him and also the Growers' Association, of which he was an interested member, in a campaign in opposition to an announced ruling of the railroad carriers in California relating to the use of refrigerator cars in the transportation of grapes, commonly referred to as the "Grape Car Plan of 1926." The plaintiff is a traffic man engaged in the business of advising shippers with respect to their relations with transportation companies, representing them before the interstate commerce commission, the Railroad Commission and other bodies having jurisdiction over transportation matters, and in the collection of claims and the routing of transportation cars. The defendant Martin is a large grower and shipper of fresh fruits in the territory adjacent to Fresno, who had frequently employed plaintiff on other traffic matters prior to the controversy over the grape car plan.

When this plan was promulgated by the carriers, the defendant Martin became very much disturbed, and approached the plaintiff asking him to take charge of a campaign of opposition to the plan in his behalf. Numerous conferences were held between the parties, and, at the instance of this defendant, the plaintiff engaged an attorney at law to prepare a complaint to be filed with the interstate commerce commission, and thereafter, also at defendant's request, plaintiff, with an assistant, circularized the growers of the locality for signatures in opposition to the plan. The plaintiff continued to advise and consult with this defendant during all the period from the date of the first negotiations in August, 1926, to the hearing before the Commission in March, 1927; he assisted in preparing the case for hearing, and, at the request of this defendant, aided in the incorporation of the Growers' Association for the purpose of supporting the defendant Martin in his campaign.

[1] After a full hearing, the trial court found that these services were reasonably worth the sum allowed in the judgment, and this finding is not seriously attacked. The theory of the appellant is that he did not specifically request respondent to perform the services, and that there was no intention between the parties that appellant should compensate the respondent, but that the respondent, in his capacity as a traffic man, was also interested in defeating the car plan, and that his services were gratuitous. Upon this issue the case was fully tried, and the trial court, upon conflicting evidence, found adversely to appellant. There is abundant evidence showing the original employment of respondent, the performance of the services as requested and directed by appellant from time to time, and the continued assurance of appellant that he intended to bear the burden of the expense. What little conflict appellant presents in this evidence lies in the inferences which he insists the trial court might have drawn from the evidence more favorable to his theory of the case. But, where the evidence supports the findings made, we do not disturb the judgments of trial courts merely because we might have reached a different view of the evidence or might have drawn different inferences from it. We can see no purpose in going through this evidence and pointing out wherein the answers of the various witnesses might be interpreted as implying one thing or the other. It is sufficient to say that from our review of the record there is sufficient evidence to support a finding favorable to the theory of either party, and that, such being the case, the judgment should not be disturbed.

[2-4] Upon the merits of the controversy, the principles of law involved are simple. When one performs valuable services for another, at the latter's request, the law implies as matter of fact a promise by the latter to pay the reasonable value of the services. In such a case the burden of proof is on the latter to show that the services were rendered gratuitously or without the obligation on his part to pay. It cannot be said as matter of law that this presumption of a promise to pay is dispelled by proof of the fact that the one who performed the services was personally interested in the outcome of the services, or that he expected to receive benefits in the nature of further employment from others who were interested. Wojahn v. National Bank, 144 Wis. 646, 129 N. W. 1068, a case involving a similar state of facts. Here the testimony on the part of the appellant tended to show that the respondent had expressed his opposition to the car plan and the fear that it would injure his business as a traffic man; that he had also expressed the hope that, if he was successful in defeating the plan, he would obtain employment in the future from other shippers interested. Assuming all this to be true, it does not remove appellant's obligation to pay the reasonable value of the services which the trial court found had been performed for him and at his request. Respondent first billed the corporation for a portion of the account on the theory that it had been organized for the express purpose of aiding the appellant in raising funds for the campaign, and the respondent sued the corporation on the same theory. But a party is not precluded from asserting a claim because inconsistent with a previous claim which was not successfully maintained. Lackmann v. Kearney, 142 Cal. 112, 115, 75 P. 668.

[5] While frankly conceding that no one of the assigned errors may have injuriously affected appellant's efforts to fairly present his defense, appellant assigns a number of errors in the admission of testimony and in the exclusion of testimony proffered by him. Thus he complains of the admission of testimony relating to the respondent's office expenses, to the employment of an assistant to circularize the fruit shippers in support of appellant's campaign, to the preparation of the complaint filed before the commerce commission, and testimony of similar character, all of which was introduced for the purpose of showing what services had been performed by respondent in order to determine their reasonable value. The testimony appears to be admissible for this purpose, but the same facts were shown by other evidence to which no objection was made, and hence, if error occurred, it was harmless. 2 Cal. Jur. 1020; Schumann v. Karrer, 184 Cal. 50, 59, 192 P. 849.

[6] The same rule controls the assignment of error relating to the exclusion of certain testimony offered by appellant. The facts were fully covered by other testimony which was admitted, and appellant has suffered no prejudice. 2 Cal. Jur. 1022; Schumann v. Karrer, supra; Miller & Lux v. Richardson, 182 Cal. 115, 129, 187 P. 411.

The judgment is affirmed.

COLTHURST v. JUSTICE'S COURT OF VALLEJO TP. IN AND FOR SOLANO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3826.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 26, 1929.

1. Certiorari ☞70(1)—Order discharging writ seeking review of proceedings of justice's court wherein default judgment was set aside held appealable as final judgment.

Order of superior court discharging writ of certiorari seeking review of proceedings of justice's court wherein default judgment was set aside, claimed in excess of justice's jurisdiction, held to constitute final judgment from which appeal would lie; there being no issue of fact necessarily tendered by proceedings for the writ in the superior court.

2. Justices of the peace ☞122(5)—Justice's court could not set aside default judgment where application for relief was not made within ten days (Code Civ. Proc. § 859).

Justice's court was without jurisdiction to set aside default judgment where application for relief was not made within ten days' limitation of time allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 859.

3. Justices of the peace ☞122(5)—Notice of rendition of judgment held not invalid because not "signed by justice" as required by statute (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 859, 893).

Notice of rendition of judgment in justice's court served upon defendants held not invalid because not "signed by the justice," as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 893, in view of section 859, not specifying the form of notice of rendition of judgment as prerequisite to application for relief from default.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; William T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Petition by J. E. Colthurst against the Justice's Court of Vallejo Township in and for the County of Solano and another for certiorari to review an order of the Justice's Court vacating a default judgment. From a judgment denying the petition, petitioner appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and judgment reversed, with directions.

J. E. Colthurst, of Vallejo, for appellant.

O'Hara, Hatch & Pope, of Vallejo, for respondents.

ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment denying a petition for a writ of review. The record on appeal shows that the petitioner filed against Robert H. and Lea Lindsay, husband and wife, in the justice's court of Vallejo township, Solano county, a complaint based upon an account stated; that process was duly served upon the defendants, who failed to appear or answer, and judgment was thereupon entered against them for the sum of $165.89. The plaintiff forthwith served upon the defendants notice by mail of the rendering of judgment. This notice did not conform to the requirements of section 893 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the reason that the notice was not "signed by the justice." The docket shows that a subsequent notice was given as follows: "Sept. 15, notice of decision served on defendants by post office at request of defendants." September 19, 1927, the defendants served and filed in the justice's court a notice of motion, supported by affidavits of merits, to vacate the default judgment. This motion was actually presented to the court on September 28th, and, over objection on the part of plaintiff on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction, the motion was granted and the default judgment was set aside. The justice's court was without jurisdiction to grant this motion. The mere filing of the notice of motion for relief was not sufficient. It is necessary that the motion be actually made to the court within the ten days' limitation of time prescribed by law. Spencer v. Branham, 109 Cal. 336, 41 P. 1095; Wheeler v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. App. 601, 227 P. 931. A writ of certiorari was thereupon filed in the superior court of Solano county.

The petition which was filed in that court recited all of the proceedings of the justice's court, upon which the judge signed a peremptory order directing the justice of the peace to forthwith certify the record of proceedings in his court to the superior court, and restrained the justice's court from further proceedings pending the hearing for review. None of the essential facts were controverted. Subsequently the petition for a writ of review was heard in the superior court and on October 4, 1928, it was finally disposed of by the following ruling: "Ordered, in the above entitled cause, that the writ be and the same is hereby discharged." This appeal from that final order was thereupon perfected.

[1, 2] An appeal from a final order or judgment in a petition for a writ of certiorari, when the judgment is rendered in excess of jurisdiction, is the proper remedy. 4 Cal. Jur. 1116, § 74; Millott v. Mare Island Emp. Ass'n, 44 Cal. App. 271, 274, 186 P. 378; Beaumont v. Samson, 4 Cal. App. 701, 89 P. 137. There was no issue of fact necessarily tendered by the proceedings for a writ of certiorari in the Superior Court, and the foregoing order was tantamount to a final judgment from which an appeal lies. Brown v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. App. 732, 234 P. 409. The justice's court was without jurisdiction to set aside the default judgment, for the reason that the application for relief was not made within the ten days' limitation of time allowed by section 859 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the writ of review should therefore have been granted. That section provides in part: "The court may also, on such terms as may be just, and on payment of costs, relieve a party from a judgment by default taken against him by his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, but the application for such relief must be made within ten days after notice of the entry of the judgment and upon an affidavit showing good cause therefor." The defendants were served with notice of the entry of judgment on June 2, 1927. Their application for relief from the default judgment was not actually made until September 28, 1927. The justice of the peace then had no jurisdiction to hear or grant the motion for relief.

[3] The respondent contends that the notice of the rendition of judgment which was served upon the defendants was invalid because it was not "signed by the justice," as required by section 893 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads, in part: "Notice of the rendition of judgment must be given to the parties to the action in writing signed by the justice." This requirement, however, does not apply to judgments by default. Ever since the adoption of the Codes of California, pt. 2, tit. 11, c. 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which section 893 is contained, the following heading has existed: "Judgments (other than by default) in Justices' Courts." This chapter heading should be considered in construing the provisions of all sections therein contained (23 Cal. Jur. 772, § 147), and is controlling in its application to the present action, since it specifically excepts default judgments from the effect of section 893, supra.

Section 859, supra, does require the service of notice of the rendition of a judgment as a prerequisite to application for relief from default. No specific form of notice with respect to such default judgments, however, is prescribed. The notice of the entry of judgment which was given in the present case was therefore sufficient to set in motion the ten-day limitation of time within which the application for relief must be made. It follows that, since the application for relief was not made within the time prescribed by section 859, supra, the justice's court was without jurisdiction to set the default judgment aside, and the writ of certiorari should have been granted.

For the reasons assigned, the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied, and the judgment is reversed, with direction to instruct the justice's court to vacate its order setting aside the default judgment.

HALL et al. v. KING. (Civ. 6450.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 12, 1929.

1. Partnership ⇨64—Judgment for partners on note payable to trade-name must be reversed, where documentary evidence showing partners published certificate disclosing persons in firm was inherently defective (Civ. Code §§ 2466, 2468; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a; Rule 38 of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal).

Where documentary evidence, produced when court made order, within Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, and rule 38 of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, permitting parties to produce additional evidence on issue whether plaintiffs had done business under name of payee, in effort to show that plaintiffs, suing as copartners on note payable to trade-name, had filed and published certificate required by Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, showing names of persons interested in copartnership, was so inherently defective that no competent proof of issue was made, judgment for plaintiffs must be reversed.

2. Brokers ⇨46—Exclusive agency agreement binds owner only to refrain from selling land through another.

Exclusive agency binds owner to refrain from selling land through any other real estate agent, but does not mean that he may not sell it himself personally and directly, if he finds purchaser on his own account.

3. Brokers ⇨8(3) — Evidence held to show agreement to pay commission for sale of land, satisfying statute of frauds.

In action on note and for broker's commission for sale of real estate, evidence held sufficient to show agreement to pay commission, writing being sufficient to satisfy statute of frauds, and oral dealings of parties interpreting writing as present agreement to pay commission, since agreement need not be entirely in writing.

4. Brokers ⇨86(4, 5)—Evidence held to show plaintiffs were procuring cause of sale, and purchasers were ready and willing.

Evidence in action on note and to recover broker's commission held sufficient to support court's finding that plaintiffs were procuring cause of sale, and that they had found purchaser who proved ready and willing to buy, and who did buy.

5. Brokers ⇨56(3)—Brokers, suing for commission, need not argue that owner prevented sale of land by them, but only that he accomplished sale to purchaser first found by them.

Where sale of property was made to purchaser found by brokers, it was not necessary for brokers, in action for commission, to argue that owner prevented sale by them, but only that owner accomplished sale to purchaser first found by them.

6. Brokers ⇨79—Judgment for broker's commission held not erroneous, because based on express contract, while complaint declared on common count, since contract executed except as to payment may be declared on in indebitatus assumpsit at plaintiffs' option.

In action for broker's commission for sale of land, judgment for plaintiffs held not erroneous, because based on express contract, while complaint declared on common count, since express contract, which has been fully executed, and under which nothing remains to be done by defendant, except payment of money, may be declared on in indebitatus assumpsit at option of plaintiffs.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Frank D. Hall and Sidney C. Baker, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Hall & Baker, against W. S. King. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part, with directions.

Derby, Sharp, Quinby & Tweedt and Derby, Single & Sharp, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. Harold Caulfield, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiffs recovered judgment upon two counts: First, $300 balance due upon a promissory note, together with attorney fees and costs; and, second, $500 for real estate broker's commission. Defendant appeals.

The plaintiffs sued in the style as above set forth in the title of this cause. The promissory note sued upon was made payable to the order of "Hall Baker Co." No assignment of the note from Hall Baker Co. to Hall & Baker was alleged or proven, but judgment was nevertheless given plaintiffs, apparently upon the theory that the payee of the note was in fact the plaintiffs above named. Defendant's objection to the introduction of the note in evidence upon the ground of variance in this respect was overruled by the court.

Defendant pleaded as a special defense in his answer that plaintiffs had not filed a copartnership certificate as required by law. The court found this allegation to be untrue. Since the trial of the case the Supreme Court, in Andrews v. Glick, 272 P. 587, has held that the name "Andrews-Cordano Plumbing Company" was a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, and, therefore, its sole members, Andrews and Cordano, were required to file a certificate under Civ. Code, § 2466, showing the names of the persons interested in the company, before maintaining that action. Under this authority, and the cases cited therein, while the name "Hall & Baker" is not a fictitious name, nor one not showing the names of the persons interested, the name "Hall Baker Co." does come within the meaning of the section. The penalty for not filing the copartnership certificate is the inability of such firm or its assignee to maintain any action upon or on account of any contract or transaction had under such name. Civ. Code, § 2468. The promissory note sued upon in the first count of this action is, prima facie, such a contract or transaction, because it was made payable to "Hall Baker Co."

[1] Upon the record it would be the duty of this court to reverse the judgment given upon the first count, which would result in a new trial upon the sole issue of whether the plaintiffs were barred from maintaining action upon this count, because of having accepted the note made payable to Hall Baker Co. and thus doing business under a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners, and without having filed and published the certificate as required by Civ. Code, § 2466. Such an order for a partial new trial was made in Rudneck v. So. Calif. M. & R. Co., 184 Cal. 274, 193 P. 775. This court, desiring to avoid the disproportionate delay and expense of returning this $300 cause of action for a new trial, made an order on its own motion, after submission and consideration of this appeal, permitting the parties to produce in this court additional evidence upon this issue. The order was as broad in its terms as permitted by section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure and rule 38 of the rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal. It would have permitted respondents to produce evidence that, although the note happened to be made payable to Hall Baker Co., nevertheless the plaintiffs had in fact never done business under that name. The evidence produced and offered in this court, however, showed that respondents elected a different course. They produced documentary evidence in an effort to show that since the making of our said order, and before the final hearing date for such additional evidence, they had filed and published the certificate required by section 2466 of the Civil Code, showing the names of the persons interested in Hall Baker Co. to be the respondents herein. However, the documents offered for that purpose are so inherently defective that no competent proof of the issue has been made, and the judgment on the first count must be reversed.

The second count, as pleaded in the amended complaint, was in the form of indebitatus assumpsit for the agreed price of $500 for services of plaintiffs as real estate agents. Evidence under this count showed a transaction with the plaintiffs in the name of Hall & Baker, which is not a fictitious name, nor one not designating the persons interested in the partnership. Defendant does not claim, and did not plead in his answer, that other persons were interested in the partnership besides the two plaintiffs whose names appear in the designation "Hall & Baker."

Plaintiffs' bill of particulars, served upon defendant's demand, set forth a writing executed by defendant on August 21, 1925, which, after dealing with other matters, read: "Should I at a later date want to sell the * * * above lot * * * Hall & Baker are to have an exclusive authorization so to do and in the event of sale their commission is to be $500." The bill stated that plaintiffs, acting on said last-quoted part of said agreement, undertook to sell said property, listing the same, and in particular specifying the following services: That Baker had held several conversations with a prospective purchaser, Linehan; that plaintiffs did not recall the exact dates of said services, but alleged that they were between March 15, and May 14, 1926; that during said period plaintiff Hall advised defendant of said efforts to sell; that thereafter defendant sold the property to said Linehan, and had not paid plaintiffs the agreed commission. The court found that plaintiffs were the procuring cause of said sale, and gave plaintiffs judgment for the $500 commission accordingly.

The attitude of plaintiffs at the trial, as shown by their objections to testimony, was that they were entitled to the commission, no matter to whom nor by whom, nor how the property was sold, so long as it was in fact sold. The court's findings, however, are that the plaintiffs were the procuring cause of the sale. On this appeal the argument of respondents runs along the line that plaintiffs were prevented from performing the contract by the sale of the property by the owner. We think the court's view was the correct one.

[2] The agreement was an exclusive agency, not an agreement giving the exclusive right to sell. An exclusive agency agreement binds the owner to refrain from selling through any other real estate agent, but does not mean that he may not sell it himself personally and directly, if he finds a purchaser on his own account. Waterman v. Boltinghouse, 82 Cal. 659, 23 P. 195; Snook v. Page, 29 Cal. App. 246, 155 P. 107; California Land Security Co. v. Ritchie, 40 Cal. App. 246, 258, 180 P. 625.

[3] The written agreement is in an unusual form. Appellant claims it is only an agreement to employ plaintiffs at a future date. Plaintiff Baker's testimony was that, when he told defendant that he was trying to sell to Linehan, defendant said, "That is good; try and sell it;" that, when he asked defendant for a contract, defendant replied that none was necessary, that plaintiffs already had an agreement, and that when the property was sold, no matter who sold it, plaintiffs would get the $500 commission; that he must have talked with defendant 50 times, because he was in the office every day. In view of these conversations with defendant, the agreement to pay a commission is sufficiently proven. The writing is sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds, and the oral dealings of the parties interpret the writing as a present agreement to pay a commission. The agreement need not be entirely in writing. Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 639, 25 P. 130.

The evidence is attacked as insufficient to show that plaintiffs were the procuring cause of the sale. It is claimed that plaintiffs did not perform the function of real estate brokers, so as to entitle them to the commission, because they did not procure a contract of sale, nor introduce the buyer to defendant, nor obtain from Linehan, the purchaser, any declaration of willingness to buy. In this connection the evidence is analyzed in an attempt to demonstrate the plaintiffs' activities were on and after March 15th, while defendant's sale to Linehan was before that time, to wit, on March 11th, pursuant to conversations on the 8th and 9th. The testimony on this point was substantially as follows:

Plaintiff Hall had one conversation with Linehan, when he came into plaintiffs' office, in the presence of Mr. Otto Nagel, of the Mercantile Trust Company. This he said was in the latter part of March, 1926. He subsequently reported this to defendant, who said, "That is good." Plaintiff Baker said he had his first conversation with Linehan, in which he urged Linehan to buy the property, "about March 15th, the first of March, 1926, around there somewhere." This was on the street in the presence of said Nagel. That he had three or four more conversations with Linehan along the same line. On cross-examination he said his first conversation could have been between the first of the year to March; that Linehan put him off; that he reported to defendant King, who said, "That is good; try to sell it to him." Nagel testified, also, that he was present at the conversation between Hall and Linehan, and between Baker and Linehan; that plaintiffs praised the property, urging Linehan to buy it, Linehan asking questions about it, feeling them out as to their idea on the property. Without specifying the date, Nagel said Linehan came to him and persuaded him to negotiate with defendant for the sale, stating that he had a client, Dr. Wall, who would buy, and that he did not want to go directly to defendant, for fear he would boost the price. Nagel did so, and found King willing to sell. Two or three days later, which was March 11th, Nagel, being branch manager of the bank, issued a cashier's check at Linehan's request, and drew up a receipt which defendant King and wife signed, acknowledging receipt of $2,650 from Mercantile Trust Company as first payment on the purchase price of the property, and specifying terms of sale. Two months later, on May 14, 1926, the deal was closed through a title company by delivery of a deed. King testified that not until he signed this deed on the day last named did he know that any one other than the Mercantile Trust Company was the purchaser. The deed was made to Seymour and Linehan and wife, at the request of the title company. King testified that he had had no previous negotiations or dealings with Linehan, and did not know that Nagel, nor Mercantile Trust Company, were acting for Linehan.

Now, as to the dates of the services of plaintiffs in endeavoring to sell to Linehan, it is to be noticed that plaintiff Baker's testimony does not definitely place them on and subsequent to March 15th, but states they could be prior. Nagel does not fix the date. Asked if he went to plaintiff's office with Linehan after the $2,650 deposit was made, Nagel said he did not know. Baker's testimony, that defendant said, "Go ahead," and sell to Linehan when informed of Baker's efforts in that direction, certainly indicates plaintiffs' dealing with Linehan antedated Nagel's deposit receipt of March 11th. In view of the uncertainty of dates, we must assume that the court believed Baker's testimony, and that, at the time he reported his activities to King, the latter had not yet signed the binding receipt to sell to the Mercantile Trust Company.

[4] The foregoing facts were competent to prove that plaintiffs first interested Linehan in the purchase of the property, that he was moved by the interest thus aroused in him by the plaintiffs, and went about the business of purchasing the property from the owner through the bank or Nagel without further use of the plaintiffs' services. His exact reasons for doing this are not shown. They are not material, because it does not appear that his action in so doing was caused by any neglect of a broker's duties on the part of the plaintiffs. The evidence, therefore, supports the court's finding that plaintiffs were the procuring cause of the sale. The broker's duties, which must be performed in order to earn the commission, are fully defined in Twogood v. Monnette, 191 Cal. 103, 107, 215 P. 542, and the plaintiffs' services in this case come within its terms. They found a purchaser who proved ready and willing to buy, and who did buy.

[5] If it is true, as contended by appellant, that he did not know, when he agreed to sell to Mercantile Trust Company, that the real purchaser was the same Linehan whom respondents had worked on and spoken to appellant about, that fact would not subtract anything from the services performed by the respondents. Inasmuch as the sale was made to the purchaser found by the respondents, under the circumstances of this case, it is not necessary for respondents to argue that appellant prevented a sale by them, but only that appellant accomplished the sale to the purchaser first found by them.

[6] Appellant contends that the judgment is erroneous, in that it is based upon an express contract, while the complaint declares upon a common count. We are not able to find that this point was raised at the trial, and in view of the bill of particulars served we cannot see how appellant was in any way prejudiced, if in fact it amounted to a variance. It has been held that an express contract, which has been fully executed, and under which nothing remains to be done by defendant, except the payment of money, which is nothing more than the law would imply against him, may be declared upon in indebitatus assumpsit at the option of the plaintiffs. Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 258, 23 P. 127, quoting Greenleaf on Evidence; Willett & Burr v. Alpert, 181 Cal. 652, 659, 185 P. 976, quoting 5 Cor. Jur. 1386-1388. Such is the nature of the contract sued upon here. The judgment was given upon that theory; i. e., for a money debt due upon a contract duly performed by respondents.

The judgment upon the second count is therefore affirmed, and the judgment upon the first count is reversed, with direction to the trial court to retry the sole issue of respondents' right to maintain the action upon the note in suit, neither party to recover costs on appeal.

IN RE ROACH'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6727.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 6, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨69—Court can enjoin widow as administratrix fraudulently holding out of inventory properties, which, together with those set aside, exceed in aggregate $2,500 in value.

If widow appointed administratrix fraudulently held out of inventory properties of the estate, which, together with properties which she asked to have set aside, would make an aggregate in excess of $2,500 in value, court could take action to prevent her from so doing.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨69—Contention that administratrix as widow held out property in excess of $2,500 in value out of husband's estate held without merit.

Contention that administratrix as widow fraudulently held out of inventory property of estate of her deceased husband in excess of $2,500 in value held without merit, where total properties actually set aside amounted in value to $1,398.22, and record did not disclose value of real estate nor value of any other items, the total of which would make the estate exceed $2,500.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨66—Bank account in name of husband and wife jointly held survivor account, which administratrix was not obliged to include in inventory.

Where objections to inventory of widow as administratrix alleged that bank account not included was separate property of deceased husband, but that it stood in name of husband and wife, and there was no evidence regarding any bank account whatever, court may assume that bank account was what is known as a survivor account, and therefore administratrix was not obliged to return any part of bank account in inventory, since allegations of pleading were tantamount to charge of fraud, and fraud is never presumed.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨29(2)—Where hearing on application for letters of administration resulted adversely to son's contentions, he should have proceeded to commence appropriate action.

Where hearing on application for letters of administration resulted adversely to contentions of deceased's son by his first marriage, son should have proceeded to commence an appropriate action immediately, since all litigation should be promptly heard and determined.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨69—Court held not to have abused discretion in overruling objections to inventory and petition for removal of administratrix six months after appointment.

Where son of deceased by first marriage filed objections to inventory of administratrix, and petitioned for her removal at the end of six months, when final application to set aside estate to widow was made, and facts in record showed that son was not acting in good faith, discretion of trial court in overruling objections to inventory and denying petition for removal was not abused.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Petition by Marie Roach, administratrix and widow of Joseph Roach, deceased, to set aside the entire estate to her, after which Joseph Francis Roach filed objections to inventory, and petitioned for the removal of the administratrix. Order overruling objections and denying petition for the removal of the administratrix, and, from an order setting aside the estate to the widow, Joseph Francis Roach appeals. Affirmed.

Matthew A. McCullough, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Kington & Cunningham, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Joseph Roach died intestate in the city and county of San Francisco on the 3d day of March, 1928. He left him surviving a widow and a minor daughter by that widow, and also a son, about 30 years of age, who was an offspring of a former marriage. On the 26th of March, 1928, the widow applied for letters of administration. In her petition she named the assets as including four different bank accounts in the total sum of $1,510.22; five bonds, $250; one automobile, $500. Later, letters were issued to her, and subsequently an inventory and appraisal was filed. Thereafter the widow filed a petition setting forth that the net value of the estate, after the payment of the debts, was $1,398.22, and praying for an order that the entire estate should be set aside to her. After notice duly given, the stepson, Joseph F. Roach, appeared, and filed "Objections to inventory and petition for removal of administratrix." The petition and the objections came on for hearing on the same date. The trial court overruled the objections and denied the petition for the removal of the administratrix, and thereupon granted the petition of the administratrix as prayed. From that order the stepson has appealed.

[1-3] In his brief the appellant has gone outside of the record and has stated many things that do not appear in the record brought up. The respondent has done the same. We will not attempt to follow those excursions. In his pleading the appellant alleged that the administratrix had neglected to return in the inventory lot 21 in block 4 of Holly Park tract in San Francisco. He alleged it was separate property of the deceased. He also alleged that the administratrix had not returned in the inventory $9,000 drawn from the San Francisco Bank, which moneys were also alleged to be the separate property of the deceased "carried in the names of the deceased, Joseph Roach and Marie Roach." The appellant made no attempt to introduce any evidence regarding any bank account whatsoever. In offering his proof, it soon appeared from the evidence presented by the appellant that before he died the deceased executed a deed to the piece of real estate in question. In reply to the court's question, counsel stated, "I am trying to show that the decedent, Joseph Roach, was not capable at the time he executed his deed, or did not understand whether it was a deed or a will." After considerable discussion between court and counsel, the court remarked that, if counsel considered there was anything irregular about the deed, appellant could go ahead by a proper proceeding to have the irregularity determined. On that evidence the objection was submitted. The remark made by the trial court was certainly correct as a general proposition. Simonton v. Los Angeles T. & S. Bank, 192 Cal. 651, 221 P. 368; Howard v. Howard, 67 Cal. App. 56, 226 P. 984. We do not understand the appellant to contend otherwise. However, we do understand him to take the position that, if the respondent fraudulently held out of the inventory properties of the estate of the decedent which, together with the properties which she asked to have set aside, would make an aggregate in excess of $2,500 in value, then and in that event the trial court should have stayed its hand. Conceding this contention to be sound, the record does not support the contention of the appellant. The total properties asked to be set aside, and which were actually set aside, were of the total sum of $1,398.22. The record does not disclose the value of the real estate nor the value of any other items the total of which would make the estate exceed $2,500. In his pleading the appellant alleges that the bank account of $9,000 was separate property, but that it stood in the name of the husband and wife. Bearing in mind that the pleading of the appellant is tantamount to a charge of fraud and that fraud is never presumed, we may assume that the bank account was what is known as a survivor account and therefore that there was no reason why the administratrix should have returned any part of that bank account in the inventory.

[4-6] Although the record is not complete, nevertheless it appears that on the hearing of the application for letters the same questions now in dispute were presented to the trial court. After hearing those matters, the trial court ordered letters issued to the administratrix. In doing so it held in effect that a bona fide claim adverse to the estate does not disqualify one from being appointed administrator. It has been so held. In re Bauquier, 88 Cal. 302, 26 P. 178, 532. Having done so, and without any new fact appearing, the controversy as delineated would not justify the removal, at a later date, of the administratrix. It is settled law in all jurisdictions that litigation should be promptly heard and determined. When the hearing on the application for letters resulted adversely to the contention of this appellant, he should have proceeded to commence an appropriate action. This he neglected to do. At the end of six months, when the final application came on for hearing, he came forward making the same contentions. Conceding that the trial court might have postponed the hearing, or might have rendered a decree reserving any rights of this appellant, it was not bound to do so. The appellant was appealing to the discretion of the trial court. The facts contained in the record did not satisfy the mind of the trial court that the appellant was acting in good faith. We are quite unable to say that there was any abuse of discretion.

We find no error in the record. The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

PEOPLE v. ROSSEAU. (Cr. 1846.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. Aug. 2,

1. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 236(13)—Uncontradicted evidence held sufficient to show that substance of bottle seized contained more than legal content of alcohol fit for beverage purposes.

In prosecution for unlawful selling of whisky, uncontradicted evidence as to contents of bottle seized held sufficient to show that substance sold contained more than legal content of alcohol fit for beverage purposes.

2. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 134—Beverage containing alcoholic content of one-half of 1 per cent. or more, denounced as illegal, is "intoxicating liquor."

"Intoxicating liquor" is a beverage containing an alcoholic content of one-half of 1 per cent. or more, which the national, state, or municipal legislative bodies may denounce as illegal.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Intoxicating Liquor.]

3. Criminal law $\S$ 493—Evidence held to justify jury in concluding that witness, testifying contents of bottle seized was moonshine, had tasted it; "sample."

Where witness testified that he actually sampled contents of bottle seized at time of purchase from accused, and that it was necessary for him to taste every sample he got, and that he knew it was moonshine because of the taste of it, evidence held to justify jury in concluding that witness had tasted contents of bottle, since word "sample," used in this sense, may certainly mean taste.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Third Series, Sample.]

4. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 239(5)—Instruction defining intoxicating liquor to include enumerated beverages, and to convict if satisfied that accused sold intoxicating liquor unlawfully, as charged, held not erroneous.

In prosecution for selling liquor, instruction defining intoxicating liquor to include enumerated beverages, and that, if jury is satisfied that defendant sold intoxicating liquor unlawfully, as charged in information, they should find him guilty, held not objectionable, because enumerating various kinds of liquors prohibited, since court takes judicial notice that whisky is an alcoholic liquor, that it is intoxicating, and may be used as a beverage, especially when issue involves moonshine whisky.

5. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 242—Sentence on conviction for selling liquor under state law should conform to provisions of National Prohibition Act.

Period of imprisonment after conviction for selling intoxicating liquor under state law should conform to provisions of National Prohibition Act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; O. K. Morton, Judge.

Ben Rosseau was convicted of selling intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Fred Duffy, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant in this case was found guilty upon an information charging that he unlawfully sold whisky containing more than one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol. A motion for a new trial thereafter interposed in his behalf was denied, and he appeals from the judgment and from the order denying said motion.

[1, 2] It is insisted that the evidence adduced by the people entirely failed to show that the substance sold contained more than the legal content of alcohol, or that it was fit for beverage purposes. Four men drove to the defendant's house, one of whom asked him for a pint of whisky, for which he demanded $2 in advance, and was so paid. He disappeared for three or four minutes, delivered to the purchaser a package containing a bottle, the contents of which three of them testified was "moonshine whisky," and was immediately arrested. The arresting officer testified that for a number of years he had known what liquor was, that prior to entering upon his official duties he had tasted liquor of all brands and was familiar therewith, and that during the last nine preceding months he had been required to taste samples of liquor. The second witness swore that the defendant at first did not want to sell them whisky, but when reminded that they had been there before, he filled their order. This witness testified that, from his experience with liquor since he was a boy in Tennessee, and from sampling it and having the same analyzed by a chemist, he knew the various kinds, and knew the contents of the bottle in question to be whisky. The third witness related the circumstances of the arrest, testifying that he knew the taste of whisky, and that the contents of said bottle was intoxicating liquor.

All of the evidence offered by the defendant was to the effect that he had no liquor, that he sold none to the officers, and he did not deliver any package to them. No evidence was offered which tended to show that the bottle, if it was so sold, contained poison, or was sold or intended for medicinal purposes. Two of the witnesses testified that it contained whisky, and another that its contents were intoxicating liquor. Witnesses similarly qualified have heretofore testified as to the quality and character of liquors, and such evidence has been upheld as sufficient to support the judgments of convictions. People v. Ellena, 56 Cal. App. 428, 205 P. 701; People v. Silva, 67 Cal. App. 351, 227 P. 976. "Intoxicating liquor" is a beverage containing an alcoholic content of one-half of 1 per centum or more, which the national, state, or municipal legislative bodies may denounce as illegal. Ex parte Simmons, 199 Cal. 590, 250 P. 684. Hence the jury were entitled to believe the testimony of the people's witnesses that a bottle of whisky was purchased from the defendant, and, this being so, the evidence as to its contents stands uncontradicted, and the allegations of the information were established by substantial evidence.

[3] The contention of appellant that the record does not show that any witness actually tasted the liquor in question cannot be fairly upheld. One witness informed the jury that it was moonshine "because of the taste of it"; he actually sampled the contents of the bottle at the time he bought it from the defendant, and that it is necessary for him to taste every sample he gets. It would be hypertechnical to say that the jury were not justified in concluding from this testimony that the witness had tasted the beverage. The word "sample" used in this sense may certainly mean to "taste."

[4] It is complained that the trial court erroneously instructed the jury that "intoxicating liquor" is legally construed to include alcohol, brandy, whisky, rum, gin, beer, and wine or other liquor containing one-half of 1 per centum or more of alcohol by volume, which are fit for beverage purposes, and that if they should find that the liquor in question was whisky, it need not be proved to have been fit for beverage purposes; that the sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited, except in exempted cases, and, if satisfied that the defendant sold intoxicating liquor unlawfully as charged in the information, they should find him guilty. If this instruction be attacked upon the ground that it enumerates the various kinds of liquors prohibited by the statute, it should be noticed that following this explanation the jury's attention was confined to the sale of whisky, an intoxicating liquor, "as charged in the information."

As was said in People v. Gray, 67 Cal. App. 549, 228 P. 358, wherein it appeared that a witness had tasted the contents of bottles sold by the defendant and testified that they contained whisky: "This evidence completely answers the two objections made by the appellant to the effect that the evidence failed to show that the liquor sold was fit for beverage purposes, and that it failed to show that the liquor was intoxicating. In People v. Mueller, 168 Cal. 526-528, 143 P. 750, it was held that the court takes judicial notice that wine is an alcoholic liquor, that it is intoxicating and may be used as a beverage. The same rule would apply when the issue before the court is as to whether or not a particular liquor is whisky. Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 5; 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 198. See, also, People v. Allen, 37 Cal. App. 180, 174 P. 374; People v. Ellena, 56 Cal. App. 428, 205 P. 701." It has been also held that this is particularly true when the issue involves moonshine whisky. U. S. v. Golden (D. C.) 1 F.(2d) 543.

[5] The period of imprisonment fixed by the judgment is excessive. It should be modified, so as to conform to the provisions of the National Prohibition Act.

The judgment, modified as indicated herein, and order denying a new trial, are affirmed.

v. Alfred VOYCE, Jr., et al., Defendants;
Alfred VOYCE, Jr., Appellant.

E. J. GALLAGHER, Plaintiff, v. J. W. WRIGHT & SONS INVESTMENT CO., a Corporation, et al., Defendants. (Civ. 6660.)

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California. July 24, 1929.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Raymond D. Williamson, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Oscar Samuels and Jacob Samuels, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The opinion in the above-entitled action filed July 12, 1929, 279 P. 490, was responsive to the appeal taken in that certain action numbered 146089 of the records of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco. By stipulation of the parties another action numbered 146087, E. J. Gallagher, Plaintiff, v. J. W. Wright & Sons Investment Co., a Corporation, et al., Defendants, records of the same court, involving identical points, was consolidated with the action first named, and it was further stipulated that the decision of this court in the action first named should control and constitute the decision on appeal in the action last named. Therefore the judgment in action 146087 of the records of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, is affirmed.

Escape —Person escaping from state hospital for narcotic addicts held not guilty of offense under statute relating to escape of "prisoners"; "patient" (Narcotic Rehabilitation Act, § 3; Pen. Code, § 107).

Person committed to state hospital for narcotic addicts under Narcotic Rehabilitation Act, § 3 (St. 1927, p. 149), who thereafter escapes, or attempts to escape, from such hospital, is not guilty of any offense under Pen. Code, § 107, relative to escape of "prisoners," who are persons in legal custody charged with some crime or public offense, since one committed to state narcotic hospital for treatment is more properly classified as "patient."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Patient; Prisoner.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Richard Mackie was accused of having escaped from the State Narcotic Hospital, and, from a judgment dismissing the information, the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and William R. McKay, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. To an information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county, wherein it was charged that the defendant and respondent "did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously and intentionally escape from the lawful care, custody and control of the State Narcotic Hospital at Spadra, Los Angeles County, California, and * * * then and there being in the lawful care, custody and control of the said Hospital and the said Superintendent thereof, under and by virtue of a valid commitment issued by the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of San Francisco, on or about October 16th, 1928, adjudging said defendant to be a drug addict, in accordance with the provisions of that certain Act and Statute entitled and known as the 'Narcotic Rehabilitation Act,' Statutes of 1927, approved April 9th, 1927, - * * and more particularly section 3 of said Act," the defendant and respondent filed a general demurrer alleging "that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense." The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the information. From this ruling the district attorney has appealed.

Section 107 of the Penal Code, under which the information was drawn, reads as follows: "Every prisoner charged with or convicted of a felony who is confined in any jail or prison or an inmate of any public training school or reformatory or county hospital, or who is engaged on any county road or other county work or who is in the lawful custody of any officer or person, who escapes or attempts to escape from such jail, prison, public training school, reformatory or county hospital, or from the custody of * * * any officer or person in whose lawful custody he is, is guilty of a felony and is punishable as provided in section one hundred eight of the Penal Code."

The sole question here involved is whether or not a person committed to a state hospital for narcotic addicts who thereafter escapes, or attempts to escape, from such hospital, comes within the purview of the above-quoted section of the Penal Code. While the section in question, by reason of its extended wording and numerous phrases, more or less connected by disjunctives and modifying clauses, presents the opportunity for varying interpretations, a careful examination of the section, together with its history, would seem to leave no doubt but that its provisions were intended by the Legislature to be limited to those who have been charged with a public offense and while in legal custody, either awaiting trial or after conviction, escape, or attempt to escape, from the prison or other place where the custodial restraint is being exercised. The language at the outset, "Every prisoner," etc., would seem to limit the application of this section to those who are "prisoners." The term "prisoner" is commonly used in law to designate a person in legal custody charged with some crime or public offense. And, while it is true the section includes the words "county hospital" and "reformatory," as well as "jail" and "prison," these institutions are included because quite commonly persons charged with crimes are detained in the county hospital pending trial, or committed to some reformatory. In the case of In re Haines, 195 Cal. 605, 234 P. 883, the opinion includes an extended and thorough discussion of the history and purpose of section 107 of the Penal Code. The opinion specifically points out that the reason for the inclusion in the section of "county hospitals" and "reformatories" is the fact that those charged with crime are often detained in the county hospital or committed to a reformatory. It would seem to require no discussion to justify the conclusion that the section in question would not be applicable to one charged with insanity, and who, either pending a hearing or subsequent to a court's commitment, escapes from the county hospital.

Clearly, the section in question is applicable only to those escaping, or attempting to escape, who are in custody charged with some public offense.

It may be urged that one committed to the state hospital for narcotic addicts is there detained as a prisoner, and that in some way in so becoming a narcotic addict a public offense has been committed.

The law under which the defendant was committed to the state hospital was adopted in 1927, and is entitled the "Narcotic Rehabilitation Act" (Stats. 1927, c. 89, p. 149). Among other things, it provides for a method of bringing into court those who have become addicted to the use of narcotics, and thereafter, upon a hearing before the court without a jury, the court is empowered to commit such person to the state hospital for narcotic addicts for a period of not less than eight months and not more than two years. The very title of the act, as also its provisions, indicate its purpose as social rather than penal. The fact of being a narcotic addict is nowhere denounced as a crime, nor is there language in the act that justifies such an interpretation. It is true that the addict is restrained of his liberty while in the hospital, but that is a circumstance made necessary because of the effect of the drugs upon the conduct of the addict and the length of time required to accomplish his cure. The superintendent or medical director has the power, when in his opinion a cure has been accomplished, to discharge the addict. The entire act is clearly intended for the treatment of the addict from the standpoint of accomplishing a cure of the disease. It will be noted that the act nowhere provides for a jury trial for one charged with being a narcotic addict, as would be his right if he were charged with a public offense.

Addiction to the use of narcotics is to-day recognized as a disease rather than a crime. One committed to the narcotic state hospital for treatment would more properly be classified as a patient than as a criminal. His status is reasonably comparable to that of one charged with insanity and committed to the state hospital for treatment.

From the foregoing considerations, it follows that the information does not state a public offense and that the demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

GUNDER v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR RIVERSIDE COUNTY et al. ★
(Civ. 6156.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 9, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 7, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 7, 1929.

1. Courts ⇨212—Supreme Court had exclusive appellate jurisdiction of proceeding to cancel property settlement (Const. art. 6, § 4).

Proceeding for cancellation of property settlement between husband and wife and for accounting was of an equitable nature, and lay within exclusive appellate jurisdiction of Supreme Court, under Const. art. 6, § 4.

2. Prohibition ⇨16—Where appeal from judgment canceling property settlement and ordering accounting was pending in Supreme Court, District Court of Appeal would not issue writ of prohibition restraining further proceedings by court and referees appointed.

Where appeal was pending in Supreme Court from judgment canceling property settlement between husband and wife and ordering property retransferred, and ordering an accounting, and referees had been appointed, District Court of Appeal would not issue writ of prohibition restraining further proceedings in case by lower court and persons named as referees, on ground that order appointing referee was improper.

Petition by Agnes Gunder for writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Riverside, and others, to restrain further proceedings in a certain action. Writ denied.

McAdoo, Neblett, O'Connor & Clagett and E. H. Mitchell, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Woodruff, Musick, Pinney & Hartke, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. On October 23, 1926, suit was filed in the superior court of Riverside county by Samuel H. Gunder against his then wife, the petitioner herein, for the cancellation of a property settlement theretofore consummated between them. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff on November 4, 1927, declaring null and void a quitclaim deed and a bill of sale, awarding him possession of the real and personal property, and ordering an accounting by the defendant. A referee was therein appointed to take an account of all property and moneys received by the defendant from the plaintiff, or through reinvestment of the proceeds thereof, and the defendant was restrained from encumbering, transferring, or removing any of the subject-matter of the suit pending such accounting. Said judgment further provided as follows:

"That upon the rendition of said account of said referee to the court, and the court's approval thereof, said plaintiff is and shall be given a final judgment against said defendant for the immediate possession of any and all personal property, including bonds and money and proceeds thereof in the hands of said defendant, or under her control or any one on her behalf, belonging to said plaintiff, or the value thereof, as well as also for a final judgment in favor of said plaintiff and against said defendant in such amount as the court may find that the plaintiff is entitled to."

The defendant, petitioner herein, appealed to the Supreme Court from "the judgment in the above-entitled action, and each and every part thereof," on November 14, 1927 and the appeal is still pending. Prior to the date last mentioned, and on the 10th day of November, 1927, the plaintiff, Samuel H. Gunder, moved the trial court for the appointment of a receiver, whereupon the same person who had theretofore been appointed referee was designated as such receiver. On May 28, 1928, at the instance of the plaintiff, and without notice, another person was designated as referee in the place and stead of the former, "with full and complete authority to take all necessary steps to receive and hear the accounting specified and required by the court in its certain judgment made and entered in the above-entitled cause on the 4th day of November, 1927." The substituted referee having set a time and place of hearing, petitioner appeared by counsel and objected to any proceedings before him, upon the ground that he had no jurisdiction, which objection was overruled, and the matter was reset for hearing. She then filed in this court a petition for a writ of prohibition, directing that the respondent court and each of the persons named as referees refrain from proceeding in the case of Gunder v. Gunder.

It was objected before the referee, and is here contended as asserted grounds for the writ, that the order appointing him was made more than six months after the entry of judgment, that it was made either ex parte or upon the court's own motion without notice, that it modified in a material respect the judgment from which an appeal had previously been taken, and that all proceedings with respect to an accounting pursuant to the judgment are stayed by the appeal. The respondents contend, regardless of the merits of the proceeding, that since the petitioner seeks to restrain the action of an officer of the trial court, designated and directed to act by a judgment in an equitable proceeding, which is appealable and has been appealed to Supreme Court, this court has no authority to grant the relief prayed.

[1, 2] That the proceeding in the superior court was of an equitable nature is not doubted. It lay within the exclusive appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Const. Cal. art. 6, § 4. Unquestionably this court has jurisdiction, but as a matter of practice and policy, where cases were in the superior court, both the Supreme and District Courts have refused to take jurisdiction when the case involved was one originally appealable to the other court. Favorite v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 263, 184 P. 15, 8 A. L. R. 290; Collins v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 264, 81 P. 509; Estate of Turner, 39 Cal. App. 56, 177 P. 854. If policy indicated this course where no appeal had yet been taken, it seems clear that the reasons therefor apply even more strongly where, as in this instance, an appeal has been taken to the court having original appellate jurisdiction. Should this petition be granted, questions involved in the appeal to the Supreme Court now pending would necessarily be determined by this court. It is urged by the petitioner that the basis of the appeal is not in itself an appealable judgment or order. If this is true, the proper means of removing it is readily at hand in the form of a motion to dismiss.

In the instant case an agreement purporting to adjust property rights has been canceled by the superior court, and real and personal property ordered retransferred. Before this can be accomplished, if at all, a reference and accounting is deemed by the trial court indispensable to a determination of the character and value of the property. The question as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to any judgment canceling the contract, or to any of the property, is now no longer in the superior court, but is pending in the Supreme Court, and the office of the referee having been created in aid of the superior court in discovering and valuing the estate for its purposes, to affirm, modify, or deny his authority in this proceeding we think would be unwise and unwarranted.

The writ of prohibition is denied.

PEOPLE v. YOUNG. (Cr. 1820.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 15, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 12, 1929.

- 1. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Permitting peremptory challenge to juror by prosecution after acceptance by both parties, completion and swearing of jury, and reading of indictment, held prejudicial error (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1068; Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

Under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1068, permitting peremptory challenge to a juror by prosecution after acceptance by both parties, completion and swearing of the jury, and reading of the indictment or statement of the case, held to constitute prejudicial error, requiring reversal, notwithstanding Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, where condition of juror's mind was not such as to entitle prosecution to reject him for cause at any time.

- 2. Criminal law $\S$ 173—Jury having been regularly impaneled and sworn before peremptory challenge was allowed, defendant was placed in "jeopardy."

Where jury was completely and regularly impaneled and sworn before peremptory challenge was allowed, defendant was placed in "jeopardy," which signifies the danger of conviction and punishment which one charged with a criminal offense incurs when duly put on trial before a court of competent jurisdiction and a jury has been charged with his deliverance.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Jeopardy.]

- 3. Criminal law $\S$ 173—Jury has been charged with defendant's deliverance as regards claim of jeopardy when its members have been impaneled and sworn.

A jury is charged with defendant's deliverance as regards claims of jeopardy, when jury's members have been impaneled and sworn.

- 4. Criminal law $\S$ 197—Jeopardy bars another prosecution for same offense or one included therein of which defendant might have been convicted under first prosecution.

Defendant having been placed in jeopardy, it is a bar to another indictment or information for the same offense or for an attempt to commit it or for an offense necessarily included therein of which he might be convicted under the first indictment or information.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

E. J. Young was convicted of grand theft, forgery, and conspiracy to cheat and defraud, and he appeals. Reversed, and defendant ordered discharged.

Hearing denied; WASTE, C. J., and RICHARDS and CURTIS, JJ., voting for a hearing.

Troy Pace, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and W. R. Augustine, of San Francisco, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was charged jointly with two others with having committed grand theft, forgery, and conspiracy to cheat and defraud, in the county of Los Angeles. Having been convicted by a jury of these offenses, he appeals. Since a serious question is raised as to the regularity of the impanelment of the jury, which, if tenable, renders all subsequent proceedings in the trial court nugatory and the judgments invalid, we proceed to consider it at once. The facts in this respect are not controverted by the respondent.

It appears that twelve regular jurors and two alternates were examined and accepted, and the jury were sworn during the forenoon of March 25, 1929. The respective counsel waived reading of the information, and the trial judge stated the case to the jury, whereupon the court recessed until 2 o'clock p. m. of the same day. Upon their return at that time, the court remarked that Lester B. Zillgitt, one of the regular jurors, had communicated the fact that he had learned that one Herbert Smith, a witness for the defendant Young, was a member of the same club as himself, and was a social friend of his, but that he had not previously known that Smith was to be a witness in the case. The juror stated that he did not believe their friendly relations would alter his attitude, but that "those things always have a bearing." Following discussion among counsel, the deputy district attorney asked permission to exercise a peremptory challenge, "even though the juror had been sworn, if there is no objection." Counsel for the defendants objected, stating that Smith was but a character witness and knew nothing about the case. The court overruled their objections, allowed the challenge, and excused the juror. Thereupon appellant's counsel announced: "Your honor, at this time, before the jury is called, I desire to enter a special plea upon behalf of the defendants Young and Smith, and that is a plea of former jeopardy today when the jury was impaneled and sworn and the statement of the court was made to the jury; jeopardy attached at this time." Objection on behalf of the people to such plea was sustained, and Mrs. Dolly B. Cates, who was not an alternate, was called from the venire, impaneled and sworn. It is strenuously insisted by appellant that upon the impanelment of the jury and statement of the case he was placed in jeopardy, and that the withdrawal of an accepted and sworn juror in the afternoon immediately prior to calling of a witness was unauthorized. The respondent contends that the "discovery of the fact of his unfitness to sit as a juror was an unexpected and unusual happening," bringing the case within the provisions of section 1139 of the Penal Code, authorizing the discharge of the jury, after retirement if the illness of one, or other accident or cause, prevents their being kept in deliberation, and within those of section 1141, which provides that, where a jury is discharged or prevented from giving a verdict by reason of accident or other cause, the case may be tried again.

[1] Section 1068 of the Penal Code provides that the challenge "must be taken when the juror appears, and before he is sworn to try the cause; but the court may for cause permit it to be taken after the juror is sworn, and before the jury is completed." We are cited to no authority, nor have we been able to find any, which can be said to have sanctioned the allowance of a peremptory challenge to a juror by the prosecution after the acceptance by both parties, completion and swearing, of the jury, and the reading of the indictment or statement of the case. In any event, it has repeatedly been held in this state that under this section a juror may be challenged after being sworn and before the jury is completed only for cause. People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128; People v. Bemmerly, 87 Cal. 117, 25 P. 266; People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 335, 38 P. 945; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 P. 75; People v. Boren, 139 Cal. 210, 72 P. 899; People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 94 P. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717. It occurs to us that the error in this instance is not and cannot be sufficiently mitigated by the application of the rule that a judgment will not be disturbed if the rights of the defendant do not appear to have been substantially infringed, nor by the provisions of section 4½, art. 6, of the Constitution. The peremptory challenge was not only allowed the people after the jury was completed and they had retired for the noon recess following a statement of the issues as joined, but over the objection of the defendant. Zillgitt had been asked by the court at this stage of the proceedings, after previous examination and acceptance, with eleven other regular jurors and two alternates: "Would the fact that you and Mr. Herbert Smith are quite friendly, on quite friendly relations, make any difference with your attitude in the case?" To which he replied: "I don't believe it would." As has been said, both the common-law and statutory modes of selecting jurors are supported by "the principle, so often repeated, that the right of challenge is a right of rejection, not of choice." Tierney v. United States (C. C. A.) 280 F. 322. The condition of this juror's mind was not such as to entitle the people to reject him for cause at any time, and the limitation of the time for interposing of challenges as before the completion of the jury has been recognized, by decisions of this state in construing section 1068 of the Penal Code. People v. Boren, supra; People v.

Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 347, 19 P. 161; People v. Duncan, 8 Cal. App. 186, 96 P. 414. In the case last cited challenges were held properly denied the defendant, as to jurors who had formed opinions that a murder had been committed, one of whom admitted that he was prejudiced in like cases as to the existence of a conspiracy, but each signified that he could fairly decide upon the evidence presented. The rule is most aptly laid down in People v. Schmitz, supra, wherein numerous decisions of this and other jurisdictions are reviewed, in the following language:

"Section 1068 of the Penal Code provides that a challenge must be taken 'when the juror appears and before he is sworn to try the cause; but the court may for cause permit it to be taken after the juror is sworn and before the jury is completed.' It appears evident that the court could not under the section permit a challenge except 'for cause,' and the cause must have been based on some fact and founded upon a proper showing of facts, upon which the court could have exercised its discretion. If the court, after a juror has been sworn to try the case, can permit him to be challenged without cause, the words 'for cause' should be stricken from the statute. The Code evidently intended that after a juror has been examined, passed, and has taken a solemn oath to try the case he could not then, except for a valid reason, be, at the caprice of one of the parties, discharged. He became a juror in that case, and thus a part of the machinery of the court. He became a part of the tribunal for the purpose of determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant. That tribunal was changed without the consent of the defendant, and in the interest of his adversary. Greer v. Norvill, 3 Hill (S. C.) 262. Defendant had the right to rely upon the fact that the juror had been sworn in exercising his right to his own peremptory challenges. The mandate of the statute appears plain and should have been followed. We know of no case, and none has been called to our attention, in which such challenge was upheld."

But three jurors had there been examined, passed, and sworn to try the case when the challenges in question were allowed as to two of them. Regarding the dismissal of another juror who had read in the paper that he was related to the defendant, and asked to be excused, though he did not know whether the relationship might be "fourth or fifth cousins or something through marriage," it was further said:

"The court, on this showing and nothing more, sustained the challenge to the juror under defendant's objection. The evidence entirely failed to show any relationship by consanguinity or affinity within the fourth degree. In fact it did not show any relationship of the juror to defendant in any degree or in any way. The judge, in ruling upon the challenge, said: 'I think any relationship, no matter how remote, ought to keep a person off the jury.' It was not for the court to set up its judgment against the statute as to the qualifications of a juror. The juror did not know defendant, and did not know of any relationship. He only knew that he had seen something about it in the papers. If this juror could thus be excused without cause, there is no reason why the same thing could not have been repeated as often as the district attorney might have requested it. It is plain that the effect of the ruling was to give to the prosecution an additional peremptory challenge. The defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges, and it must be presumed that the removal of the jurors Harris and Bray without cause, after they had been sworn, was injurious to his rights. Defendant had the right to have the jury impaneled according to the law of the state under which he was being tried. The prosecution did not have the right to arbitrarily dismiss qualified jurors unless it could be done as provided by the Code. The views here expressed are ably supported in an exhaustive opinion written by Mr. Justice Henshaw in People v. Helm (Cal. Sup. [152 Cal. 532]), 93 P. 99. The case was reversed upon the rulings of the trial judge refusing to sustain defendant's challenges to certain jurors on the ground of implied bias. The court said that, if the defendant had been compelled to exhaust his peremptory challenges to relieve himself of jurors who should have been excused by the court for cause, 'the rulings of the court upon such jurors become a most important matter of review.'

"The Code provisions in regard to the impanelment of jurors and their qualifications have in view the right of the defendant to a fair and impartial jury, and one not picked and selected by the prosecution. * * *

The foregoing was reaffirmed in People v. Ruef, 14 Cal. App. 594, 114 P. 61, wherein the Supreme Court, all justices concurring, denied a hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal.

[2-4] The conclusion is unavoidable that error of a serious nature and affecting the substantial rights of the defendant was committed by the sustaining of the peremptory challenge. It is equally clear that, the jury having been completed and regularly impaneled and sworn before the peremptory challenge was allowed, this appealing defendant was in jeopardy. Jeopardy signifies the danger of conviction and punishment which one charged with a criminal offense incurs when duly put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance. People v. Tong, 155 Cal. 579, 102 P. 263, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 481, 132 Am. St. Rep. 110. A jury stands so charged when its members have been impaneled and sworn. People v. Hawkins, 127 Cal. 372, 59 P. 697. His jeopardy is real, and he cannot be again subjected to jeopardy unless the jury be discharged without rendering a verdict, by his consent, or upon some legal necessity resulting from physical causes beyond the control of the court. People v. Hunckeler, 48 Cal. 334; Ex parte McLaughlin, 41 Cal. 211, 10 Am. Dec. 272. If deprived of a verdict because an error of law would result in a mistrial, except as provided by statute therefor, the discharge is equivalent to an acquittal, and is a bar to a subsequent trial. People v. Tong, supra. A defendant having been placed in jeopardy, it is a bar to another indictment or information for the same offense or for an attempt to commit it, or for an offense necessarily included therein, of which he might have been convicted under the first indictment or information. People v. Zeigler, 135 Cal. 462, 67 P. 754, 56 L. R. A. 882.

The judgments are reversed, and the appellant is ordered discharged.

PEOPLE v. THOMAS. (Cr. 1778.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 20, 1929.

1. Criminal law ☞543(1)—Admitting deposition of absent witness given at preliminary examination, on evidence he was nonresident, held not abuse of discretion.

Where state made inquiry as to whereabouts of absent witness, and was informed that witness was no longer resident of state, and no contrary evidence was offered, court did not abuse discretion in permitting deposition of absent witness, given on preliminary examination of defendant, accused of assault with a deadly weapon, to be read to jury at trial.

2. Criminal law ☞1169(2)—Admitting deposition of witness given at preliminary examination held not prejudicial error, being cumulative and corroborated.

Where testimony contained in deposition given at preliminary examination and read at trial of defendant, accused of assault with deadly weapon, was merely cumulative and largely corroborated by defendant, allowing deposition to be read at trial was not prejudicial error.

3. Indictment and information ☞189(2)—Accused, charged with and on trial for commission of assault with deadly weapon, could not be convicted of simple assault.

Where information charged offense of assault with a deadly weapon on person of another, accused could be convicted only of the offense as charged, and no other, and could not be guilty of commission of lesser offense of simple assault, and therefore it was not error to refuse instruction that, although defendant was charged with offense of assault with a deadly weapon, it was within power of jury to find him guilty of simple assault.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

John Thomas was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and Edward B. Patterson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] The first point presented by appellant for a reversal of the judgment is that on the trial of the action the trial court erred in permitting the deposition of a certain witness given at the preliminary examination of defendant to be read in evidence, in that prior to the offer to read such deposition in evidence due diligence was not shown to have been exercised by the prosecution in attempting to locate the witness within the jurisdiction of the trial court. In that connection the record discloses that a deputy sheriff gave testimony to the effect that, in order to serve a subpoena upon the witness in question, he had made various inquiries among several of the friends and acquaintances of the witness in the neighborhood of his former place of residence, and was informed by them that the witness was no longer a resident of the state. As no adverse evidence was offered, notwithstanding the fact that some other evidence was received, particularly with reference to the sending of a telegram by the district attorney, addressed to the absent witness at his supposed place of residence without the state, together with the receipt of a reply to such telegram from some third person—to all of which defendant objected, and as to which there well might be proper question as to its admissibility—it is manifest that, in permitting the deposition of the witness taken upon the preliminary examination of defendant to be read to the jury, the trial court did not abuse its discretion, and therefore that its ruling in the matter cannot be disturbed by this court. 8 Cal. Jur. 129, and cases there cited; People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 576, 77 P. 467; People v. Reilly, 106 Cal. 648, 40 P. 13; People v. Leavens, 12 Cal. App. 178, 184, 106 P. 1103; People v. Edwards, 14 Cal. App. 128, 130, 111 P. 263; People v. Lederer, 17 Cal. App. 369, 373, 119 P. 949; People v. Poo On, 49 Cal. App. 219, 223, 192 P. 1090; People v. Padilla, 81 Cal. App. 528, 531, 254 P. 585; People v. Clayton (Cal. App.) 264 P.

1105. Moreover, the testimony given by such witness was but cumulative of that given by other witnesses, and largely corroborated by the testimony of defendant. It follows that no prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in that regard.

[3] Appellant also complains that the trial court refused to give to the jury an instruction, offered by defendant, to the effect that, although defendant was charged with the offense of assault with a deadly weapon, it was within the power of the jury to find defendant guilty of simple assault. With reference to such specification of error, appellant cites the record herein, which contains evidence from which it might be concluded that, immediately prior to the commission by defendant of the offense specified in the information, defendant had committed a simple assault on the same person whom, according to the allegation in the information, he had thereafter assaulted with a deadly weapon; and it is appellant's contention that, had the jury believed the testimony given in behalf of defendant, a verdict might have been rendered by which defendant would have been acquitted of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, although at the same time he might have been convicted of the offense of simple assault.

Referring to the information herein, it is noticed that defendant was charged with the commission of assault with a deadly weapon, " * * * by shooting with a loaded firearm, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, in and upon the person of another, to wit, Sam McGee, * * * which said assault was likely to and did produce great bodily injury to and upon the person of said Sam McGee." It is apparent that the gist of the accusation was that defendant unlawfully shot Sam McGee. If the charge of the unlawful commission by defendant of the acts constituting the crime were substantiated, he was guilty of the offense charged, and no other. Consequently a verdict of guilt as to the lesser included offense would have been wholly inimical to the facts and the law with reference thereto. There could be no room for a compromise verdict. In the case of People v. Albori (Cal. App.) 275 P. 1017, a question identical with that here under consideration was involved. After a careful consideration of the authorities of this state bearing upon similar situations as to the facts, the court reached the conclusion that no error was committed by the trial court in refusing to give the requested instruction to the jury. Included within the language of the opinion may be found the following:

" * * * There are numerous authorities to the effect that where the evidence is such as to make it clear that if the defendant is guilty at all, he is guilty of the offense charged, and not of any included offense, that it is proper to refuse to instruct the jury that they may convict of an included crime. [Citing authorities.] * * * Had it been established beyond any doubt that the appellant had fired the pistol which injured Contorno and Judson, a refusal to instruct on simple assault would have been proper under the authorities cited. * * * The indictments charged the appellant with having fired the shots, and with nothing else; the people were limited by their choice of words to proof of an offense not less than 'assault with a deadly weapon.'"

On trial of the instant case, defendant admitted that he fired the shot that struck McGee. Since he was on trial for that act alone, it necessarily follows that he was either guilty of the crime of which he was charged, or in that connection that he was guilty of the commission of no criminal offense whatsoever. The conclusion results that no error was committed by the trial court in refusing to give to the jury the instruction to which reference has been had.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

GULLICK v. INTERSTATE DRILLING CO.
et al. (Civ. 6446.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 30, 1929.

Appeal and error §934(1)—Appellate court presumes trial judge intended judgment he signed to be judgment in case, and appeal not dismissed.

Where at close of plaintiff's case defendant moved for nonsuit, which court granted, and subsequently court signed judgment, which, after reciting proceedings and that court had, after due consideration, granted motion for nonsuit, awarded to defendants their costs, and judgment described in notice of appeal was only judgment appearing in judgment roll, appellate court presumed trial judge intended judgment he signed to be judgment in case, and appeal was not dismissed, on ground that judgment subsequently signed was of no force and effect.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Wallace, Judge.

Action by T. M. Gullick against the Interstate Drilling Company and others. Judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Henry M. Lee, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Isaac Pacht, of Los Angeles, for respondents Interstate Drilling Co. and H. Director.

Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, for respondent Zimmerman.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The respondents have made a motion to dismiss the appeal herein on the ground that the judgment appealed from is a nullity, and on the further ground that a reversal of the judgment would be an idle act, and not affect the force or finality of a judgment of nonsuit. The pertinent facts are as follows:

At the close of plaintiff's case, and on October 15, 1928, the defendants and respondents made a motion for a nonsuit, which the court granted. On October 19 the court signed a judgment, which, after reciting the proceedings and that the court had, after due consideration, granted a motion for a nonsuit, awarded to the defendants their costs. On the authority of Burks v. Bronson, 58 Cal. App. 143, 207 P. 1018, it is said by respondents that the order granting the motion is final, and that the judgment subsequently signed is of no force or effect. It is to be observed that the notice of appeal refers only to the judgment signed October 19, 1928, and entered and docketed on October 22, 1928. One further condition of the record must be set down. The judgment described in the notice of appeal is the only order or judgment appearing in the judgment roll contained in the clerk's transcript. The transcript also contains the clerk's certificate that "the foregoing attached papers constitute the judgment roll in this action."

In this condition of the record we must presume that the trial judge intended that the judgment which he signed should be the judgment in the case. In the case relied upon by respondents the "order was entered on the minutes and noted in the register of actions by the clerk." Under the situation there recited, and by virtue of subdivision 5 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it became "effective for all purposes when so entered." But we are faced with a problem somewhat akin to that in Gordon v. Donahue, 79 Cal. 501, 21 P. 970, where we find the following language:

"Measured by the foregoing rule, the judgment should be affirmed, because, if the paper referred to as the findings was not filed until after the entry of the judgment, then it must be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that as the clerk of the trial court was required by section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure, immediately after entering the judgment, to make up the judgment roll, he regularly performed his official duty (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15), and made it up within the proper time, including therein all papers then on file which should have gone into it, and the paper referred to as the findings showing merely, under the signature of the judge thereto, a date subsequent to the time when the judgment roll is presumed to have been completed, need not be regarded as a portion thereof. It then follows that, as no findings appear in the judgment roll, we must presume that they were waived."

Or, in the absence of a showing of a minute order, at least we must assume, in the words of the court in Skaggs v. Taylor, 77 Cal. App. 519, 247 P. 218, that the order was "superseded by the judgment from which an appeal has been taken."

Motion denied.

ABNEY et al. v. BELMONT COUNTRY CLUB PROPERTIES, Inc. (Civ. 6409.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 15, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 14, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 12, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨341(3)—Evidence of vendor's waiver of payments and right to cancel for delinquency held admissible in action for amount paid.

In action to recover amount paid on purchase price of real property for failure to resell, evidence of waiver by vendor of performance in making payments of principal or interest and of vendor's right to cancel for delinquency held admissible.

2. Corporations ⇨432(12)—Inference from evidence not rebutted that vendor corporation, in whose name contract provisions were waived, was owned by agent selling land, supported implied conclusion that vendor was but instrumentality of selling agent.

In action to recover amount paid on purchase price of real property, inference from evidence by plaintiffs that vendor corporation, in whose name selling agent's representative waived certain provisions of contract, was owned by agent, together with vendor corporation's failure to rebut, supported implied conclusion that vendor was but instrumentality of selling agent.

3. Corporations ⇨378—Where two corporations appear same, law and equity to protect third persons' rights treat them as identical.

Where it appears that two business enterprises are owned, conducted, and controlled by same parties, both law and equity will, when necessary to protect rights of third persons, disregard legal fiction that two corporations are distinct entities, and treat them as identical.

4. Corporations ⇨410—Waiver indorsed on contract selling land by one stating selling agent corporation he represented owned vendor corporation bound vendor.

Waiver indorsed on contract for sale of land by one who stated that selling agent corporation owned and controlled defendant vendor corporation sued by purchasers to recover purchase price paid for failure to re-sell as agreed held binding upon vendor.

5. Corporations ⇨410—Purchasers could treat contract selling land as abandoned and sue for amount paid, where vendor corporation of different name giving notice of cancellation, owned selling agent corporation.

Where vendor corporation of different name than one which executed contract to sell land notified purchasers of its determination to cancel contract and retain amount paid thereon, purchasers were justified in treating contract as abandoned and suing to recover amount they had paid, where evidence showed selling agent corporation owned vendor corporation giving purchasers notice.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⇨339—Formal rescission or notice of purchasers' election was not prerequisite to recover amount paid on land, where they received no value and vendor notified of cancellation.

Formal rescission or notice of purchasers' election to rescind contract for sale of land held not prerequisite to action to recover amount paid after vendor corporation owned by selling agent notified them of determination to cancel contract, where purchasers had received nothing of value and as to them there was an entire failure of consideration.

7. Vendor and purchaser ⇨341(2)—Purchasers suing for amount paid on land need not allege and prove they were ready, able, and willing to perform contract, where vendor notified of cancellation.

It was not essential that purchasers suing to recover amount paid on purchase price of land under contract allege and prove that they were ready, able, and willing to carry out contract, where vendor corporation owned by selling agent notified them of determination to cancel contract, and purchasers had not received anything of value.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Parol evidence of selling agent's promise to resell land, if inadmissible, held not prejudicial, where it could not change result.

In action to recover amount paid on purchase price of certain real property for failure to resell it as agreed, admission of parol evidence of promises by selling agent that resale would be made within 30 days, if erroneous, held not prejudicial, where it could not have changed result of trial and explained reason for waiver by vendor corporation owned by selling agent of its right to cancel for failure to make payments.

9. Costs ⇨203—Judgment ⇨314—Judgment filed held erroneous as to costs awarded requiring modification, where cost bill was prematurely filed four days before.

Where decision and judgment were filed on November 22, 1927, awarding plaintiffs $15 as costs, and record showed that their cost bill was filed November 18, 1927, bill was premature and judgment to extent of costs awarded was erroneous on its face requiring modification.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Action by John N. Abney and another against the Belmont County Club Properties, Inc. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Hankins & Hankins, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. E. McCurdy, of San Mateo, and Julian H. Biddle, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover the amount paid on the purchase price of certain real property which plaintiffs agreed to buy from defendant corporation. The agreement was in writing and was dated June 22, 1926. The purchase price was $2,875, of which $720 was paid, the balance being payable in installments of $50 each month with interest. Title to the property was retained by defendant, whose selling agent in the transaction was Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc., also a corporation. The plaintiffs alleged that the execution of the contract and the payment made as above were induced by defendant's promise to resell the property within 30 days at a price fixed by the parties in excess of the purchase price, and the representation that the defendant would require no further payments from plaintiffs; that on August 20, 1926, defendant waived in writing all further payments under the contract and the right therein provided to cancel the same for any delinquency in that regard; that contrary to this agreement defendant failed to resell the property, made demands for further installment payments thereon, and on February 28, 1927, notified the plaintiffs that it elected to cancel the contract and declare forfeited the amount paid by them. These allegations were denied. The trial court found for the plaintiffs and entered judgment for the recovery of the amount paid with interest thereon and costs of suit.

Defendant contends that the findings are unsupported and that these in turn do not support the judgment; that the decision is against law; that the court erred in admitting certain evidence over objection; and that the judgment for costs was improper.

In response to complaints by plaintiffs, one R. K. Reidford conferred with their representative, and on August 20, 1926, indorsed upon the contract of purchase held by them the following: "Further payments a/c of principal or interest in the above are hereby waived.—M. L. & M. by R. K. Reidford." "We waive right to cancel for delinquency.—R. K. Reidford."

[1] Evidence of a waiver by the vendor of performance of such provisions of the contract was admissible (Seals v. Davis, 25 Cal. App. 68, 142 P. 905); and while it is not contended that Reidford was without authority to act for Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc., it is claimed that the indorsements were not binding upon the defendant.

The evidence shows that L. G. Monroe, by whom the sales contract was signed, as president of defendant corporation, also represented officially its corporate agent. Moreover, it appears that the offices of the two corporations were at the same address, and that the demands for payment addressed to plaintiffs bearing date August 25, September 21, and November 7, 1926, respectively, none of which were signed, were headed as follows:

"Belmont Country Club Properties, Inc.

"Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc.

"65 Sutter street."

[2-7] According to the plaintiffs, Reidford, at the time the indorsements were made upon the contract, and in response to their inquiry as to why the name of the defendant, rather than the agent corporation, was indorsed thereon, declared that the defendant corporation was owned by Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc., and on December 31, 1926, the plaintiffs, in a letter directed to defendant after their receipt of the demand last mentioned, stated that Reidford, on its behalf, had waived further payments, together with the right to cancel the contract. The asserted authority of Reidford was not denied by defendant then or in its subsequent letters to the plaintiffs; and, notwithstanding that the relationship between the corporations themselves and with those purporting to represent them was a matter peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, it failed to produce any evidence on this or any other issue at the trial. The inference from the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs, together with defendant's failure to rebut the same—which presumably it would have done had the facts been favorable—support the implied conclusion of the trial court that the defendant was but the instrumentality of Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc., and that the acts of the latter through its agent were those of the defendant. Where such facts appear, both law and equity will, when necessary to protect the rights of third persons, disregard the legal fiction that the two corporations are distinct entities, and treat them as identical. Wenban Est., Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 227 P. 723; McCormick Saeltzer Co. v. Grizzly, etc., Co., 74 Cal. App. 278, 240 P. 32. We conclude, therefore, that the waiver indorsed upon the contract by Reidford was binding upon the defendant; and that the latter having in violation thereof notified the plaintiffs of its determination to cancel the contract and retain the amount paid thereon, the plaintiffs were justified in treating it as abandoned by defendant and suing to recover the amount they had paid. Smith v. Jaccard, 20 Cal. App. 280, 128 P. 1023, 1026; McNeil v. Kredon, 31 Cal. App. 76, 159 P. 818; Seals v. Davis, supra; Pelorian v. Waldman, 54 Cal. App. 116, 201 P. 344. Nor was a formal rescission or a notice of their election to rescind a prerequisite. They had received nothing of value, and as to them there was an entire failure of consideration. Under such circumstances no notice of rescission or offer to restore was necessary before bringing suit. Orton v. Privett, 202 Cal. 754, 262 P. 713; Mahony v. Standard Gas, etc., Co., 187 Cal. 399, 202 P. 146; Richter v. Union Land Co., 129 Cal. 367, 62 P. 39; Larkin v. Mullen, 128 Cal. 449, 60 P. 1091; Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 47 P. 369, 52 P. 797; De Bakcsy v. Strain, 61 Cal. App. 518, 215 P. 105; Shull v. Crawford, 33 Cal. App. 36, 164 P. 330; Carter v. Fox, 11 Cal. App. 67, 103 P. 910. Neither was it essential that they allege and prove that they were ready, able, and willing to carry out the contract. Merrill v. Merrill, 102 Cal. 317, 36 P. 675.

We agree with appellant that the evidence was insufficient to support a finding of fraud in connection with the sale of the property to plaintiffs; nor does it appear that the promise to resell was made without the intention to perform. Nevertheless, defendant recognized its obligation in the latter respect and that the plaintiffs had ground for complaint. The waiver mentioned was shown to have been made for that reason, and the attempt by defendant to terminate the rights of plaintiffs notwithstanding the waiver furnished sufficient ground for rescission by the latter.

[8] The contract signed by plaintiffs with the defendant made no provision for the resale of the property by the latter; and it was provided therein that "to avoid misunderstandings it is understood by both buyer and seller that this signed agreement contains all the agreements, expressed or implied, between the parties. * * *" On the same date, however, plaintiffs authorized Monroe, Lyon & Miller, Inc., to make such sale, no time therefor being specified except that the authorization should remain in force 60 days from date and thereafter until revoked in writing. Defendant contends that, in view of the above, the trial court erred in admitting parol evidence of promises by the selling agent that a resale would be made within 30 days. The admission of this testimony, if erroneous, was not prejudicial, as it could not have changed the result of the trial. Furthermore, it explained the reason for the waiver by defendant of its right to cancel for failure to make the payments, the violation of which waiver, as stated, gave the plaintiffs the right to maintain their action.

[9] The decision and judgment in the action, which were filed on November 22, 1927, awarded the plaintiffs the sum of $15 as costs. The record shows that their cost bill was filed on November 18, 1927. This was premature (Sellick v. De Carlow, 95 Cal. 644, 30 P. 795; Gale v. Dixon [Cal. App.] 267 P. 342); and while no motion to strike the memorandum from the files was made, the judgment to the extent of the costs awarded therein was erroneous on its face and should be modified (Quitow v. Perrin, 120 Cal. 255, 52 P. 632; White v. Gaffney, 1 Cal. App. 715, 82 P. 1088). With the above exception we find no merit in the appeal.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $15, and, as so modified, it is affirmed. It is further ordered that respondents recover their costs on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by J. W. Alford and others against Edward W. Hesse, in which defendant filed cross-complaint. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff named appeals. Affirmed.

Stuart D. Anderson and Martin Forrest, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Derthick & Hull and W. J. Cusack, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An appeal by one of the plaintiffs in the above action from the judgment on the pleadings in favor of the defendant.

The action was one for the cancellation of two promissory notes executed by the plaintiffs to the defendant on October 8, 1926, and the latter by his cross-complaint sought to recover on the notes. The amended complaint alleged that the defendant was the owner of a permit to prospect for oil and gas upon certain lands owned by the United States, which permit was issued to him by the Secretary of the Interior; that the consideration for the notes was the execution on the above date by the defendant to the plaintiffs of an agreement granting the latter the sole right and permission to go into possession of these lands, to drill and develop the same for oil, gas and other hydrocarbon substances, to extract such substances therefrom under the permit and under a lease, or any extension or renewal thereof that might be granted by virtue of the permit, and to enjoy all the privileges of the permittee or lessee thereunder. It was further alleged that to procure the execution of the notes the defendant represented that he was the only person interested in the lands so far as such interest related to the right to prospect for or develop oil thereon, that there were no liens or incumbrances thereon which would in any way affect the rights granted by the agreement, and that he was entitled to the possession thereof; that plaintiffs believed the above representations to be true, and relying thereon, executed the notes, which they would not otherwise have done; that the representations were untrue; that the defendant had in fact, on or about August 24, 1923, assigned an interest in the above land and in the oil therein to Jacob F. Karr, who ever since that date had been the owner and holder of an interest therein; and that defendant, on or about April 17, 1924, also assigned a similar interest therein to Julius Segall and Sam Marshall, who have since been the owners and holders of such interest.

An answer to the cross-complaint was filed by the plaintiffs, alleging that the only consideration for the notes was cross-complainant's assumption of the promises and obligations set forth in the agreement mentioned, and that the notes were executed and delivered without consideration. Upon motion by the defendant and cross-complainant, based upon the pleadings, it was adjudged that plaintiffs take nothing by their complaint, and judgment was entered upon the cross-complaint for the principal sum of the notes, with interest, attorney's fees, and costs.

[1, 2] The permit was issued on July 19, 1924, pursuant to an act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920 (Fed. Stats. Ann. Supp. 1920, p. 187 [41 Stat. 437]), and was thereafter extended to December 31, 1926. The act authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant permits, which shall give the exclusive right for a period not exceeding two years to prospect for oil and gas upon land wherein such deposits belong to the United States, and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field. The rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the power given by the act are, when the same are not in conflict with the act itself, to be given the effect of statutes. *U. Such rules and regulations the courts will judicially notice. Lawrenceburg R. M. Co. v. Jones & Co., 204 Ala. 59, 85 So. 719; Webb v. White Engin. Corp., 204 Ala. 429, 85 So. 729; *Carr v. And here it appears without dispute that section 12½ of the oil and gas regulations of the General Land Office of the Department of the Interior, promulgated on March 11, 1920, under the authority of the above act, provides as follows: "Permits after being awarded may be assigned to qualified persons and corporations upon first obtaining the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. Mere rights to receive a permit are not assignable."

[3, 4] It is not contended that the defendant had at any time an interest in or right to the possession of the above land other than that given him by the permit, and it is clear that the assignments alleged to have been made by him previous to the award of the permit here involved were under the above regulations of no validity. Appellant claims, however, that the averment "that Jacob F. Karr since said date was and now is the owner and holder of said interest in and to said real property," and a similar allegation with respect to Segall and Marshall should be construed to mean merely that these parties had acquired from the defendant and owned present interests in the property.

This contention cannot be sustained, as these averments refer to the assignments as the sources of the alleged interests, and are not allegations that any interests were acquired by conveyances from the defendant subsequent to the award of the permit. It is our conclusion that the pleadings relied upon by the plaintiff were insufficient to state a cause of action against the defendant, or a defense to his cross-complaint, and that the motion for judgment on the pleadings was properly granted.

The judgment is affirmed.

WILSON v. POLICE COURT OF CITY OF MODESTO et al. (Civ. 3868.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 25, 1929.

Courts §209(2)—Application for writ of prohibition was denied, as petitioner had not applied to superior court for such writ.

Application for writ of prohibition, to be directed to the superior court of Stanislaus county, to restrain further action under ordinance complained of, on ground that section 1 of said ordinance was not an emergency measure, was denied without prejudice, as petitioner had not applied to superior court for such writ.

Application by Fred Wilson for writ of prohibition against the Police Court of the City of Modesto and another. Writ denied.

PER CURIAM. Denied without prejudice, on the ground that it does not appear that the petitioner has applied to the superior court of Stanislaus county for a writ of prohibition to restrain further action under the ordinance complained of, on the ground that section 1 of said ordinance is not an emergency measure.

PEOPLE v. KEYES. (Cr. 1806.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 14, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 17, 1929.

Criminal law §49—Doctors' affidavits held not to warrant admission to bail pending appeal on ground of threatened danger to health.

Motion for admission to bail pending appeal from conviction, urged on ground of threatened danger to defendant's health by reason of his incarceration, held denied, since affidavits of physicians and dentist did not show such imminence of dangerous results to life or health of defendant as to obviously require his removal from jail.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Asa Keyes was convicted of a criminal charge, and appealed. On motion that he be admitted to bail pending the determination of such appeal. Motion denied.

Milton Cohen and Paul W. Schenck, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. The defendant was convicted of a criminal charge, and has appealed to this court from the judgment rendered against him. Meanwhile he is confined in the county jail, and he now moves that he be admitted to bail pending the determination of his appeal, because of threatened danger to his health by reason of his incarceration.

Respondent contends that we are without jurisdiction to grant the motion, for the reason that section 1291 of the Penal Code provides that a "defendant may be admitted to bail upon an appeal" by an order "made by any magistrate having the power to issue a writ of habeas corpus, or by the magistrate before whom the trial was had," while section 808 of the same Code, providing what persons are magistrates, does not set down justices of the District Court of Appeal in the list of justices and judges contained in it. We find it unnecessary to decide this question.

Granting for the sake of argument that we possess the power here invoked by appellant, it can be exercised only where "there is such imminence of dangerous results to the life or health of the defendant as to obviously require his removal from the county jail" at the time his application for admission to bail is made. Ex parte Turner, 112 Cal. 627, 45 P. 571. See, also, People v. Cornell, 28 Cal. App. 654, 153 P. 720; People v. Eiseman, 69 Cal. App. 143, 230 P. 669. The motion now before us is based upon the affidavits of five physicians and a dentist. After referring to minutely conducted physical examinations of appellant and to the results obtained therefrom, the physicians summarize their views as to the probable effect of his present confinement upon appellant. The first of them says that appellant's "condition is such that unless he is permitted to have medical and surgical attention urgently required and unavailable under jail facilities his condition will steadily deteriorate and will result in great permanent and irreparable injury to his health." There is no showing here of an immediately imminent danger to appellant's material well being. It is said, it is true, that certain medical and surgical attention is "urgently required" by him, but the only effect of his failure to obtain it will be that "his condition will steadily deteriorate and will result" in permanent and irreparable injury to his health. It is plain from this that no permanent injury has yet supervened. Moreover, how long will it be that appellant's condition "will steadily deteriorate" before a permanent injury to his health "will result"? Is it to be ten days, or six months, or a year? We are not informed. This showing is plainly insufficient. Two of the other physicians state their conclusions in language identical with that above quoted from the first of the five, except that one of them omits the words "permanent and." The remaining two physicians offer their opinions in language which is practically the same in effect. The dentist says that the condition of appellant's teeth is such that it will "cause a progressive deterioration of Mr. Keyes' health and is likely to result in permanent and irreparable injury to his health unless said condition be remedied."

Motion for admission to bail denied.

WRIGHT v. ALLDREDGE et al. (Civ. 6746.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. July 23, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨787—Appellants having merely filed formal notice of appeal, and neither taken further steps toward perfecting appeal nor showing excuse, appeal was dismissed.

Where appellants appealed by merely filing formal notice of appeal, without filing transcript, and county clerk certified that no transcript had been ordered prepared, or any further steps taken toward perfecting appeal, time for filing transcript having expired, and respondent having moved for dismissal of appeal, and appellants having made no effort to show that they were within any exception, appeal was dismissed.

Action by Flora B. Wright against W. W. Alldredge and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and certain defendants appeal. On motion by defendants other than the Magnetic Springs Company to dismiss appeal. Appeal dismissed.

George H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Samuel J. Crawford, of Ocean Park, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The defendants Alldredge appealed on April 25, 1929, from a judgment entered against them and in favor of the plaintiff in the county of Los Angeles on April 15, 1929, by filing merely a formal notice of appeal. No transcript has been filed, and the county clerk certifies that none has been ordered prepared, or any further steps taken toward perfecting said appeal. The time for filing the transcript having expired, the respondent on July 8, 1929, moved for dismissal of the proceedings in this court. Since the appellants have made no effort to show that they were within any exception, the motion must be granted. White v. White, 112 Cal. 577, 44 P. 1026.

Ex parte MARSHALL. (Cr. 1545.)

1. Judgment ⇨822(3)—Decree of foreign court disposing of custody of minor was res judicata and binding on local court, in absence of change of circumstance.

In proceedings to determine right to custody of minor, where no change was shown to have taken place in petitioner's condition or moral fitness since date of order and judgment of foreign court disposing of same question, former adjudication of right to custody of minor was res judicata, and doctrine of comity between states required that the decree of foreign court be recognized.

2. Judgment ⇨822(3)—Foreign court having considered facts which were grounds on which right to custody of minor was based, its order was conclusive.

Where, in proceedings to determine right to custody of minor on ground that party having custody failed to educate or take proper care of minor, facts alleged occurred before entry of order of foreign court and was considered by that court, its order was conclusive.

Petition by Frank Marshall for a writ of habeas corpus against Aileen H. Haremza and husband. Petition granted.

L. C. Pistolesi, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Robert E. Fitzgerald, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This matter is before the court on petition for a writ of habeas corpus to determine as between petitioner, Frank Marshall, and respondents, Aileen H. Haremza and Donald Haremza, the right to the custody of Betty Nadine Anderson, a minor child, not related by blood to either petitioner or respondents.

The history of the case, as disclosed by the record, is as follows: On October 10, 1923, the minor, who lived with petitioner and respondent Aileen H. Haremza, was, by proceedings had in the probate court of the county of Wyandotte, state of Kansas, duly adopted by respondent Aileen H. Haremza, formerly married to petitioner, Frank Marshall, but now the wife of Donald Haremza. On September 21, 1927, while divorce proceedings were pending between petitioner, Frank Marshall, and respondent Aileen H. Haremza, formerly Aileen H. Marshall, and which terminated in a decree of divorce being entered, petitioner, Frank Marshall, and respondent Aileen H. Haremza, then his wife, entered into a written agreement concerning the custody of the minor, by which agreement Aileen H. Haremza transferred the custody and care of the minor to petitioner. Petitioner moved from California, taking the child with him, to Casa Grande, in the state of Arizona. On November 16, 1928, Aileen H. Haremza filed in the superior court of the state of Arizona, in and for the county of Pinal, petition for a writ of habeas corpus, praying that the writ be granted, directing that Frank Marshall have the person of the minor, Betty Nadine Anderson, before the court, together with the cause of her detention, confinement, and restraint, and that the court make an order awarding Aileen H. Haremza the custody of such minor. The writ issued, and on November 21, 1928, the petition and return came on for hearing, and the court made and entered its order "that the application of petitioner be denied and that said minor child, Betty Nadine Anderson, remain in the care and custody of Frank Marshall, in the town of Casa Grande, county of Pinal, state of Arizona." On December 12, 1928, respondent Aileen H. Haremza abducted the minor, and brought her to the state of California. On May 1, 1929, petition for a writ of habeas corpus was filed in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of San Mateo, by petitioner, which writ was issued as prayed, and ordered Aileen H. Haremza and Donald Haremza, her husband, to have the minor before the court, and upon the hearing, on May 4, 1929, the court made its order "that the application of the petitioner, Frank Marshall, be and it is denied, and that said minor child, Betty Nadine Anderson, be and remain in the care, custody and control of Aileen H. Haremza." Subsequently petitioner, Frank Marshall, instituted this proceeding, in which he petitions the court to make its order awarding to him the custody of the minor child.

[1] The question presented is whether the order and judgment of the Arizona court awarding the custody of the minor to petitioner herein is binding upon the courts of this state in a proceeding of this nature. There is nothing in the record here, nor in the record of the superior court of San Mateo county, presented at this hearing, to show that the conduct of petitioner, Frank Marshall, since the order was entered by the Arizona court, had been such as to render him unfit to have the custody of the minor, nor is it contended that his condition or moral fitness had undergone any change whatever since the matter was adjudicated in the Arizona court. This question has been directly passed upon in In re Wenman, 33 Cal. App. 592, 165 P. 1024, which was a proceeding in habeas corpus brought to recover the custody of a minor child, abducted and brought from New York into this state by the mother, in violation of a divorce decree entered in the state of Connecticut awarding the custody of the child to the father. There the court says: "The doctrine of comity between the states of the Union requires that a judgment granting a divorce and awarding the custody of a minor child rendered by a court of one state shall be conclusive in the jurisdiction of the other states, in the absence of a showing of changed conditions affecting the welfare of the child. State ex rel. Nipp v. Dist. Court, etc., 46 Mont. 425, 128 P. 590, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 256. * * * It is shown by the record before us that the minor was brought to this state by the respondent in direct violation of a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister state awarding its custody to the petitioner. The child's presence here is founded on a tort or offense against the law, and it is not made to appear that since the entry of the decree under which the petitioner is now claiming he has become an unfit or unsafe person to have the care and control of his minor child; * * * a due respect for the orderly administration of the law and according to the doctrine of comity among sister states requires this court to recognize the right of the petitioner under the decree of the court of the state of Connecticut hereinbefore referred to."

As there is nothing in the record here, nor in the record of the proceeding before the superior court of San Mateo county presented to this court, showing any change in the moral fitness or condition of petitioner Frank Marshall since the order was made by the Arizona court, nor any charge made that since the entry of such order he has become an unfit or unsafe person to have the care of the minor, the case cited disposes of the question presented.

[2] Respondents in their return allege that the child up to November 2, 1928, when she was taken by petitioner from California to Arizona, was not supported nor educated by petitioner; that in September, 1927, petitioner placed the child in the custody of Mr. and Mrs. George Bailey at Pittsburg; that in the month of October, 1927, the Baileys moved to Stockton; that in February, 1928, they moved to Crescent City; that in June, 1928, they moved to San Francisco, and during all such time had the child with them in their care and custody; and that petitioner failed to compensate the Baileys for caring for the child. All of this, however, is alleged to have occurred prior to the entry of the order by the Arizona court, and, having been considered by that court, its order is conclusive here. As was said in In re Wenman, supra: "Some of the more important matters with which the respondent charges the petitioner in her return are alleged to have existed prior to and at the time of the entry of the decree of divorce. As to them, we think it evident that the decree is conclusive, and that this court cannot now reexamine them for the purpose of depriving the petitioner of a custody therein awarded to him."

Respondents urge that the decision of Hon. George H. Buck in the superior court of San Mateo county, upon petitioner's application therein, is, in the absence of any statement in the present application showing change of fact or circumstance since that date, res judicata, and binding upon this tribunal and a bar to this proceeding, citing in support of such contention, In re Holt, 34 Cal. App. 290, 167 P. 184; In re Viola Frazier, 50 Cal. App. 45, 194 P. 510; and In re Gille, 65 Cal. App. 617, 224 P. 784. These cases hold that a final adjudication on a writ of habeas corpus brought to determine the right of a parent or guardian to the care and custody of a minor child determines all questions necessarily involved between the same parties upon the same facts; that in all such proceedings the welfare of the child is the cardinal consideration; that the conditions which determine the welfare of the child are not permanent and often change, and for this reason a judgment or decree awarding such custody is in its nature temporary, and applies only to existing facts and conditions; that proceedings on habeas corpus to determine the right to the custody of a minor is really one of private parties contesting private rights, and in such cases both principle and considerations of public policy require the application of the doctrine of estoppel to judicial proceedings, and therefore a former adjudication on the question of the right to the custody of a minor child, brought upon habeas corpus, may be pleaded as res judicata as to all facts existing at the time of the adjudication.

We do not question the rule announced in these cases, and agree with respondents that a former adjudication of the right to the custody of a child upon habeas corpus is res judicata as to all facts and conditions as they existed at the date of the adjudication. However, as no change is shown to have taken place in petitioner's condition or moral fitness since the date of the order and judgment of the Arizona court, and no change in petitioner's condition or moral fitness since such date was shown at the hearing in the superior court of San Mateo county, nor passed upon by that court, the decision of the Arizona court is res judicata, and is controlling until such change in appellant's condition is shown.

It is therefore ordered that respondents Aileen H. Haremza and Donald Haremza forthwith deliver to petitioner, Frank Marshall, the minor child, Betty Nadine Anderson.

" PEOPLE v. PLUMMER. (Cr. 1034.) "

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. August 7, 1929.

Burglary $\S$ 42(3)—Evidence showing possession of property recently stolen, together with guilty conduct, held sufficient to sustain conviction of burglary.

In prosecution for burglary, evidence showing possession of property recently stolen, together with guilty conduct in relation thereto, held sufficient to sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Reuben Plummer was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Webster, of Sonora, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was charged with the crime of burglary and with a prior conviction of the crime of rape. He entered a plea of not guilty, but admitted the prior conviction. He was convicted of burglary in the second degree. This is an appeal from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

The appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify his conviction. He resided with his mother in the town of Columbia, Tuolumne county. George Wilson, whose wife is a sister of the defendant, resided in the same town. Leo Pense, also a resident of the town, is an acquaintance of the defendant of long standing. Pietro Sanguinetti owns a two-room house about three-fourths of a mile from the town. The house contained some clothing canned goods, and other articles, but was unoccupied by any person. February 17, 1929, some person broke into this house and stole the canned goods, some clothing, and other property stored therein. February 19 the defendant went to Murphy's, in Calaveras county, looking for work. He walked a part of the way, and was then given a ride for the remainder of the trip by Wilson, with whom were Pense and others. If the testimony of Wilson and Pense is true, the defendant told Pense, during the forenoon of February 19, that, if Wilson would take him to Murphy's, he (the defendant) would give Wilson some canned goods; that on their arrival at Murphy's the defendant drew a diagram showing where the canned goods were hidden in an out-of-the-way place near Columbia, and stated that they were covered with leaves; that on their return to Columbia during the evening of the same day Wilson and Pense, between 10 and 11 o'clock at night, went on foot to the place designated by the defendant, found the goods hidden there as described by him, placed them in two sacks, and started back to Wilson's home, intending to leave the goods there; that before they reached Wilson's home a man accosted them and asked what they had in the sacks; that this question convinced them that the goods had been stolen, and, that as soon as they reached the Wilson home, they placed the goods in an automobile, took them away some distance, and hid them in a hole in the ground, covering them with rocks. On their return again to Wilson's home, they were arrested, and later, during the same night, they informed the sheriff where the goods were hidden.

If the foregoing were all of the testimony, even though sufficient to convict, it would leave a strong suspicion that Wilson and Pense committed the burglary and were endeavoring to escape punishment by making it appear that the defendant had committed it. But the defendant was arrested at the Indian Camp at West Point in Calaveras county on February 28. In the room he there occupied there was at that time a shirt clearly proved to belong to Sanguinetti, who testified that the shirt was in his house when he left it a few months before the burglary. When the defendant was arrested, he enumerated certain articles in the room belonging to him, without mentioning the shirt, saying he had nothing else there. It was satisfactorily shown at the trial that no one else at that place had or claimed the shirt in question, and, while it is possible that some one else placed the shirt in the room, the only reasonable inference from the evidence is that the defendant took it there. Wilson and Pense were kept in the county jail at all times subsequent to their arrest, and were still confined therein at the time of the trial.

The evidence shows more than the mere possession of stolen property. The natural inference from defendant's particular description of the place where the canned goods were hidden is that he stole them and secreted them there. The fact that he gave them to Wilson and Pense was an implied assertion that he owned them. Possession of property recently stolen, together with guilty conduct in relation to the property, are sufficient to sustain a conviction. 4 Cal. Jur. 742.

Appellant complains of an instruction given by the court, substantially in the language of the instruction set forth in People v. Alba, 52 Cal. App. 603, 605, 199 P. 894. It is urged that the instruction contains the same error as the one condemned in People v. Boxer, 137 Cal. 562, 563, 70 P. 671. The instruction in that case, however, was condemned because it "assumes that the defendants may have received the stolen property into their possession after the burglary was committed by other parties." No such error appears in the instruction complained of in this case. The court refused to give an instruction requested by the defendant relative to the possession of stolen property by a defendant, but the instructions given by the court fully covered the subject-matter thereof.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

LINDSEY et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 6984.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 17, 1929.

1. Insane persons §92—Ward rather than guardian should have been named as plaintiff in suit to rescind contract.

Ward rather than guardian should have been named as plaintiff in suit for rescission on ground of fraud of contract for purchase by ward of furnishings of an apartment house and recovery of damages.

2. Insane persons §92—Order substituting guardian for ward in action for rescission, though erroneous, should not be given effect as dismissal, where not intended as such.

In suit by ward to rescind for fraud a contract for purchase of apartment house furnishings, order substituting guardian, though erroneous, should not be given effect as a dismissal of action as against ward, where it was manifestly not intended as such.

3. Insane persons ☞92—Erroneous order for substitution of guardian as plaintiff held not to deprive court of jurisdiction to allow trial amendment restoring ward as party plaintiff.

In suit by ward to rescind for fraud contract for purchase of apartment house furnishings, where guardian was erroneously substituted as plaintiff, neither the erroneous order for substitution of the guardian as plaintiff nor the amendment made in conformity therewith deprived court of jurisdiction to allow trial amendment restoring ward as party plaintiff.

4. Insane persons ☞92—Permitting amendment substituting ward for guardian after case was submitted on motion for nonsuit held discretionary (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, it was within court's discretion to permit an amendment substituting ward for guardian as plaintiff after case was submitted on the motion for nonsuit.

5. Insane persons ☞92—Court permitting amendment at trial restoring ward as plaintiff, after guardian was erroneously substituted, retained jurisdiction, though more than three years elapsed since summons was issued, where defendants voluntarily appeared (Code Civ. Proc. § 581a).

In action by ward to rescind for fraud contract for purchase of apartment house furnishings, where guardian was erroneously substituted as plaintiff, court was not without jurisdiction to allow amendment at trial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, restoring ward as party plaintiff, though more than three years had elapsed since summons was issued, where defendants voluntarily appeared within the three-year period and answered to the merits of the amended complaint which stated a cause of action in favor of the ward.

6. Prohibition ☞3(2)—Writ cannot take place of appeal or be employed to correct errors of subordinate tribunals (Code Civ. Proc. § 1102).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1102, function of writ of prohibition being to restrain subordinate tribunals from exceeding their jurisdiction, writ cannot be used to take the place of an appeal or employed as a means of correcting errors of such tribunals, even though objection thereto is based upon jurisdictional ground.

Application for writ of prohibition by George Lindsey and others, directed to the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco and others. Writ denied.

George M. Lipman, Harold Levin, and Walter F. Lynch, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Francis C. Brown, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. An original application for a writ of prohibition to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, directing said court to desist and refrain from further proceedings in an action pending therein, which was commenced on November 10, 1925, by Katherine Horton against George and Emma Lindsey, and is numbered 163152 according to the register of actions in said court. The suit was for the rescission, on the ground of fraud, of a contract for the purchase by plaintiff of the furnishings of an apartment house, the recovery of sums paid by her thereon, and for damages.

A summons was issued, but, so far as appears, was not served upon the defendants. Thereafter, on September 13, 1927, the plaintiff was adjudged to be an incompetent person, and P. G. Sanborn was duly appointed and qualified as the guardian of her estate. On June 23, 1928, respondent, upon the application of the guardian, made an order for his substitution as plaintiff in the action, and on June 26, 1928, an amended complaint was filed therein, stating the same facts as appeared in the original complaint, with the additional fact of the appointment of Sanborn as guardian. The amended complaint, however, was entitled "P. G. Sanborn, Guardian, on Behalf of Katherine Horton, an Incompetent Person, Plaintiff"; the name of the incompetent being omitted in the caption, although the pleading alleged that the same was filed on her behalf, and one W. E. Bivens, alleged to have been an agent of the principal and certain fictitious defendants in the transaction, was also joined as a defendant.

Thereafter, on July 24, 1928, there was filed a second amended complaint with the same caption, and containing substantially the same allegations of fraud as those appearing in the original and first amended complaint. On July 27, 1928, defendant Bivens filed his answer "to the amended complaint," denying the material allegations therein, and on September 6, 1928, defendants George and Emma Lindsey filed their joint general demurrer to the "second amended complaint," alleging also that the pleading was uncertain in the particulars specified in the demurrer. An answer, putting in issue the material allegations of the amended pleading, was filed by them at the same time, and, the demurrer having been overruled, the parties on December 18, 1928, proceeded to trial.

It appears that evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint as amended was introduced over objection by defendants, and, the plaintiff having rested, defendants moved for a nonsuit upon the ground of variance between the allegations of the complaint and the evidence offered, in that no cause of action in the guardian as such was shown. The guardian then moved for leave to amend to conform to the proof by substituting the ward as plaintiff, by her guardian, and that the action be continued in her name. The defendants, who opposed this motion, thereupon moved to dismiss the action upon the ground that, more than three years having elapsed since the filing of the original complaint and the summons not having been served, the court, under the provisions of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure, was, saving its power to enter an order of dismissal, without jurisdiction to proceed. The motions for a nonsuit and the dismissal of the action were denied, and an order entered permitting the complaint to be amended as requested.

Petitioners contend that the first amendment, whereby the guardian was named as plaintiff in the action, although alleging that the amended pleading was filed on behalf of the ward, was in effect a new action; and that the summons issued on November, 1925—which was the only summons issued—not having been served, and more than three years having elapsed, the court was without jurisdiction to allow the amendment sought at the trial or to do otherwise than dismiss.

[1, 2] That the ward rather than the guardian should have been named as plaintiff is well settled (Fox v. Minor, 32 Cal. 111, 91 Am. Dec. 566; Dixon v. Cardozo, 106 Cal. 506, 39 P. 857); but, as held in the case last cited, which is similar in its facts, the order substituting the guardian, though erroneous, was manifestly not intended as a dismissal of the action as to the incompetent plaintiff, and should not be given that effect.

[3] As stated, the pleadings throughout show a cause of action in the original plaintiff; and, while it may be assumed that a demurrer to the amended complaint should properly have been sustained on the ground that no cause of action was shown to be vested in the guardian, neither the erroneous order for his substitution as plaintiff nor the amendment made in conformity therewith deprived the court of jurisdiction. Dixon v. Cardozo, supra; Westphal v. Arnoux, 51 Cal. App. 532, 197 P. 395.

[4, 5] Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the court may in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper, allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding * * * by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect, * * *" and it was within the court's discretion to permit such amendment after the case was submitted on the motion for nonsuit. Robinson v. Exempt Fire Co., etc., 103 Cal. 1, 36 P. 955, 24 L. R. A. 715, 42 Am. St. Rep. 93. Section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure, after providing for the dismissal of actions unless summons shall have been issued within one year, also provides that "all such actions must be in like manner dismissed, unless the summons shall [have been] served and the return thereon made within three years after the commencement of said action. But all such actions may be prosecuted, if appearance has been made by the defendant or defendants, within said three years in the same manner as if summons had been issued and served. * * *" Here the defendants voluntarily appeared within the three-year period and answered to the merits the amended complaint, which stated a cause of action in favor of the ward. As was said in Nisbet v. Clio Mining Co., 2 Cal. App. 436, 442, 83 P. 1077, 1080: "'Courts, under the reformed system of procedure, look to the substance of things rather than to form, and to persons and things rather than mere names. This manner of treating things constitutes the life and spirit of the reformed system of procedure.' (Anglo, etc., Co. v. Turner Casing Co., 34 Kan. 340, 8 P. 404.) That system was designed to enable courts of justice to brush aside technicalities affecting no substantial right, and decide causes upon the merits. In the case at bar the body of the complaint clearly indicated that the intention was to sue the Clio Mining Company and recover upon its debt, and parties appearing in that action could not close their eyes to substantial facts, and rely upon mere technical omissions in the caption or title of the cause. * * *"

In Cox v. San Joaquin Light & Power Co., 33 Cal. App. 522, 166 P. 578, an action to recover damages for the death of a servant was brought by the widow of the deceased in her own name under the mistaken supposition that the case fell within the provisions of section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provided for the maintenance of such actions by the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased. After the statute of limitations had run against the cause of action, in order to bring the case within the provisions of section 1970 of the Civil Code, an amendment was filed wherein the widow, as administratrix of the estate of the deceased, was substituted as plaintiff in the place of herself as an heir at law. It was contended that the amendment resulted in a complete change of the cause of action, which was barred by the statute of limitations. In deciding against this contention, the court refers with approval to the analogous case of Reardon v. Balaklala Consol. Copper Co. (C. C.) 193 F. 189, 191, and quotes therefrom as follows: "It should be borne in mind * * * that the substantive cause of action counted on in the amended complaint has not been changed. It remains precisely the same as that stated in the original pleading. No new facts are alleged as a ground of recovery, the only change being in the name of the plaintiff and the capacity in which [she] sues. * * * This being so, the change effected by the amendment is obviously in no just sense the bringing of a new action. It is one of form rather than of substance, and in the interests of justice is to be treated as such, rather than to adopt a view which would result in an irretrievable bar to all remedy. * * *"

The above is peculiarly applicable to the case at bar, and it is our conclusion that the amendment had not the effect claimed, but that respondent court, notwithstanding the amendment retained jurisdiction of the cause, and, due to their voluntary appearance, acquired jurisdiction of the parties defendant.

[6] Should the orders complained of be erroneous, they may be reviewed in a proper proceeding; but the function of a writ of prohibition being to restrain subordinate tribunals from exceeding their jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. § 1102), it cannot be used to take the place of an appeal (Coker v. Sup. Court, 58 Cal. 177, 179; Valentine v. Police Court, 141 Cal. 615, 75 P. 336; Van Hoosear v. R. R. Commission, 189 Cal. 228, 207 P. 903; Takeba v. Sup. Ct., 43 Cal. App. 469, 185 P. 406; Apartment, etc., Financing Corp. v. Will, 69 Cal. App. 276, 231 P. 349), or employed as a means of correcting errors of such tribunals (Amos v. Superior Ct., 196 Cal. 677, 239 P. 317), even though objection thereto is based upon jurisdictional grounds (County of Sutter v. Superior Ct., 188 Cal. 292, 204 P. 849).

We find no merit in the contentions of petitioners, and the writ is accordingly denied.

FRICKSTAD v. MEDCRAFT. (Civ. 6954.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 31, 1929.

1. Assault and battery ⇨13, 15—One may use necessary force to prevent assault on himself or injury to his property.

Private person may use such force as is necessary to prevent an assault on his person or injury to his property.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—False imprisonment ⇨31—Finding that dentist, in calling policeman to remove obstreperous patient, did not exercise unnecessary restraint, held sustained and conclusive on appellate court (Pen. Code, §§ 834, 835, 837, 841, 847).

Finding of trial court that dentist, in calling policeman to remove obstreperous patient from his office, exercised no greater restraint than was necessary to protect himself against assault, held sustained by evidence, and conclusive on appellate court, in action for false imprisonment, under Pen. Code, §§ 834, 835, 837, 841, 847.

3. False imprisonment ⇨15(2)—One who authorizes officer to do unlawful act, or who participates in unlawful arrest, is liable.

One who authorizes, encourages, directs, or assists an officer to do an unlawful act, or procures or participates in unlawful arrest, is liable.

4. False imprisonment ⇨8—Dentist, calling policeman to remove obstreperous patient from his office, was not guilty of false imprisonment by virtue of subsequent detention of patient by officer, though dentist failed to swear out complaint (Pen. Code, §§ 834, 835, 837, 841, 847).

Dentist, who caused policeman to be summoned solely to remove obstreperous patient from his office, did not thereafter become liable to patient for false imprisonment, under Pen. Code, §§ 834, 835, 837, 841, 847, by virtue of the officer's subsequent detention of patient, though dentist failed to swear out a complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by Taral T. Frickstad against H. C. Medcraft. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. L. Steele, of Oakland, for appellant.

John L. McNab, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem. Action for damages for false arrest and imprisonment. Trial by the court without a jury. Findings and judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals therefrom, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff, at the time of the arrest and imprisonment complained of, which occurred on the 11th day of August, 1926, was 79 years of age, somewhat infirm from a nervous affliction, and of rather irascible disposition. The defendant was a dentist practicing in the city of Oakland, and for a period of about a year the plaintiff had visited the defendant's office for the purpose of having dental work done, involving the construction and fitting of artificial teeth. The plates had been several times remade by the defendant or his assistant; the last work of that nature having been done about three weeks before the time of the incident which is the subject of this action. At that time some change was made in the lower set or plate at the request of the plaintiff, and on August 11, 1926, plaintiff returned to the office of the defendant, where he was received by an attendant and placed in an operating chair. He then complained to the defendant that the lower plate was one-sixteenth of an inch too short, and produced a pair of calipers to demonstrate the deficiency. The defendant thereupon informed the plaintiff that he could not do anything more under the circumstances without making an additional charge. The plaintiff thereupon became angry, and proceeded toward a door between the reception room and the operating room. As he reached the door, he turned and addressed a defamatory epithet to the defendant, who then crossed the operating room and opened the door, in which there was a glass panel. The findings as to this and subsequent incidents are as follows:

"That defendant opened the door from his inner office to the outer office to usher the plaintiff out of the office, and while engaged in opening the door plaintiff struck at defendant with a heavy cane. That defendant evaded the descending blow of said cane, and the blow smashed the glass entrance door of defendant's office. That plaintiff endeavored to again assault defendant with his cane, and defendant, to protect himself against injuries solely, caught plaintiff by the wrists, and asked his nurse to call a police officer to take the plaintiff away. That said officer demanded of plaintiff his name, but plaintiff replied, 'You find out.' That said officer thereupon, without suggestion from the defendant, took the plaintiff to the police station, where he was kept for some time. That defendant did not request that plaintiff be taken to the police station, and was not informed that plaintiff was detained at the police station until he received a telephone request to come to the police station. On arriving at the station, defendant declined to place any charge against the plaintiff.

"The court expressly finds that the defendant exercised no greater restraint over plaintiff than was necessary to protect the defendant against further assault; that defendant did not request his detention, and did not know that he had been detained at the police station, or was under any form of arrest by the officers of the Oakland police."

The testimony of the defendant was, in substance: That plaintiff made a second stroke with his cane, and that the defendant caught him by the wrists. That the plaintiff also attempted to kick the defendant. That they were then out in the hall, and the defendant called to his office nurse to telephone for the police. That plaintiff was a feeble old man, and the defendant did not know what to do with him. That when the policeman came the defendant said: "I want this man to pay for that glass. I wish you would take him away." The policeman said: "You bet he will pay for that glass. What is your name?" The plaintiff said: "You find out." The policeman said: "Come over to the city hall and we will find out." That the defendant said nothing about arresting the plaintiff. The plaintiff was taken to the city hall, and to the sergeant's desk in the police station, where he was ordered upstairs, searched, and confined in a cell for a period variously estimated to have been from two to four hours.

The defendant testified that he did not know that the plaintiff was imprisoned in the police station until the lapse of a period of from one to three hours, when he was summoned to the police station and asked to sign a complaint, which he refused to do and was reprimanded by the desk sergeant.

There is very little conflict in the evidence as to the incidents which occurred in the office. The plaintiff offered testimony to the effect that the defendant assaulted him, by pushing him through the door of the operating room, and that plaintiff then struck back with his cane to defend himself, and in doing so struck the glass in the door.

The evidence is sufficient to support the finding that the plaintiff assaulted the defendant with his cane, and that the defendant exercised only such restraint as was necessary to protect himself against further assault, and it may be added that the evidence was sufficient to support the conclusion that the defendant exercised only such force as was necessary to protect the property in the room from further damage. The restraint of the plaintiff by the defendant occurred while plaintiff was actually engaged in a disturbance of the peace, and was conducting himself in a disorderly manner, and while making an assault upon the defendant.

Sections of the Penal Code relating to the subject of arrest, and which are pertinent to the issues involved herein, are the following:

Section 834, which reads: "An arrest is taking a person into custody, in a case and in the manner authorized by law. An arrest may be made by a peace officer or by a private person."

Section 835: "An arrest is made by an actual restraint of the person of the defendant, or by his submission to the custody of an officer. The defendant must not be subjected to any more restraint than is necessary for his arrest and detention."

Section 837: "A private person may arrest another: 1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence. * * *"

Section 841: "The person making the arrest must inform the person to be arrested of the intention to arrest him, of the cause of the arrest, and the authority to make it, except when the person to be arrested is actually engaged in the commission of or an attempt to commit an offense, or is pursued immediately after its commission, or after an escape."

Section 847: "A private person who has arrested another for the commission of a public offense must, without unnecessary delay, take the person arrested before a magistrate, or deliver him to a peace-officer."

[1] A private person may use such force as is necessary to prevent an assault upon his person or an injury to his property.

[2] Whether the view be taken that the defendant acted in the protection of himself or his property, or arrested plaintiff for the commission of a misdemeanor committed in his presence, the finding of the trial court that the defendant exercised no greater restraint than was necessary to protect himself against further assault has abundant evidence for its support, and is conclusive in the appellate court.

[3, 4] Plaintiff contends that the action of the defendant in causing a policeman to be summoned, and in delivering him to the policeman, and in not thereafter swearing to a complaint, created a cause of action for damages for false imprisonment, and cites in support of his contention the cases of Korkman v. Hanlon, 53 Cal. App. 147, 199 P. 880, and Riffel v. Letts, 31 Cal. App. 426, 160 P. 845.

Neither of the cases cited is in point, for the reason that the arrest which was the basis of the cause of action in each case was made after the commission of the alleged offense had ceased, and the rule laid down in those cases follows the rule so well stated in the case of Allen v. London & Southwestern Railroad Company, L. R. 6 Q. B. 65, also cited by plaintiff. A very full discussion of that rule appears in the opinion of the court in the case of Korkman v. Hanlon, and we shall not discuss it further here.

In this case, the only evidence as to what occurred when the policeman arrived appears in the testimony of the defendant, which has already been related. The findings of the court have also been heretofore stated in full. These findings are supported by the evidence, which does not justify a conclusion that the defendant advised or encouraged the subsequent imprisonment of the plaintiff. The language of the defendant imports a desire to have the plaintiff removed from the scene of the difficulty, rather than to have him imprisoned. The original restraint and detention of the plaintiff by the defendant having been proper under the circumstances, his delivery to the police officer was fully authorized by the provisions of section 847 of the Penal Code hereinbefore stated, and the duty of the defendant ended when he delivered the plaintiff to the officer. Having performed that duty by promptly having an officer summoned, and by delivering the plaintiff to such officer, his responsibility ceased.

The rule established in this state is stated in the case of Miller v. Fano, 134 Cal. 103, 66 P. 183, as follows: "If a party authorizes, encourages, directs, or assists an officer to do an unlawful act, or procures an unlawful arrest without process, or participates in the unlawful arrest or imprisonment, such party is liable." This rule has been recognized in the case of Squires v. Southern Pacific Co., 42 Cal. App. 459, 183 P. 695.

In the case under consideration a difficulty faced the defendant which he could only overcome, according to the findings of the trial court, by restraining the plaintiff and delivering him to an officer as soon as one was available. The fact that a complaint was not filed thereafter does not render the defendant a trespasser, in the absence of an affirmative showing that the defendant actually encouraged the officer to imprison the plaintiff. No element of malice or abuse of his authority on the part of defendant, up to the time when the policeman took the plaintiff away from defendant's office, appears in the case.

The defendant's authority and control over the plaintiff ended upon the delivery of the plaintiff to the officer, who thereupon assumed responsibility, and it does not appear that the defendant did anything contrary to the authority conferred upon him by section 847 of the Penal Code. Gisske v. Sanders, 9 Cal. App. 13, 98 P. 43.

We are of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to support the finding that defendant did not request the arrest of the plaintiff, did not request his detention, and did not know that he had been detained at the police station, or was under any form of arrest by the officers of the Oakland police.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

SOURICH v. BARICH. (Civ. 6822.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 5, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1929.

Mechanics' liens $\S$ 281(4)—In suit to foreclose contractor's lien, evidence sustained judgment for defendant making payments to protect building constructed from liens.

In suit to foreclose contractor's lien, evidence held to sustain judgment for defendant filing cross-complaint for amounts paid in protecting building constructed from laborers' and materialmen's liens, under evidence showing that defendant did not act as volunteer in making payments, and that, after each payment had been made, he promptly notified plaintiff and her agent, and that payment was duly approved.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action by G. M. Sourich against Peter J. Barich, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. Don Duncan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Benjamin L. McKinley, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to foreclose a contractor's lien. The defendant appeared and answered and also filed a cross-complaint. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, and the case was tried before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the defendant, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the plaintiff has appealed, and has brought up a typewritten transcript.

Thomas A. Sourich was a contractor and builder. Prior to August 8, 1925, he had become seriously embarrassed financially. On the date last mentioned, his wife, Guiditta Sourich, and the defendant entered into a contract, by the terms of which Mrs. Sourich undertook to enlarge, alter, and repair a building for the defendant. The contract price was $28,000. Immediately thereafter Mr. Sourich, as the agent of his wife, entered upon the performance of the contract. Apparently everything progressed well until November 13th, when Mr. Sourich was declared a bankrupt. On November 15, 1925, the plaintiff and the defendant stated an account, and it was found that the plaintiff had earned $16,000, which was paid in full. About the same time the parties entered into an oral contract, the exact terms of which do not appear, by the terms of which the plaintiff was to proceed to perform the contract, but all bills were to be paid directly by the defendant after first being duly approved by the plaintiff. About December 1, 1925, the contract had been so nearly completed that certain of the artisans, including Mr. Sourich, left the job, and the painters came forward to do the painting. From that day Mr. Sourich was not in constant attendance. There is some evidence in the record that his constant attendance was not necessary. There is some evidence in the record that the plaintiff abandoned the contract. Be this as it may, the contract proceeded and was fully completed on or about January 29, 1926. Between November 13, 1925, and January 29, 1926, numerous bills for labor and material became due and payable. Many of those bills were approved by the plaintiff and were thereupon paid by the defendant. Some of those bills were not approved in advance by the plaintiff, but nevertheless they were paid by the defendant. In her briefs, the plaintiff claims that the payments last referred to were made voluntarily. Except in one or two instances she does not claim that the bills so paid were not correct both as to quantity and quality of materials furnished and as to the amount in dollars and cents. In those instances in which she does complain, she does not show by the proof the exact extent of the inaccuracy, if any. There is one claim of overpayment, but as to that claim the evidence was distinctly conflicting. There is some evidence that some of the bills were paid a short time before they were actually due. There is much evidence to the effect that the defendant was constantly engaged in receiving calls from the creditors of the plaintiff or her agent, of reporting those calls to the plaintiff or her agent, and that from November 13, 1925, the defendant was compelled to make a most strenuous effort to keep his building from being covered with liens.

During the progress of the work certain extras were performed. As to the amount thereof, the parties do not disagree.

The total cost of all work was $29,850.09. The trial court deducted $200.40, the price of some material furnished by the builder, $560.62, the agreed cost of extras, and $28,000, the contract price. The balance, $1,089.07, was the excess cost over the cost stipulated in the contract. For the amount of that excess the trial court gave judgment in favor of the defendant. If the defendant did not act as a volunteer in making any of the above-mentioned payments, the judgment should be affirmed. The story as recited above clearly indicates that he did not act as a volunteer; moreover, after each payment had been made, he promptly notified the plaintiff or her agent, and the payment was duly approved. Because of the view we take of this case, it becomes unnecessary to discuss any of the other points made in the briefs.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. George A. DICKSON, Defendant and Appellant. (Cr. 1845.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 24, 1929.

Appeal by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Carlos S. Hardy, Judge, of conviction of driving automobile while intoxicated. Affirmed.

Thomas W. Cochran, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., and W. R. Augustine, of San Francisco, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The only point presented on the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict in this, that there is no substantial evidence to prove the charge that the defendant while driving his automobile as alleged in the information, was under the influence of intoxicating liquor. An examination of the record discloses evidence which, in the opinion of the court, is sufficient to support the verdict on that matter.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GUZMAN. (Cr. 1801.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 13, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 27, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⇨393(1)—Statute placing burden on accused to prove citizenship held unconstitutional as applied to prosecution for possessing firearms by unnaturalized foreign-born person (Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434; St. 1923, p. 696; Const. art. 1, § 13).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434, providing that in any action or proceeding by the state to enforce a law denying certain privileges or licenses to aliens, alleged alien shall have burden to establish fact that he was at time of exercising right or privilege a citizen or eligible to become such, provided the state has proved that he actually exercised right or privilege, held unconstitutional as applied to prosecution for possessing firearms by unnaturalized foreign-born person, under St. 1923, p. 696, since contrary to Const. art. 1, § 13, guaranteeing that any defendant in criminal case cannot be compelled to be witness against himself.

2. Weapons ⇨17(2)—State has burden to prove that alleged unnaturalized foreign-born person, prosecuted for possession of firearms, was an unnaturalized foreigner (St. 1923, p. 696).

In prosecution for possession of firearms, forbidden to be carried by unnaturalized foreign-born person, under Firearms Act (St. 1923, p. 696), the state has not only the burden of proving that accused had one of proscribed weapons in his possession, but also that he was an unnaturalized foreigner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; O. K. Morton, Judge.

German Guzman, an alleged unnaturalized foreign-born person, was convicted of having in his possession a firearm of the character forbidden by law to be carried by such persons. From the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Trujillo & Eriksson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendant was convicted of a violation of the Firearms Act (St. 1923, p. 696), in that he, alleged to have been an unnaturalized foreign-born person, had in his possession a firearm of the character forbidden by the act to be carried by such persons. He appeals from the judgment and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] At the trial the prosecution showed that appellant had one of the proscribed weapons in his possession, but did not prove that he was an unnaturalized foreigner. Appellant offered no evidence upon this latter issue. Some years ago the Supreme Court decided that the establishment of the corpus delicti, in prosecutions under this statute, required proof of possession of the weapon and of the foreign nativity and nonnaturalization of the defendant. People v. Quarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363. Subsequent to this decision, at the session of 1927 (St. 1927, p. 434), the Legislature enacted section 1983 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a new section, which reads as follows:

"Whenever in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought by, or in the name of, the state or the people thereof, or by or in the name of any political subdivision or agency of the state, or by any public board or officer on behalf of any thereof, to enforce any law which denies any right, privilege or license to any person not a citizen of the United States, or not eligible to become such citizen, or to a person not a citizen or resident of this state, and whenever in any action or proceeding in which the state or any political subdivision or agency thereof, or any public board or officer acting on behalf thereof, is or becomes a party, it is alleged in the pleading therein filed on behalf of the state, the people thereof, political subdivision or agency, or of such board or officer, that such right, privilege or license has been exercised by a person not a citizen of the United States, or not eligible to become such citizen or by a person not a citizen or resident of this state, as the case may be, the burden shall be upon the party for or on whose behalf such pleading was filed to establish the fact that such right, privilege or license was exercised by the person alleged to have exercised the same, and upon such fact being so established the burden shall be upon such person, or upon any person, firm or corporation claiming under or through the exercise of such right, privilege or license, to establish the fact that the person alleged to have exercised such right, privilege or license was, at the time of so exercising the same, a citizen of the United States, or eligible to become such citizen, or was a citizen or resident of this state, as the case may require, and was at said time legally entitled to exercise such right, privilege or license."

It was in reliance upon this enactment that the prosecution attempted no proof as to the nativity and nonnaturalization of appellant, assuming to leave the burden of proof upon these matters to him. It is contended by appellant that section 1983 is unconstitutional, when sought to be applied as it was in the present instance, and we have recently decided, in a case in which our judgment has not yet become final, that it is. In that case we said:

"The only constitutional provision relied upon by appellant which appears to warrant attention is section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution of California, in which it is guaranteed that the defendant cannot be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. Undoubtedly any law which would have the effect of forcing a defendant to produce evidence against himself would be unconstitutional.

"Under the rule ab inconvenienti, it has been held that negative allegations regarding matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant need not be proved; but this exception to the general rule has been limited in this state to that particular class of cases where the prosecution is required to prove the nonexistence of a license. People v. Quarez, supra; People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 P. 127. In these cases it was held that the precise element involved in the charge against the appellant here, the nativity of the defendant, was not of such a nature as to come within the rule ab inconvenienti. The Legislature cannot, by merely declaring it to be so, change the inherent nature of the issue and thus bring proof of the nativity within the class of matters excepted from the general rule as being within the particular knowledge of the defendant, if in fact it is not of that character. Otherwise, it would be competent for the Legislature to pass a law providing that in a prosecution for murder, upon proof of the death of the person alleged to have been murdered, the defendant must show that such death did not come about through unlawful means, and that in the absence of such proof this element of the corpus delicti should be deemed confessed, the act declaring this provision to be within the exceptional rule ab inconvenienti. Obviously the mere fiat of the Legislature could not thus metamorphose the issue as to the nature of the agency that produced death.

"Accepting, then, the decisions of our Supreme Court, as announced in the Quarez Case, that this issue of nativity is not one whose proof is especially within the knowledge of the defendant, we must conclude that it remains not within the exception ab inconvenienti.

"It is argued that the only result of the provision is to create a presumption of the foreign nativity of the defendant from proof that he had a firearm of the forbidden length in his possession. But it is clear that in this case far greater and more serious consequences than this would result. The presumption would be but an entering wedge, opening the door to damaging admissions otherwise barred, and which, coupled with the presumption attempted to be created by the statute, might be sufficient to establish the element of non-nativity and thus complete the case against the defendant. We have here an effort to accomplish indirectly that which undoubtedly could not be done directly, to conjure up through a process of legislative necromancy a semblance of evidence, and to require the courts to treat this counterfeit as real evidence. There is no rational connection between the fact that a person has in his possession a firearm of a certain type or size and that individual's place of birth. If evidence of crime may be thus fabricated in the form of a presumption without any foundation in fact, the most serious felony might be presumed from entirely innocent acts and circumstances. There must be a reasonable connection between the fact and the presumption which the law directs to be drawn therefrom. People v. Osaki et al. (Cal. App.) 278 P. 252."

People v. Bruno (Cal. App.) 279 P. 175.

In the present case the prosecution failed to prove an essential element of the charge against appellant, and failed to prove the corpus delicti.

Judgment and order reversed.

In re STRUVE'S ESTATE.STRUVE v. STRUVE.

(Civ. 6941.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 5, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing, Sept. 4, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1929.

1. Wills ⇨47—Periods of forgetfulness and despondency of testatrix, 78 years old, held not unsoundness of mind, rendering testatrix incapable of making will.

Periods of forgetfulness and despondency of testatrix, 78 years old at time of execution of will, over death of son, who had lived with her for many years prior to his death, and who had been a constant friend and companion, held not unsoundness of mind rendering testatrix incapable of making the will.

2. Wills ⇨38(1)—“Insane delusion,” to affect testamentary capacity, must be product of diseased mind, coming into existence and adhered to against reason or evidence.

“Insane delusion,” sufficient to affect testamentary capacity, must be product of diseased mind, which comes into existence without reason or evidence to support it, and which is adhered to against reason and evidence; that is, testamentary capacity does not depend on testatrix's ability to reason logically or on her freedom from prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Insane Delusion.]

3. Wills ⇨38(3)—Testatrix's belief that sons had taken advantage of her by recording deeds held not insane delusion affecting testamentary capacity.

Expressions of belief on part of testatrix that her sons had taken an unfair advantage of her by recording two deeds from husband conveying certain real property to them before her death held not insane delusion, rendering testatrix incapable of making valid will.

4. Wills ⇨384—Error, if any, in admitting evidence in will contest was harmless, where appellant failed to make out a case.

Admission of evidence over objection on issue of undue influence, if error, was harmless, in will contest, where appellant failed to make out a case on ground of undue influence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; H. C. Lucas, Judge.

Proceeding by Edgar Struve to contest the admission to probate of the will of Cecelia M. Struve, deceased, opposed by Elmer H. Struve. From a judgment admitting the will to probate, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

C. F. Lacey and Scott & Pioda, all of Salinas, for appellant.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is a contest of an objection to the admission to probate of the will of Cecelia M. Struve, deceased. The cause was tried before the court sitting with a jury, and resulted in a verdict in favor of the proponent of the will. The contestant has appealed on a typewritten transcript.

The contest was instituted by Edgar Struve, a son of the deceased. The grounds of the contest were unsoundness of mind and the exercise of undue influence by Elmer H. Struve, a grandson of the testatrix and the chief beneficiary under her will. The jury, in answer to special issues submitted to it, rendered special verdicts finding the deceased was of sound and disposing mind at the time of the signing of the will, and that the will was not procured through the undue influence of Elmer Struve. On this appeal the appellant concedes that the testimony upon the issue of undue influence was conflicting, and that the special verdict upon that issue is supported by evidence legally sufficient for that purpose. Our examination of the record convinces us that the only competent evidence was that in support of the special verdict upon this issue, and that the issue might well have been taken from the jury at the close of the contestant's case. Upon this point we cannot do better than quote the language of Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 710, 235 P. 45, 49: “There is an utter lack of any proof of pressure brought to bear upon the testatrix, which overpowered her mind and overcame her volition at the very time the will was made. In re Ricks' Estate, 160 Cal. 450, 117 P. 532.”

[1] Upon the issue of the general unsoundness of mind of the testatrix, the record presents the same situation. The only competent evidence in the record unmistakably proves the soundness of mind of the testatrix, and the only testimony to the contrary was that this woman, who was 78 years of age at the time the will was executed, had periods of forgetfulness and despondency, and suffered great grief over the death of her son Peter, who had lived with her for many years prior to his death, and who had been a constant friend and companion. That such evidence is insufficient to support a contest on the ground of mental incapacity there can be no longer any doubt, in view of the many decisions specifying the quantum of proof necessary in such cases. Estate of McDonough, 200 Cal. 57, 62, 251 P. 916, where cases are cited.

[2, 3] Though these were the issues which were tendered in the contest and trial by the jury, the appellant on this appeal insists that the verdict must be overturned because of the insane delusion of the testatrix, arising out of the expressions of the belief on her part that the contestant and his brother had taken an unfair advantage of her by recording two deeds conveying certain real property to them. Without deciding that the point is properly before us at this time, we may briefly review the evidence upon which it is based, in order that the issue might be finally determined. The testatrix and Hans Struve were married in Denmark in 1865. Shortly after their marriage they came to Watsonville, Cal., and settled on a farm of over 300 acres. In 1900 they bought a house in Watsonville, which they made their home, and in 1902 they surveyed the farm, dividing it into three parts, of about 106 acres each, and placed three deeds of gift, one to each of their sons, Henry, Peter, and Edgar, each covering one of the 106-acre tracts, in escrow with a bank in Watsonville. Nothing appears as to the terms of the escrow, but the evidence unmistakably shows that the parents expected that these deeds would be held by the bank in escrow, at least until the death of the father, and there is unmistakable evidence that the mother believed that it was the intention of the parties that they should remain in escrow until her death. The sons entered into possession of the respective parcels of land, and continued to farm them either individually or through leases to others, and left the deeds with the bank until some time in 1923, when Henry and Edgar appeared at the bank and obtained the deeds to their respective parcels. These they had recorded. Peter, who was a bachelor, lived with his mother, after his father's death in 1908, until his own death in September, 1925. His deed was left with the bank until after his death, when it was withdrawn upon the consent of the mother. A few months after Henry and Edgar recorded their deeds, the mother learned that they had done so, and apparently became very angry with them, expressing to them and to others that they had violated the agreement with her husband and herself that the deeds should remain in escrow until her death. This feeling that they had taken advantage of her remained with her down to the time of the execution of the will, and was given by her as one reason why she did not leave more of her estate to her sons Henry and Edgar.

Several years before Peter's death Mrs. Struve had made a will dividing her property equally between her three sons, but about six months after the death of Peter, he having willed the bulk of his estate to her, Mrs. Struve destroyed the former will and executed the will which is now the subject of this contest. In this will she left the property which she had received from Peter's estate to her grandson Elmer, the proponent of this will, and divided equally between her two sons Henry and Edgar the property which she had owned before Peter's death. Her estate consisted of cash in bank of about $6,000, live stock and farming equipment of the value of about $5,000, and a ranch of about 125 acres, of the value of $12,500, all of which was received from Peter's estate. In addition to this she left about $200 in cash, personal effects valued at $100, and the home place in Watsonville, of the value of $3,500, none of which was derived from Peter's estate. The $200 in cash and the home place she left to Henry and Edgar in equal shares. Specific bequests were made to others, which would come out of the property derived from Peter's estate, and the residue was left to her grandson Elmer. In explanation of the bequest to the grandson of the bulk of the estate which she had received from her son Peter, the evidence discloses that on many occasions she had stated that it was Peter's wish that what was left of his estate should go to this grandson, who was a great favorite of Peter, as well as of the testatrix.

As we understand the argument of appellant, it is that because the deeds were left with the bank in escrow, without specific instructions as to time of delivery, the sons were within their legal rights when they obtained the deeds from the escrow holder, and that therefore the mother had no reason to feel that they had taken any advantage of her, or wronged her, in obtaining the deeds and placing them of record. The answer is that she entertained the belief that there was an understanding between the parties that the deeds would be left in escrow until her death, and that it is of no moment that she was mistaken as matter of law that an oral agreement of this nature did not affect the legal rights of the parties. It appears that her interest in having the deeds remain in escrow was to prevent the sons from disposing of the land, an interest which no doubt arose from the practice of her Danish ancestry to keep the lands of the family intact. Whatever may have been the reason for being put out because of the actions of her sons, it is evident that her belief that she had been wronged by them was nothing more than a mistaken belief, which under no possible theory can be held to be an insane delusion. On this question the cases are all one way. An insane delusion sufficient to affect testamentary capacity must be a product of a diseased mind, "which comes into existence without reason or evidence to support it, and which is adhered to against reason and against the evidence." Estate of Shay, 193 Cal. 355, 361, 237 P. 1079, 1081. Putting it another way: "Testamentary capacity does not depend upon the testatrix's ability to reason logically or upon her freedom from prejudice. A belief may be illogical or preposterous, but it is not, therefore, evidence of insanity." Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 708, 235 P. 45, 49. "It is a delusion or conception which springs up spontaneously in the mind of a testator, and is not the result of his belief or knowledge of any fact which would in reason or in probability furnish evidence in its support."

Estate of Gunther, 199 Cal. 119, 125, 248 P. 514, 516.

[4] Finally it is argued that the trial court committed error in permitting a witness to testify that the son Peter, prior to the execution of his will in July, 1923, told him that whatever might be left of his property at his mother's death would eventually go to Elmer. The objection is that this testimony was hearsay, and not responsive to any issue in the case. The evidence was offered to rebut the testimony of the contestant that the grandson Elmer had practiced undue influence upon the testatrix, by which he persuaded her to bequeath to him the bulk of the estate which she had received from her son Peter. Though the testimony of contestant was wholly insufficient to support the charge, the proponent felt called upon to meet it by showing that the provisions in the will of Mrs. Struve were in accord with the expressed wishes of her son Peter. Having failed to make out a shadow of a case on the ground of undue influence, the appellant was not prejudiced by the admission of the testimony objected to.

Application for certiorari by the Department of Natural Resources, Division of Fish and Game, to review and annul an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation to Margaret Machado for the death of Frank Machado. Award annulled.

Daniel W. Burbank and C. F. Laumeister, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner herein seeks to have reviewed and annulled a decision and award of the Industrial Accident Commission, by the terms of which the widow and minor son of one Frank Machado were granted an award by the commission upon the occurrence of the sudden death of said Frank Machado, who was drowned while acting in the capacity of a volunteer deputy of the fish and game commission of the state of California. The undisputed facts are these: Prior to October 15, 1927, Frank Machado applied to the fish and game commission for appointment to the position of volunteer deputy fish and game warden in the region of Watsonville. The fish and game commission approved his application, whereupon Machado subscribed to the oath of office and furnished the bond as required by the provisions of section 642 of the Political Code (as amended by St. 1927, p. 947), and also paid the fee of $5, required premium on said bond, and thereupon and on October 15, 1927, received his certificate of appointment as such volunteer deputy of said commission. While serving in that capacity, and on June 10, 1928, said Frank Machado was accidentally drowned through the capsizing of his motorboat in Pinto lake in Santa Cruz county and while he was actively engaged in performing the duties incident to his position. Thereafter, and upon the application of his widow and minor son, the Industrial Accident Commission, upon a showing of the foregoing facts and its finding thereon, made and entered its award in favor of said applicants, whereby the petitioner herein was ordered to pay the sum of $1,150 as death benefits and burial expenses to the applicant, Margaret Machado. A petition for rehearing filed by the petitioner herein was thereafter denied by the commission, whereupon the petitioner filed this application for a writ of review.

The primary question of law presented upon this application is as to whether Frank Machado at the time of his death was such an employee of the fish and game commission as to come within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act relating to public officers and to the class of public officers, the widow, heirs and dependents of which are entitled under the terms of the act to receive an award upon the death of such employee while in the course of performing the services required by his official position. That Frank Machado was a public officer under the provisions of section 642 of the Political Code is conceded by the parties to this proceeding. He was what was known as a volunteer deputy fish and game warden, appointed as such under the provisions of the foregoing section of the Political Code, which permits the fish and game commission to appoint deputies "with or without pay." That Frank Machado was of the latter class, and from and after the time of his appointment up to the time of his death was engaged in the service of said commission without pay, would seem to be apparent from the facts attending his appointment and service, the only sum of money which he received from the commission during the period of his service being the sum of $5, returned to him for the purpose of reimbursing him for the amount which he had been required to pay as premium upon his bond. It is true that under a rule of the commission relating to volunteer deputies it is provided that, since the secretary of state requires the payment of a fee of $5 upon the filing of the bond of a volunteer deputy, "each volunteer deputy will be paid a salary of five dollars for the first month's service to compensate him for the bond premium. Thereafter his services will be volunteer and without compensation." It would seem, however, to be clear under the very terms of the foregoing rule that at least from and after the first month of the decedent's service and the receipt by him of the sum of $5, as provided for in said rule, his services thenceforth and up to and including the time of his death were "volunteer and without pay," and that he must therefore be held to have been an appointed public officer, serving as such without pay. Section 8, subd. (a), of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Stats. 1917, p. 835), provides as follows:

"The term 'employee' as used in sections six to thirty-one, inclusive of this act shall be construed to mean: Every person in the service of an employer as defined by section seven hereof under any appointment or contract of hire or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed, and all elected and appointed paid public officers, and all officers and members of boards of directors of quasi-public or private corporations, while rendering actual service for such corporations for pay, but excluding any person whose employment is both casual and not in the course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer, and also excluding any employee engaged in household domestic service, farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural or horticultural labor, in stock or poultry raising and any person holding an appointment as deputy clerk, deputy sheriff or deputy constable appointed for the convenience of such appointee, who receives no compensation from the county or municipal corporation or from the citizens thereof for services as such deputy; provided, that such last exclusion shall not deprive any person so deputized from recourse against any private person employing him for injury occurring in the course of and arising out of such employment."

The history of the various amendments to said statute in so far as the matters referred to in the aforesaid section thereof are concerned, and the course of judicial decisions which apparently resulted in the successive amendments thereof, would seem to shed a clear light upon the intent of the Legislature in the adoption of the final amendment of section 642 of the Political Code, and which amendment was in full force and effect at all times during the appointment and service of said decedent. By the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act as originally adopted in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 279), it was provided in section 14 thereof that, "the term 'employee' as used in sections twelve to thirty-five, inclusive, of this act shall be construed to mean: Every person in the service of an employer as defined by section thirteen hereof under any appointment or contract of hire or apprenticeship, express or implied." The term "employer" as originally used in said act was given application (section 13) to "the state, and each county, city and county, city, school district and all public corporations therein, and every person, firm, voluntary association, and private corporation (including any public service corporation), who has any person in service under any appointment or contract of hire, or apprenticeship," etc. In the case of Mono County v. Industrial Accident Commission, 175 Cal. 752, 167 P. 377, wherein the Industrial Accident Commission had made an award against the county of Mono and in favor of the widow of one James P. Dolan, the duly elected and qualified sheriff of said county, and who had been killed while in the performance of his official duties as such sheriff, this court, in annulling said award, held that the provisions above quoted from sections 13 and 14 of said act could not be given application to the sheriff of Mono county, for the reason that he was not to be held an employee of the county "under any appointment or contract of hire," as provided by the terms of said act then in force. While said cause was pending before this court, the Legislature undertook to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831) so as to embrace within the meaning of the term "employee" as used therein "all elected and appointed paid public officers."

In the case of County of Monterey v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 221, 248 P. 912, 47 A. L. R. 359, a deputy sheriff named N. H. Rader, appointed as such by the sheriff of the county of Monterey to serve as such and as part of a posse comitatus in aid of such sheriff, while attempting the arrest of certain persons engaged in the violation of the state and federal prohibition laws, was killed while in the course of performing such public service. Under the provisions of the law relating to the appointment of such deputy sheriffs for such emergency service, the person so appointed was entitled to receive pay from the county in a designated amount while serving in such a public official capacity. Upon the death of said Rader the Industrial Accident Commission having made an award of compensation to his minor child, this court decided that such award should be upheld after a careful review of the several changes which had been made in the Workmen's Compensation Act affecting the status of public officers; and in so doing held that the decedent in the case then before it came within the provisions of the amendment to the act adopted in 1917, which purported to embrace within its benefits "all elected and appointed paid public officers." In so deciding, this court differentiated between those deputies of public officers who were engaged in the public service and were serving chiefly for their own convenience and without pay and those who were serving for pay in their particular official capacity; and held that as to the former class it was the clear intent of the Legislature in its amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act adopted in 1917 to exclude those who were thus serving without pay from the beneficial provisions of the act. Following that decision by this court, the Legislature, while otherwise making various amendments in the Workmen's Compensation Act at the several sessions thereof, has undertaken to make no change in the provisions thereof relating to those public officers who are to be held to come within the term "employees" for the purpose of being brought within the beneficial provisions of said statute. We therefore see no escape from the conclusion that public officers of the class of the decedent herein who are serving without pay are not to be held included within the beneficial provisions of said act so as to entitle themselves, or, in the event of their death, their heirs or dependents, to receive an award at the hands of the Industrial Accident Commission.

It necessarily follows that the award made by the commission in the instant case must be annulled, and it is so ordered.

WHEATLEY v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR NAPA COUNTY et al. (S. F. 13281.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

1. Highways $\S$ 90—Notice fixing time for filing property owners' protests in proceeding to form bridge and highway district need not describe improvement (St. 1923, p. 452, as amended by St. 1925, p. 714).

In proceedings under authority of St. 1923, p. 452, as amended by St. 1925, p. 714, for formation of bridge and highway district, notice fixing time within which property owners' protests would be received held not invalid for failure to set forth description of improvement.

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 62—Functions of officer or board inquiring into inclusion or exclusion of territory within bridge and highway districts are purely judicial (Const. arts. 3, 4, $\S$ 1).

Functions of officer or board in inquiring into inclusion or exclusion of territory within boundaries of bridge and highway districts are purely judicial in their nature, and therefore there can be no contention that legislative powers are delegated contrary to Const. arts. 3, 4, $\S$ 1.

3. Highways $\S$ 90—Bridge and highway district held public and quasi municipal corporation (St. 1923, p. 452, as amended by St. 1925, p. 714; Const. U. S. art. I, $\S$ 10).

Bridge and highway district formed under St. 1923, p. 452, as amended by St. 1925, p. 714, held to be public and quasi municipal corporation, in disposing of contention that attempt to form such district was violation of Const. U. S. art. 1, $\S$ 10.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 840(3) — In reviewing proceedings incorporating bridge and highway district, constitutionality of statutes with reference to provisions for taxation will not be determined (St. 1923, p. 452, as amended by St. 1925, p. 714).

Contention that St. 1923, p. 452, as amended by St. 1925, p. 714, relative to organization of bridge and highway districts, is unconstitutional with reference to provisions for taxation, will not be considered in proceeding to review legality of proceedings leading up to formation of district, since, regardless of validity of taxing provisions, district may become valid agency of state, and, if directors have been given unlawful power, exercise thereof will be controlled or prevented by proper proceeding.

LANGDON, J. This matter comes to us upon a petition for a writ of review to determine the legality of the findings and judgment and other proceedings leading up to the formation of the proposed Golden Gate bridge and highway district, which matter has been determined by the defendant superior court contrary to the contentions of petitioner.

Petitioner is a resident, freeholder, taxpayer, and elector of the county of Napa, Cal., and as such filed a protest against the formation of the proposed Golden Gate bridge and highway district and the inclusion of his lands within said district.

The proceedings under attack here were had under the authority of an act of the Legislature passed in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 452), and entitled: "An Act to provide for the incorporation and organization and management of bridge and highway districts and to provide for the acquisition and construction by said districts of bridges and approaches thereto, and for the acquisition of all property necessary therefor, and also to provide for the issuance and payment of bonds by said districts, for the levying of taxes and the collection of tolls by said districts and for the annexation of additional territory thereto."

In 1925 (St. 1925, p. 714) said act was amended so as to provide for the acquisition, and construction of highways by the corporation to be formed under the act and in other particulars hereinafter mentioned.

After the passage of the act of 1923, the proceedings herein discussed were instituted in an attempt to form a bridge and highway district. A voluntary organization sent a written application to the boards of supervisors of the counties of Del Norte, Humboldt, Mendocino, Lake, Napa, Sonoma, Marin, and the city and county of San Francisco, to pass a uniform ordinance, therewith submitted. The uniform ordinance provided that the county therein named desired to join with the others above mentioned in forming a bridge and highway district to embrace contiguous territory under the provisions of chapter 228, p. 452, of the Statutes of 1923; it directed that a petition be circulated in the county in accordance with the provisions of said act, and that the ordinance should be published in a manner prescribed. This uniform ordinance was passed by six only of the counties mentioned, to wit: Sonoma, Mendocino, Marin, Napa, Del Norte, and the city and county of San Francisco. Petitions to the secretary of state were circulated accordingly and signed by 10 per centum of the number of qualified electors of each county from which the petitions were presented who voted for Governor of the state at the last general election. The counties of Humboldt and Lake refused to act upon the application, and no such ordinance was passed by them nor petition circulated. After the passage of these ordinances and the signing of the petitions, the Legislature amended the act governing the formation of bridge and highway districts, at its session in 1925 in the particular hereinbefore stated and in other particulars with reference to the representation allowed to the various counties forming the district and also with reference to the necessity for the district being formed from contiguous territory and in some other particulars not important to be mentioned here.

[1] Subsequently the secretary of state published a notice in each of the six counties fixing a time within which the protests would be received and filed by the owners of property within the proposed bridge and highway district.

Petitioner herein objects to the sufficiency of this notice, contending that it violates the petitioner's constitutional rights, in that it does not appear therein nor can it be ascertained from said notice, what project or improvement is contemplated by reason of the formation of said proposed bridge and highway districts, that said notice fails to state what bridge or bridges are to be acquired or constructed, or where said bridge or bridges and the approaches thereto are to be constructed, and that it fails to give notice of what highway or highways are to be constructed, and that there is nothing in said notice to enable petitioner and other taxpayers to determine whether their property will be benefited by the formation of said district or to determine whether said district should be formed.

The question of notice to taxpayers in this proceeding was considered by this court in the case of Doyle v. Jordan, 200 Cal. 170, 252 P. 577, and it was therein stated that nothing in the act under consideration provides that the project for which it is proposed to form the district shall be set forth in any particular or specified manner or shall be described or contained in any particular or specified document or instrument which may form a part of the proceedings taken for the incorporation of the district, and that the act merely provides that the project for which the district is formed should be definitely designated somewhere in the proceedings in order, at least, that the board of directors of the district might know the extent and the limits to which they might proceed after the organization of said district. The steps taken in the formation of the district are then discussed in Doyle v. Jordan, supra, and it is concluded that they meet the requirements of the statute. There are no facts presented in the instant proceeding which make the language of Doyle v. Jordan, supra, inapplicable here.

[2] It is next contended that the superior court was without jurisdiction to act, since the statute under which the district was sought to be formed violated section 1, arts. 3 and 4, of the Constitution of California, in delegating legislative powers to a judicial or administrative officer, in providing that, at the time specified in the notice, the superior courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all matters urged by the protestants against the formation of the said proposed bridge and highway district or against the inclusion of their lands therein, and the said superior court shall have jurisdiction to exclude the said lands from said proposed districts, etc.

It has been repeatedly held that the functions of an officer or board in inquiring into the inclusion or exclusion of territory within the boundaries of similar districts are purely judicial in their nature. Imperial Water Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, 120 P. 780; Miller & Lux v. Board of Supervisors, 189 Cal. 254, 208 P. 304; Fallbrook Irrig. District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 S. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 354, 4 S. Ct. 48, 28 L. Ed. 173.

[3] The third point raised by petitioner is that any attempt to form a bridge and highway district under the statute of 1923, as amended in 1925, is a violation of section 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States, in that the petitions signed by the electors of Napa county and the ordinance passed by the board of supervisors of said county provided for a bridge and highway district under the statute of 1923, and the statute of 1925 amending the former one, materially changes the conditions under which the said board of supervisors and the said electors of the said county offered to enter said district. This objection is made upon the basis of petitioner's argument that a bridge and highway district to be formed under the act is not a public and quasi municipal corporation, for if it be a public and quasi municipal corporation, the terms upon which it was formed do not constitute a contract between the state and those within the district. Johnson v. San Diego, 109 Cal. 468, 42 P. 249, 30 L. R. A. 178.

We think the corporate structure under consideration here is analogous to a municipal water district, a public utility district, a municipal utility district, and a metropolitan water district. The procedure for the formation and the operation of them all is strikingly similar. These various districts have been held valid as public and quasi municipal corporations or districts, and the statutes under which they have been formed have been upheld in the following cases: Henshaw v. Foster, 176 Cal. 507, 169 P. 82; In re Orosi Public Utility District, 196 Cal. 43, 235 P. 1004; In re East Bay Utility District, 196 Cal. 725, 239 P. 38; City of Pasadena v. Chamberlain (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 630. In Doyle v. Jordan, supra, the statute under which the bridge and highway district was formed was classed with the statutes involved in the cases above cited, and its validity sustained upon the authority of such cases. We think this is a public and quasi municipal corporation within the rule of cases cited. Johnson v. San Diego, supra.

[4] In a brief filed by the California Farm Bureau Federation and others in support of the petition for writ of review, it is urged that the act under consideration presents certain unconstitutional features with reference to its provisions for taxation, and we are asked to decide that question here. We think such a problem is not presented at this time. In the case of Doyle v. Jordan, supra, it was expressly stated that, regardless of the validity of the taxing provisions of the act, the district, when formed, may become a valid and constitutional agency of the state, and that, if the directors thereof have been given any unlawful powers, in a proper proceeding, when they attempt to exercise them, such exercise will be controlled or prevented by the courts. As in the case of Doyle v. Jordan, supra, we are herein concerned only with the proceedings incorporating the district.

The proceedings are affirmed.

BUTLER v. WILLIAMS, County Auditor. ★ (Sac. 4270.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Officers ⇐99—Proper compensation of officer is to be determined by Legislature (Const. art. 11, § 5).

What compensation of an officer should be deemed in proportion to his duties, within Const. art. 11, § 5, is matter of fact to be ascertained and determined by the Legislature and not by the courts.

2. Counties ⇐74(5)—Act fixing county surveyor's salary at $10 per month held not unconstitutional (Pol. Code, § 4236k; Const. art. 11, § 5).

Where salary of county surveyor, which had previously been at the rate of $2,400 per year in counties of the seventh class was fixed at $10 per month by Pol. Code, § 4236k, act lowering compensation was not repugnant to Const. art. 11, § 5, authorizing Legislature to fix salaries of county officers, but was valid exercise of power by Legislature.

3. Counties ⇐74(5)—Person elected county surveyor after act fixed salary at $10 per month cannot complain of inadequacy, and that it would destroy office (Pol. Code, § 4236k).

Where, after enactment of Pol. Code, § 4236k, fixed salary of county surveyor at $10 per month in counties of the seventh class, relator sought election and succeeded in being elected to position, he cannot complain because of inadequacy of compensation and that act fixed salary at so small amount as to result in destruction of the office, where relator could engage in private practice and was provided by county with suitable office.

4. Counties ⇐74(5)—It must be presumed that Legislature, in fixing county surveyor's salary in counties of the seventh class considered other advantages to incumbent (Pol. Code, § 4236k).

It must be presumed that Legislature, in enacting Pol. Code, § 4236k, fixing salary of county surveyor at sum of $10 per month in counties of the seventh class, took into consideration fact that surveyor still had right to engage in private practice, which was of substantial value to him, that county provided him with suitable office, furniture, heat, light, and care, and relieved surveyor of certain engineering duty he was required to do previously when salary was at rate of $2,400 per year.

Application by Drury Butler for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to L. P. Williams, as County Auditor of Sacramento County, to require respondent to draw a warrant in favor of petitioner. Writ denied.

Superseding opinion 270 P. 697.

Rehearing denied; SHENK and PRESTON, JJ., voting for a rehearing.

Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Neil R. McAllister, Dist. Atty., and Alex. J. Ashen, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Prior to the year 1925, the salary of the county surveyor of the county of Sacramento, a county of the seventh class, was fixed by section 4236k of the Political Code at the sum of $2,400 per annum. In that year said section of the Code was amended (St. 1925, p. 811, § 11) to read as follows:

"Counties of the Seventh Class. Surveyor. Sacramento. In counties of the seventh class, the county surveyor shall receive a salary of two thousand four hundred dollars per annum; and in addition thereto all necessary expenses for work performed in the office and all necessary expenses and transportation for work performed in the field; provided, however, commencing January 3, 1927, in counties of the seventh class the county surveyor shall receive a salary of one hundred twenty dollars per annum, and in addition thereto all necessary expenses for work performed in the office and all necessary expenses and transportation for work performed in the field."

The amendment consisted in adding to the section as it originally stood all that portion of said amended section beginning with the word "provided."

Thereafter, at the general election held in said county in November, 1926, the petitioner herein was elected to said office of county surveyor for the full term of four years, beginning January 3, 1927. He thereafter qualified as such county surveyor, and on the 3d day of January, 1927, entered upon the discharge of the duties of said office, and has ever since continued to discharge said duties. Some months thereafter he demanded of the respondent herein, the county auditor of said county, that he, as said county auditor, issue his warrant in favor of petitioner and directed to the county treasurer of said county, ordering said county treasurer to pay to petitioner his salary at the rate of $200 per month beginning on the 3d day of January, 1927. The county auditor refused to comply with said demand, whereupon the petitioner in May, 1928, filed in the District Court of Appeal, in and for the Third District, his petition praying for a writ of mandate directed to said county auditor commanding him to issue to petitioner a warrant on the county treasurer of said county, directing said county treasurer to pay to petitioner the sum of $3,200 for services rendered by said petitioner as county surveyor of said county from the 3d day of January, 1927, to and including the 2d day of May, 1928. An alternative writ of mandate was issued out of said district court, directed to said county auditor. In the return of the county auditor to said writ and in his answer to said petition, it was alleged that the salary of petitioner as county surveyor of said county since the 3d day of January, 1927, was the sum of $120 per annum and that said county auditor had drawn warrants in favor of petitioner at the end of each month during the term of office of petitioner for his said salary at the rate of $120 per annum, but that petitioner had refused to accept said warrants and the same remained in the office of said county auditor. It was further alleged in said return and answer that petitioner, in addition to his salary, is furnished a suitable office in the county courthouse of said county, together with suitable office furniture, heat, light, and care of the same, and that ever since January 3, 1927, the board of supervisors of said county has employed a competent engineer and other engineering assistants to draw plans and specifications for the construction of highways, bridges, and other structures built by said county and that by reason thereof the petitioner has not been called upon to do any of the engineering work appertaining thereto.

The matter came on for hearing before said District Court of Appeal, resulting in a judgment in favor of the petitioner as prayed for in his said petition. Upon the application of the respondent herein, said proceeding was transferred from said District Court of Appeal, and a hearing thereon ordered in this court.

We can see but little, if any, difference in principle between the question here presented and that which was determined in the case of De Merritt v. Weldon, 154 Cal. 545, 98 P. 537, 671, 16 Ann. Cas. 955. In this latter case, the facts recited in the opinion show that the plaintiff therein was elected city marshal of the city of Ukiah. At the time of his election the salary of said office was $60 per month. This salary had been fixed by the board of trustees of said city under the power given to said board by section 855 of the Municipal Corporation Act then in force (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 900), which section read in part as follows: "The clerk, treasurer, marshal, and recorder shall severally receive, at stated times, a compensation, to be fixed by ordinance by the board of trustees." Thereafter, and during said plaintiff's first term of office, the board of trustees created the office of "Executive Officer," prescribed the duties of such officer, and fixed his salary at $75 per month. On the same day it fixed the salary of the marshal at $10 per month. Plaintiff was appointed as such executive officer and continued to hold such office until 1907 and drew the salaries of both offices, having been re-elected in 1904 and 1906. In March, 1907, the board of trustees revoked his appointment as executive officer. Plaintiff thereupon claimed the salary of $60 per month, which had been fixed by said board of trustees by ordinance prior to the date of his first election to the office of marshal. Payment thereof was refused, and he instituted said action for the purpose of compelling the payment of his salary in the amount of $60 per month. The claim was made there, as it is made here, that, while the legislative body has the power to fix the salary of the officer, it is precluded from fixing the salary at so small an amount that its action would result in the destruction of the office. This is clearly made to appear from the following language found on page 549 of the opinion (98 P. 538): "It is urged: That the effect of the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Act [sec. 855] is to require that the trustees shall fix a reasonable compensation; that, while it is for them to determine what is a reasonable compensation, they are at least precluded from fixing it at so small an amount that their action results in the destruction of the office of marshal, a coordinate department of the government of the town, by reason of the fact that no competent person would seek the office or perform the duties thereof for the compensation fixed; that any ordinance fixing the compensation at such a low figure is in conflict with the provisions of the General Municipal Corporation Act, and therefore void; and that for this reason the ordinance fixing the compensation at $10 per month is void." In reply to this contention the court held (page 553 of 154 Cal. [98 P. 540]): "The duties of the marshal were, then, only such as were prescribed by the state law. Under this, in a town of some 1800 inhabitants, he was in charge and control of the department of police, required to execute such process as might be delivered to him for execution; he was in charge of the city prison, if there was such a prison; he would be required to take charge of any chain-gang that might be established by the trustees, but none had been established; and he was required to collect all town taxes and town licenses. The last undoubtedly constituted the principal part of his duties. These are all the duties specifically imposed by the statute. While we may feel that $120 per annum is not a reasonable compensation for the performance of these duties, and would fix a larger sum if it were within our province to determine what would be reasonable, we cannot hold, and the trial court was not warranted in holding, that the act of the trustees in fixing that amount was tantamount to the destruction of the office of marshal, in that no competent person would perform the duties for any such amount. It must therefore be held that the action of the trustees was a lawful exercise of the power confided to them to fix the compensation of the marshal, not in conflict with any law of the state. It follows that the marshal can recover only the salary so fixed."

[1] There is no substantial difference between the authority given the Legislature by section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution to fix the salaries of county officers and section 855 of the Municipal Corporation Act empowering the board of trustees to fix the salaries of the marshal and other officers of cities of the sixth class. If there is any difference between these two grants of power, it is in the use of the words "in proportion to duties," found in the section of the Constitution above mentioned. But the significance of this phrase has been determined in the case of Green v. County of Fresno, 95 Cal. 329, 332, 30 P. 544, 545, where the court held that "what compensation of an officer should be deemed in proportion to his duties is matter of fact to be ascertained and determined by the legislature, and not by the courts." To the same effect is the case of De Merritt v. Weldon, supra.

[2-4] In view of these express rulings of this court, we are constrained to hold that section 4236k of the Political Code, as enacted in 1925, fixing the salary of the county surveyor of the county of Sacramento at the sum of $10 per month, is not repugnant to section 5 of article 11 or to any other provision of the Constitution of this state, but that the enactment of said section was a valid exercise of power given to the Legislature by the Constitution, and its action in that respect is not reviewable by the courts of the state.

Nor do we think the petitioner has any just cause to complain. The salary of the office of county surveyor of said county was fixed at the sum of $10 per month more than a year before he was elected to that position. He knew at the time he became a candidate for said office and at the time he qualified and took the oath to perform the duties of the office what the salary was and would be during the term for which he was elected. The fact that he accepted the office with the salary as fixed at that time and that he has continued to discharge its duties is a conclusive answer to his contention that the Legislature by fixing the salary at this low figure has thereby destroyed the office and that no competent person would perform the duties thereof for the amount fixed as salary. No doubt the prestige enjoyed by petitioner as county surveyor of his county and the right given him under the statute to engage in private practice are of substantial value to him. Furthermore, he is provided by the county with a suitable office, together with furniture, heat, light, and care of said office. As appears by the return of respondent, the board of supervisors has relieved petitioner of all engineering and other work required in the construction of bridges, highways, and other buildings constructed by the said county, and has engaged other engineers to perform this work. That it has this power was expressly held in the recent case of Cope v. Flannery, 70 Cal. App. 738, 750, 234 P. 845. It must be presumed that the Legislature in enacting said section of the Code took into consideration all of these matters, and, in the light of all the knowledge before it, fixed the salary of said officer at the amount stated in said section. As already stated, this was a matter exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Legislature and not within that of the courts.

The writ is denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.

SHENK, J. (dissenting). Under section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution, the Legislature is required to provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of the officers specifically mentioned and for such other county officers "as public convenience may require," and shall prescribe their duties. The same section also requires the Legislature to fix the compensation of such officers "in proportion to duties." By section 4013 of the Political Code, the Legislature has provided in effect that public convenience requires a county surveyor, for in that section a surveyor is, and for 50 years or more has been, named as one of the officers of the county. His official bond is provided for in section 4022 of the Political Code. He must be a licensed surveyor. Section 4214, Pol. Code. His duties generally are defined in sections 4214 to 4221, inclusive, of the Political Code. Other duties are required of him by the Legislature. See St. 1905, p. 102. Sacramento county contains some 963 square miles of territory, approximately that of the state of Rhode Island, and has a population of 150,000 or more. It seems to me a palpable absurdity to say that the constitutional mandate to fix the compensation "in proportion to duties" has been complied with in the case of the surveyor of Sacramento county when said compensation is fixed at $10 per month. The constitutional provision contemplates that the public officers therein provided for shall be justly compensated for their services. Gwynn v. McKinley, 30 Cal. App. 381, 389, 158 P. 1059. And when the Legislature has, as I think here, failed to comply with the purposes of the Constitution, it is the duty of the court to declare the law invalid. I cannot subscribe to the statement in the main opinion that the matter of compensation is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Legislature and not within that of the courts. The case of De Merritt v. Weldon, 154 Cal. 545, 98 P. 537, 671, 16 Ann. Cas. 955, which is deemed to be controlling in the present case, recognizes that a limitation is placed on the legislative action to the extent that the Legislature may not fix compensation so low as in reality to destroy the office. In that case the board of trustees of the city of Ukiah evidently so framed its ordinances that the same person might act as "Executive Officer" and "Marshal" at the combined salary of $85 per month, which was by no means an inconsiderable salary for the services rendered, in those days—25 years ago. The petitioner therein was appointed to act in both capacities, and continued so to act for several years and until the board revoked his appointment as "Executive Officer." He then complained that the ordinance fixing the salary of the marshal at $10 per month was invalid. From the situation there presented, it could not be said that, at the time the ordinances were framed, it was intended to fix the salary of the marshal at so low a figure as in effect to destroy the office, for the reason that such salary, combined with the salary of executive officer, would be reasonable compensation for the services performed. Here we find no such situation, and in my opinion the De Merritt Case should not be deemed controlling.

1. Mines and minerals ⇨101—Finding in action for accounting that tract on which oil was produced was not included within agreement giving plaintiff share of profits from materials produced on particular tract held sustained.

In action for accounting for one-fourth of profits and income derived from oil and gas operations, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that tract on which oil was produced was not included in agreement for division of profits, which contemplated operations for removing gravel.

2. Appeal and error ⇨101(1)—Trial court's determination of issue under conflicting evidence is not reviewable.

Where evidence is conflicting, trial court's determination of issue is not subject to review on appeal.

3. Appeal and error ⇨204(2)—Admission of testimony of defendant as to property which he desired to purchase could not be questioned on appeal, where there was no objection.

In action for accounting as to profits realized from operations for oil and gas, in which question arose as to extent of land covered by profit-sharing agreement, error could not be predicated on admission of testimony of defendant that he tried to buy only that portion of lot on which sand and gravel was located, where such testimony was admitted without objection.

4. Trial ⇨397(5)—Finding that plaintiff had no interest in proceeds of oil and gas sought to be recovered rendered findings on laches and limitations unnecessary.

In action for accounting as to profits from oil and gas operations, in which court found that plaintiff had no interest in proceeds of oil and gas, it was not necessary for the court to make findings on pleas of laches and statute of limitations.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Action by J. A. Merrill against Gordon & Harrison, a copartnership, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Paul C. Hill and Clyde Belford, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chas. L. Chandler, John F. Poole, Wellborn & Wellborn, and Charles Wellborn, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. This action is for an accounting and for one-fourth of the net profits and income derived from the operation and development of certain real property, and sale and distribution of oil and gas produced therefrom, and for specific performance of a contract to convey to plaintiff a one-fourth interest in said real property. Said action is predicated upon the following contract executed by the parties hereto:

"Oct. 7, 1921.

"Witnesseth: That, for a valuable consideration receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, Gordon & Harrison, hereinafter designated as parties of the first part, doing business at 155 East Jefferson street, Los Angeles, Cal., enter into the following contract with J. A. Merrill, hereinafter designated as party of the second part, to wit:

"That the party of the first part agrees to compensate the party of the second part for the location of a certain piece of gravel land which the party of the first part purchased from Abel Moynier and wife, to wit:

"That as compensation, as above mentioned, party of the second part is to receive twenty-five per cent. (25%) of the capitalized stock for which said party of the second is to pay for out of the net profits of the concern in a period of two years.

"That when party of the second pays party of the first one-fourth of the purchase price of the land and equipment the rate of 7% interest on deferred payments, he will then become one-fourth owner of said land and is to derive one-fourth profits from said land from any material produced therefrom per right as owner of 25% of capital stock.

"Witness to which we hereby set our hand and our seal this seventh day of October nineteen hundred twenty and one, A. D. Gordon & Harrison, by Geo. W. Harrison, "Party of the First Part. J. A. Merrill, Party of the Second Part."

It will be noticed that the only description of the real property contained in said written agreement is "a certain piece of gravel land which the party of the first part purchased from Abel Moynier and wife, to wit." The evidence shows that Gordon & Harrison, the defendants herein, designated in said agreement as "the parties of the first part," had on or about the 24th day of September, 1921, purchased from Abel Moynier and Je-rondine Moynier, his wife, lot 7 of Moynier's tract in the county of Los Angeles, containing 17.76 acres of land, upon which there was located a deposit of sand and gravel. Parol evidence was admitted by the trial court for the purpose of identifying the property, which was the subject of the contract of date October 7, 1921. The plaintiff contended, and so testified, that the real property referred to and described in said contract was the whole of said lot 7 of the Moynier tract, while the defendants contended that only the easterly five acres of said lot was the subject of their contract with the plaintiff. The plaintiff, who was a cement contractor, testified that some time before the contract was entered into between Gordon & Harrison and himself he located a deposit of sand and gravel upon said lot 7 of the Moynier tract and immediately thereafter secured an option from Moynier and wife to purchase the same. He mentioned these matters to Gordon & Harrison, and, as a result of negotiations thereafter had, Gordon & Harrison purchased from Moynier and wife said lot 7 of the Moynier tract, and to compensate plaintiff for his services for locating said sand and gravel deposit, they entered into the contract of October 7, 1921, and that the tract of land referred to in said contract was the whole of said lot 7. On the other hand, the defendants contended, and there was substantial evidence to support their contention, that the only portion of said lot 7 containing any sand or gravel deposit was the easterly five acres thereof; that at the time they began negotiations with Moynier and wife, which resulted in the purchase by them of said lot 7, they ascertained that the sand and gravel deposit was upon the easterly five acres of said lot, and that they endeavored to purchase from Moynier and wife said easterly five acres for the purpose of establishing thereon a sand and gravel plant, but Moynier and wife refused to sell any part of said lot less than the whole thereof; that thereupon they purchased the whole of said lot, principally for the purpose of acquiring said easterly five acres, and to compensate the plaintiff for locating said sand and gravel deposit they gave to the plaintiff the contract of October 7, 1921; and that the tract of land intended by the parties thereto to be described therein was the said easterly five acres of lot 7 of the Moynier tract.

The identity of the real property sought to be described in said contract became important for the reason that after the date of said contract Gordon & Harrison constructed a rock and gravel plant upon said easterly five acres of said lot 7 and operated the same until the latter part of the following August. The project proved a failure, and soon thereafter the plant was dismantled and the equipment and machinery removed therefrom. The plaintiff was placed in charge of said plant as superintendent thereof, and continued in that capacity until May 13, 1922, when he was discharged. Something over a year and a half after the abandonment of the sand and gravel project upon said lot 7, to be exact, on April 9, 1924, Gordon & Harrison leased said lot 7 to certain parties for the purpose of prospecting, exploring, drilling, and removing oil and gas therefrom. As a result of these explorations and developments oil was discovered upon said lot 7, but not upon any part of the easterly five acres thereof. Plaintiff now claims that he is entitled under his contract with defendants to one-fourth of the net proceeds of all oil and gas produced from said lot, and for an accounting, etc. The trial court found that the property intended by the parties thereto to be described in said contract of October 7, 1921, was the easterly five acres of said lot 7, and that no profits, net or otherwise, had ever been realized from said property.

[1, 2] The plaintiff has appealed, and presents a number of assignments of error for our consideration and determination. One of said assignments is the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and particularly the finding of the court that the real property intended to be described by the parties in the contract of October 7, 1921, was only the easterly five acres and not the whole of said lot 7. We have set forth in a general way the evidence upon the question of the identity of the real property which was the subject of said contract. We deem comment thereon unnecessary. It is apparent there was a sharp conflict in the evidence as to the property which the parties intended to describe in said contract. Such evidence would undoubtedly have supported a finding in favor of either party. The trial court having accepted the evidence in behalf of respondents and found in their favor upon that issue, its determination thereof is not subject to review by this court.

[3] Appellant further contends that the court erred in admitting testimony of the defendant Gordon that he did not want all of the property purchased and that he tried to buy only that portion of said lot 7 on which was located the sand and gravel deposit. This testimony seems to have been given without any objection thereto from the appellant. The direct question was asked Gordon whether, when considering the purchase of the sand and gravel deposit, he wanted the portion of said lot outside of the sand and gravel deposit. No objection was made to this question and the witness answered it in the negative. He was then asked whether Mr. Moynier would sell the land containing the sand and gravel deposit without selling the whole lot. An objection was interposed to this question, which was overruled, and the witness answered it in the negative. Appellant makes no criticism of this ruling of the court. The evidence of Gordon that he did not want all of the property purchased, and that he tried to buy only that part of the land containing the sand and gravel deposit, having been admitted without objection, its admissibility cannot be questioned on appeal.

[4] Appellant complains that the court failed to find upon the respondents' pleas of laches and the statute of limitations. The court having determined that the appellant never had any interest in the proceeds from the oil and gas taken from the real property in question, the pleas of the respondents, setting up laches on the part of the appellant and the statute of limitations, became immaterial issues, and it was not necessary for the court to make findings thereon. Our views as expressed above render it unnecessary for us to consider other points made in appellant's briefs.

The trial court upon sufficient evidence having found that the appellant had no interest in the land from which the oil and gas have been produced, it follows that the appellant has failed to establish any right, title, or interest in or to said oil or gas, and therefore is not entitled to any of the proceeds therefrom, nor to any accounting thereof.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re SHATTUCK. (L. A. 11181.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 20, 1929.

1. Attorney and client ☞57—"Review," as used in statute relating to petition to Supreme Court to review decision of board of bar governors, means re-examination of entire case (St. 1927, p. 38).

"Review," as used in St. 1927, p. 38, relating to petition to Supreme Court in disbarment proceedings to review decision of board of bar governors, does not have limited meaning of writ of review or certiorari, as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 1067, but means a re-examination of entire record.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Review.]

2. Constitutional law ☞48—Statute is not to be declared unconstitutional, unless it clearly so appears.

Act of state Legislature is not to be declared unconstitutional and void by courts, unless it appears that there is a clear repugnancy between terms of act and Constitution, and where reasonable doubt exists, from consideration of act as whole, as to whether it is repugnant, it should be held constitutional.

3. Attorney and client ☞56—Supreme Court orders are only orders which work disbarment, decision of Board of Bar Governors being only recommendatory (St. 1927, p. 38).

Under St. 1927, p. 38, any decision which Board of Bar Governors may be empowered to make in proceeding pending before it is merely recommendatory in character, and only orders which have effect of working disbarment of a person are final orders of Supreme Court.

4. Constitutional law ☞56—Statute creating Board of Bar Governors held not unconstitutional, as investing board with judicial powers (St. 1927, p. 38; Const. § 1, art. 3).

St. 1927, p. 38, creating Board of Bar Governors, does not violate Const. § 1, art. 3, relative to distribution of governmental power, as statute does not invest such board with judicial powers.

5. Attorney and client ☞38—Conduct of attorney in handling estate as executrix and failing to distribute same held to justify disbarment.

Where attorney, as executrix of estate, received money, but failed to distribute same, and, when removed as executrix, refused to turn over residue of estate, conduct held to justify disbarment.

Petition by Maud Stillwell Shattuck to review an order of the Board of Governors recommending her disbarment as an attorney. Order affirmed.

Walters & Mauk, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Thos. C. Ridgway, of Los Angeles, for respondent Bar Association.

Sylas S. Meyer, of Los Angeles, for respondent accuser.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner herein applies to this court for a review and reversal of the findings, resolution, and order of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California, made and entered upon certain proceedings for her disbarment as an attorney and counselor at law, wherein and after a hearing thereon the said Board of Bar Governors ordered "that the said Maud Stillwell Shattuck, also known as Mary Maud Stillwell, be and she is hereby disbarred and precluded from practicing law in any of the courts of this state, and that her name be stricken from the roll of attorneys." In view of the fact that this is the first of a number of similar applications to be submitted to this court for its action thereon, and of the further fact that the questions, other than those of fact discussed therein, are in the main identical with those presented in the instant proceeding, we deem it advisable to devote to this a more extended discussion than will be required in later cases brought here for review.

[1] The petition herein is presented under the provisions of section 26 of the State Bar Act (Stats. 1927, p. 38), which provides that "any person so disbarred or suspended may, within sixty days after the filing of said certified copy of said decision, petition said Supreme Court to review said decision." The term "review," as used in this and in certain other portions of the act, we do not understand to bear the limited significance attributed to the "writ of review or certiorari," as the same is defined and the functions thereof stated in section 1067 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. To give it such limited meaning would result, not only in narrowing the powers of this court to the single issue of jurisdiction in the board to make such order, but would also be to consider said board as being invested with judicial functions, which, under the inhibition of section 1 of article 3 of the state Constitution, the legislative department of the state government has no power to repose in such a board. The review of the evidence, findings, and conclusions of the Board of Bar Governors which this term contemplates consists, and should consist, in a re-examination by this court of the entire record of the proceedings before said board as these are required to be kept and in due course transmitted to this court under the provisions of section 26 of the State Bar Act.

The petitioner makes a number of contentions assailing the constitutionality of the State Bar Act. Those of her contentions in that behalf, to which her counsel devotes the larger portion of his brief in support of this petition, have been answered adversely to said contentions in the two cases recently decided by this court, entitled State Bar of California v. Superior Court, 278 P. 432, and In re Cate, 279 P. 131. In addition to these the petitioner makes certain other contentions affecting the constitutionality of the act in question, which we do not deem to have sufficient merit to require a separate review. The only remaining contention of the petitioner wherein she attacks the constitutionality of said act has relation to the question as to whether or not the Legislature has undertaken by the terms of said act to invest the Board of Bar Governors of the state bar of California with judicial powers to be exercised with respect to the disbarment, suspension, or discipline of attorneys and counselors at law who are or who may become members of that organization. The insistence of the petitioner in that regard might seem to lead us in the direction of an extended and most interesting historical inquiry into the origin and development of the legal profession under the English and then later under the American systems of jurisprudence, were it not for the fact that we are confronted with the primary consideration as to whether the said act, when considered as a whole, is to be interpreted as an attempt to invest the Board of Bar Governors with any such judicial or even quasi-judicial power.

[2] It is a long-established and well-settled rule of statutory construction that an act of the state Legislature is not to be declared unconstitutional and void by the courts, unless it shall appear that there is a clear repugnance between the terms of the act and the inhibitions of the Constitution, and that where there exists a reasonable doubt from the consideration of the act as a whole as to whether it is repugnant to the Constitution the courts should hold it to be constitutional. This principle was declared by this court in the early and leading case of Bourland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 161, and has been consistently adhered to in the later decisions of this tribunal. Bearing in mind this principle, and giving the same full application to those provisions of said act which purport to define the powers of the Board of Bar Governors to be exercised in the matter of the disbarment, suspension, or discipline of attorneys and counselors at law who, by virtue of their membership in said organization, are subject to the exercise of the powers with which said board is invested, we find that these are chiefly set forth in section 26 of the State Bar Act, which reads as follows:

"The Board of Governors shall have power, after a hearing for any of the causes set forth in the laws of the state of California warranting disbarment or suspension, to disbar members or to discipline them by reproof, public or private or by suspension from practice, and the board shall have power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement. The Board of Governors shall keep a transcript of the evidence and proceedings in all matters involving disbarment or suspension and shall make findings of fact and a decision thereon. Upon the making of any decision resulting in disbarment or suspension from practice said board shall immediately file a certified copy of said decision, together with said transcript and findings, with the clerk of the Supreme Court. Any person so disbarred or suspended may, within sixty days after the filing of said certified copy of said decision, petition said Supreme Court to review said decision or to reverse or modify the same, and upon such review the burden shall be upon the petitioner to show wherein such decision is erroneous or unlawful. When sixty days shall have elapsed after the filing of said certified copy, if no petition for review shall have been filed, the Supreme Court shall make its order striking the name of such person from the roll of attorneys or suspending him for the period mentioned in said decision. If, upon review, the decision of said Board of Governors be affirmed, then said court shall forthwith make said order striking said name from the rolls or of suspension. The board shall have power to appoint one or more committees to take evidence and make findings on behalf of the board, or to take evidence on behalf of the board and forward the same to the board with a recommendation for action by the board. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting or altering the powers of the courts of this state to disbar or discipline members of the bar as this power at present exists."

[3, 4] It is the contention of the petitioner that the portion of the foregoing section which provides that "the Board of Governors shall have power * * * to disbar members or to discipline them by reproof, public or private, or by suspension from practice, and the board shall have power to pass upon all petitions for reinstatement," clearly invests the Board of Bar Governors with powers which are essentially judicial in character. But, when the further provisions of said section come under review, it becomes manifest that the powers with which the Board of Bar Governors are invested under the earlier and foregoing clause in said section possess no finality whatever in effecting the disbarment or suspension or discipline of any person subjected to the processes of the act, since we find it to be provided therein that, "upon the making of any decision resulting in disbarment or suspension from practice said board shall immediately file a certified copy of said decision, together with said transcript and findings, with the clerk of the Supreme Court," and that it is further provided therein that any person affected by such decision may within a specified period of time petition the Supreme Court for a review of said decision, and that "when sixty days shall have elapsed after the filing of said certified copy, if no petition for review shall have been filed, the Supreme Court shall make its order striking the name of such person from the roll of attorneys or suspending him for the period mentioned in said decision"; and it is further provided that "if, upon review, the decision of said Board of Governors be affirmed, then said court shall forthwith make said order striking said name from the rolls or of suspension." The section in question closes with the significant statement that "nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting or altering the powers of the courts of this state to disbar or discipline members of the bar as this power at present exists."

In the presence of the foregoing and latter quoted provisions of section 26 of the act it would seem to be manifest that the only order or orders which are provided for therein, and which have or were intended to have the effect of working the disbarment, suspension, or discipline of any person who might be subjected to the powers and processes with which the Board of Bar Governors are invested, are the final orders which are to be made by this court under the provisions of said act, and that any decision which the Board of Bar Governors may be empowered or minded to make in a proceeding pending before it is merely recommendatory in character, and has no other or further finality in effecting the disbarment, suspension, or discipline of those persons who may be brought before said board for an alleged violation of the terms of the act and of the professional and ethical requirements set forth therein. If the foregoing is to be held, as we clearly think it is, to express the full measure of the legislative intent in the formulation of said section, it follows necessarily that the Board of Bar Governors created under the provisions of the act have not thereby been invested with any powers which can be said to possess the finality and effect of judicial orders, and that in that respect, at least, the Legislature in the passing of the act cannot be held to have in any degree violated the inhibition of section 1 of article 3 of the state Constitution relative to the distribution of governmental powers.

[5] With respect to the facts underlying the present proceeding, as these are fully set forth in the record before us, we have made a careful examination of such record, and without undertaking to state in detail said facts we are fully satisfied that the petitioner in her relation to the estate of Nicholas John Steiner, both in her capacity as the executrix of said estate and of an attorney and counselor at law during the entire period of her administration thereof, has been guilty of such irregularities and of such a degree of dilatoriness and neglectfulness with regard to the affairs of said estate so grossly inconsistent with her trust and duty as such executrix, and with her oath and obligations as an attorney and counselor at law, as to justify her disbarment. The properties of said estate came into the possession of the petitioner when she was appointed executrix of the last will and testament of said decedent, to serve without bonds, in August, 1917. The estate, consisting chiefly of real property, was appraised at $2,000 in value, and was sold by the petitioner to one of her sisters for the sum of $2,050, which sum of money came into the possession of petitioner when the sale was confirmed by the court on December 15, 1920, subject to certain debts of the decedent and to the charges of administration.

The petitioner, as such executrix, took no action looking to a distribution of the residue of said estate and filed no account therein until the year 1924, when, upon application made by the heirs and legatees of said deceased, the petitioner was removed from her position as executrix because of her neglect of the business of the estate, and one Harold J. Turney was appointed administrator thereof with the will annexed. Since such appointment said administrator has persistently, but vainly, sought to have the petitioner turn over to him the residue of said estate, consisting of the sum of $850.91, according to the decree of the probate court settling the petitioner's account as such executrix, which was made and entered on July 16, 1926, and from which no appeal was taken. Notwithstanding the finality of such decree, the petitioner has wholly failed to comply with the terms thereof, but on the contrary, has pursued a policy of evasiveness and delay which has thus far prevented the heirs and legatees of said estate from receiving any portion whatever of their respective shares in the residue thereof.

It was this condition of affairs which led to the application for the petitioner's disbarment presented to and heard before the appropriate committee of the Board of Bar Governors of the State Bar, which, after a quite full and careful investigation, reported its conclusions to the State Bar and the Board of Bar Governors thereof, and which latter body, adopting said report, has recommended to this court the disbarment of the petitioner as an attorney and counselor at law. We are satisfied that such recommendation is justified by the facts of the case.

It is therefore ordered that the petitioner, Maud Stillwell Shattuck, also known as Mary Maud Stillwell, be and she is hereby disbarred from the further practice of law in this state as an attorney and counselor, and that her name be and is hereby stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors at law of the state of California.

PATTERSON et al. v. SPRING VALLEY WATER CO. (S. F. 12451.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨882(3)—Plaintiffs trying action on other theory could not contend that they were entitled to enjoin diversion of water because of common-law appropriation.

Plaintiffs, in action to enjoin defendant from obstructing and diverting waters of creek, could not contend for first time on appeal that they were entitled to judgment because of common-law appropriation by them of waters involved, where case was tried on theory that plaintiff claimed riparian right.

2. Judgment ⇨570(6)—Plaintiffs, in action to enjoin obstruction and diversion of waters, held bound by judgment of dismissal in another action based on agreement of settlement between parties.

Judgment of dismissal in suit by water district, based on an agreement of settlement between the parties, wherein water commission under agreement made investigations and fixed terms and conditions on which water company might store and divert waters without interfering with underground supply of landowners, held res judicata in suit by plaintiffs to enjoin obstruction and diversion of waters of a certain stream, where plaintiffs knew of agreement, participated in its negotiations, and approved it, and one of plaintiffs was a director in the water district.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by H. H. Patterson and another against the Spring Valley Water Company. Judgment adverse to plaintiffs, and they appeal. Affirmed.

H. M. Wright, of San Francisco, for appellants.

McCutchen, Olney, Mannon & Greene, of San Francisco (Warren Olney, Jr., and Robert L. Lipman, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment against them in an action to enjoin defendant from obstructing and diverting the waters of Alameda creek. It is difficult to state the facts in detail without reference to maps and charts, and an adequate representation of all the physical features of the lands, water courses, sloughs, channels, banks, etc., which have a bearing upon this litigation would be an unnecessary extension of this opinion.

The following brief, general statement of the facts we take from the appellants' opening brief, as it is a correct general statement, in so far as it goes, of what is shown by the pictures, maps, and schedules introduced in evidence:

Plaintiffs own and operate a ranch of about 3,500 acres, raising thereon sugar beets, potatoes, and other vegetables, and also alfalfa and some hay. It lies between Alvarado and Centerville, in Alameda county, and extends in a continuous tract, separated only by county roads, from Alameda creek to the tidelands adjoining the bay of San Francisco. Plaintiffs claim no rights, however, by reason of the contiguity of a portion of their lands to the low-water channel of Alameda creek, for the reason that the defendant, years before this litigation, acquired by condemnation from its then owner the right to divert all the water of the creek.

As Alameda creek nears its point of discharge into the bay, it divides into several channels or delta mouths. The oldest channel, the one of lowest elevation, called in the record Alameda creek proper, feathers out to nothingness on the borders of Alvarado, and its waters, even in the lowest flow, spread widely before finally collecting themselves in the various salt-water sloughs of the bay shore. Two other channels of discharge, known as Crandall slough and The Splits, take off the older channel at points higher up, and at different elevations above the bottom of Alameda creek, and proceed through plaintiffs' lands to a point of discharge in a salt-water slough of San Francisco bay, locally known as Patterson slough or Coyote Hills slough. Crandall slough has existed without change of location on the ground since 1852. There is a dispute between the parties as to the length of time The Splits channel has been in existence, but the court has found that it has been in existence since 1915.

In the natural course of the flow of these two streams, the waters, which are usually in large volume, naturally spread widely on each side of their main channels because of the flatness of the country, especially along the bay shore. In 1900 plaintiffs erected a levee across Crandall slough at its terminal and also along the western boundaries of the ranch, for the purpose of keeping out the salt water of Patterson slough, and in later years other levees have been built for the same purpose. The flooding caused by these levees and by the embankments of county roads and of the railroad traversing the property has not only resulted in an irrigation of about 1,200 acres of plaintiffs' land, but the heavy burden of silt carried by the winter flow of Alameda creek, especially the heavy floods, has annually fertilized the flooded area by sedimentation, and in addition, these silt-laden waters have built up and reclaimed a large area of former salt marsh by sedimentation and by leaching out the alkali from the underlying marsh soil. This process was continuous and cumulative until the acts of defendant cut down the flow of Alameda creek.

Prior to the filing of the complaint herein on October 2, 1920, defendant for many years had diverted water from Alameda creek, first at the Niles dam and later at the Sunol dam. In 1911 plaintiffs served a protest on defendant objecting to its diversions, and to threatened further diversion by the Calaveras dam of defendant, and these protests were repeated in later years. Defendant was engaged in erecting the Calaveras dam when the complaint was filed, but had not completed it, nor diverted any water by means of it, at the time of the trial. Intended diversions by defendant of other tributaries of Alameda creek, as its needs required, were admitted.

Plaintiffs claim the right to the accustomed high flow of Alameda creek under three alleged sources of title: First, as riparian proprietors along the high-water channel of discharge of Alameda creek known as Crandall slough; second, as riparian proprietors along The Splits, a similar high-water channel, flowing at a much lower stage than Crandall slough; third, as landowners overlying an underground body of water fed and maintained by Alameda creek.

The trial court found that Crandall slough was not a natural water course, as it did not have the physical characteristics of a water course, and that The Splits was an artificial and not a natural channel. The only questions presented by the appeal with reference to the first two contentions of plaintiffs is whether or not these findings with reference to Crandall slough and The Splits are sustained by the evidence.

As to the third contention of plaintiffs and appellants, with reference to underground or percolating waters, the defendant admits that the ground waters of the plaintiffs' land are in large part replenished or supplied by percolation from Alameda creek, and does not contend that it has a right to reduce or diminish the supply of underground water to the plaintiffs' lands. However, defendant claims that its operations, conducted as the defendant intended and was bound to do, would not reduce or diminish the supply of underground water to the plaintiffs' lands. The lands of the plaintiffs are within the Alameda county water district, and by agreement between the defendant and the water district, acting on behalf of the owners of the land within it, there had been submitted to the state water commission the question as to what were the terms and conditions, if any, upon which the defendant might store and divert water from the creek without affecting the supply of underground water. The state water commission made its award prescribing certain terms and conditions upon which it found the defendant might store and divert water without affecting the supply of underground water. The defendant contended that operations conducted in accordance with these terms and conditions would not affect plaintiffs' underground water rights. Defendant also contended that the plaintiffs were bound by a certain judgment in favor of defendant, rendered in an action brought against it by the Alameda county water district on behalf of and as the representative of landowners within the district, among whom were the plaintiffs, to protect the ground water rights of such owners. This action was brought and prosecuted with the personal knowledge, consent, and co-operation of the plaintiffs, and with the intention on their part of relying on the judgment therein if a favorable judgment were obtained. Judgment went against the district on the ground that it had, by agreement, submitted to the state water commission the question as to the conditions upon which the defendant could store and divert water without affecting the supply of underground water for the lands within the district, and the water commission had prescribed these conditions, and the defendant was complying with them.

[1] We have examined the record for evidence upon which the findings with reference to Crandall slough and The Splits might be based, and we consider the evidence sufficient to support the findings, which concludes the first inquiry raised upon the appeal. But appellants contend that, if this court holds that The Splits is an artificial channel, created by appellants' work in 1915 and the years following, then appellants are common-law appropriators of the water contained therein, and are entitled to an injunction against all diversions by respondent from Alameda creek and its tributaries above The Splits, excepting diversions at Sunol, valid by prescription, and diversions under the Calaveras appropriation, if the latter is valid, but it is also argued that appellants' right by appropriation is superior also to the Calaveras appropriation because of respondent's failure to prosecute that work with diligence. This position is met by respondent by pointing out that the plaintiffs did not plead common-law appropriation, nor was any evidence introduced for the purpose of showing appropriation, and the case was tried upon the theory that plaintiffs claimed a riparian right, and that the contention of appropriation is made in this court for the first time. It is well settled that this may not be done; the case may not be tried in an appellate court without pleadings or evidence directed to the issues made in argument in such court.

[2] As to the third contention of appellants that they are entitled to the water as owners of land overlying an underground body of water, fed and maintained by Alameda creek, we think the defense of res judicata is available to defendant. The matter has been concluded by the recent case of Coachella Valley County Water District v. Stevens (Cal. Sup.) 274 P. 538. Appellants seek to avoid the force of the holding in the case last cited by the claim that the judgment in the water district suit was not a judgment on the merits and therefore not a judgment in bar.

The judgment in the case of Alameda County Water District v. Spring Valley Water Co., 67 Cal. App. 533, 227 P. 953, was one of dismissal, based upon an agreement of settlement between the parties. The agreement is contained in the transcript on appeal. It recites, in effect, that the lands within the district are underlaid by water bearing strata supplied from Alameda creek; that yet there are at times large amounts of water which pass down the creek and into the bay without seeping into the underground strata; and that the parties have, for want of data, been unable to agree upon any arrangement that would permit the water company to store and divert additional water from the creek without injury to the landowners. It is further recited that the parties desired to obtain, under the direction of a competent and disinterested board, the data necessary for a fair and intelligent solution of the problem, and then to have such board determine, if it could, what would be a fair and intelligent solution.

Upon the basis of these recitals, the agreement goes on to provide that the state water commission, as then constituted, should gather the necessary data, the water company bearing the expense, and, when the commission had, in its opinion, sufficient data, it should then, if it could, fix the terms and conditions upon which the water company might store and divert additional water without damage to the landowners. It was also provided that, should the commission reach such a decision, such decision was to be final and conclusive upon the parties. Pending a decision by the commission, it was agreed that the water district suit should not proceed further, and, if a decision should be reached by the commission, the suit was to be dismissed, but that, if the commission was unable to reach a decision, the suit should then proceed as the parties might be advised, without prejudice because of the intervening lapse of time. It was also agreed that, if the commission reached a decision, the district would use its best efforts to have the same acquiesced in and observed by all the landowners of the district. According to the findings of the trial court in the instant case, the plaintiffs herein knew of this agreement, participated in its negotiations, knew its terms, and approved of it. One of the Pattersons was a director in the water district.

The water commission made the investigations contemplated over a period of years and at the expense of the water company, and then gave a decision, fixing the terms and conditions upon which the water company might store and divert water without interfering with the underground supply of the landowners. After the decision of the water commission, the water company moved that the action between itself and the water district be dismissed on the ground that the district and its coplaintiffs were bound by the agreement to dismiss it, and this motion was granted and the action dismissed.

"It has been frequently held that a judgment or order dismissing an action based upon a stipulation or agreement of the parties settling and adjusting the claim or cause of action in suit and providing for the dismissal is a bar to another action for the same cause. Such a judgment has sometimes been said to be the equivalent of a retraxit at common law." 2 Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) p. 1596.

In Crossman v. Davis, 79 Cal. 603, 21 P. 963, it was said: "The only real question presented by the record is, whether or not a certain agreement between the grantors of the parties to this action, by which said parties compromised and dismissed an action pending between them, involving the title to this same property, was a bar to the plaintiff's claim to an interest therein. The court below found that the dismissal of the action under a special agreement involving other disputed matters was sufficient to bar the plaintiff's claim, and in this we think the court was right. Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 542."

The conclusions we have reached make it unnecessary to discuss other matters developed by appellants at great length in their briefs, but presented for decision only upon the assumption that one or the other of the channels involved here is a natural water course, contrary to the findings, and that the plaintiffs and appellants have riparian rights therein.

The judgment is affirmed.

BUCHANAN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 6927.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 5, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 4, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1929.

- 1. Evidence ⇨82—Legal presumptions aid record only as to acts or facts on which record is silent.

Legal presumptions do not come to the aid of the record except as to acts or facts touching which record is silent.

- 2. Evidence ⇨82—Where record is silent, it is presumed that what should have been done was rightly done.

Where record as to acts or facts is silent, it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done.

- 3. Evidence ⇨82—It will not be presumed that something different was done than record stated.

Where record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done.

- 4. Courts ⇨39—In determining whether jurisdiction appears, whole record must be consulted.

In determining whether want of jurisdiction appears, whole record must be consulted, and, notwithstanding that portion thereof recites facts and acts done which, if record were otherwise silent, would make it affirmatively show want of jurisdiction, yet, if in another part further acts or facts not irreconcilable with former be recited which establish jurisdiction, it is sufficient to uphold judgment.

- 5. Insane persons ⇨33(2)—On certiorari to review order appointing guardian presumption is court performed duty, where petition averred that citation was issued to incompetent by court pursuant to order (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15).

Where it was not only averred in petition in guardianship proceedings that citation to alleged incompetent was issued by court for him to appear at hearing to have guardian appointed for him, but that citation recited that it was issued pursuant to order of court, it must be presumed, on certiorari to review order declaring petitioner incompetent person and appointing guardian of his person and estate, that court regularly performed official duty, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, relating thereto.

- 6. Affidavits ⇨18—Affidavits, though not best evidence, are admissible regarding matters incidental to main proceedings, or as basis of preliminary action.

While affidavits are not in their nature best evidence of issuable facts, they are as general rule admissible in evidence regarding matters which are incidental to main proceedings, or as basis of some preliminary action.

- 7. Insane persons ⇨33(1)—Evidence of physician's affidavit held sufficient to support court's implied conclusion of incompetent's inability to attend proceedings (Code Civ. Proc. § 1763).

Where sworn statement of physician in guardianship proceedings showed alleged incompetent was under his care and in condition which rendered him unable to attend proceedings, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, evidence held sufficient to support implied conclusion of court that alleged incompetent was unable to attend.

- 8. Insane persons ⇨33(2)—Truth of physician's affidavit that alleged incompetent was unable to attend guardianship proceedings held not reviewable on certiorari.

Where physician's affidavit showing alleged incompetent was unable to attend guardianship proceedings which was attached to citation showed that it was served upon alleged incompetent, it was prima facie evidence of that fact and question whether affidavit was true or false cannot be reviewed in certiorari proceeding by incompetent to review order declaring him incompetent and directing issuance of letters of guardianship.

Application by Findley Buchanan by his guardian ad litem, Thos. D. Aitken, for certiorari against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and another, to review an order of respondent court declaring petitioner incompetent and appointing a guardian. Writ denied.

Aitken & Aitken, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Robert McMahon, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. A proceeding to review an order by respondent court declaring petitioner, who appears herein by his guardian ad litem, to be an incompetent person, and directing the issuance of letters of guardianship of his person and estate.

The petition for letters was filed by William Buchanan, a brother, on January 21, 1929, whereupon an order appointing Saturday, January 26, 1929, at the hour of 10 a. m., as the day and hour for hearing the petition, and directing notice thereof to be given, was made by respondent court. This order directed notice to be given "to Patrick Flannery, the person having the care of said Findley Buchanan, and to the following named relatives of Findley Buchanan residing in this city and county, to wit, William Buchanan, brother, by citation to be served on said parties at least five days before the hearing."

The petition in the present proceeding alleges that "on the same date, to-wit, January 21, 1929, a citation was issued by respondent court, directing your petitioner to be and appear in the courtroom" of the court on the day and at the hour fixed by the order. This citation, which named petitioner and directed him to show cause why a guardian of his person and estate should not be appointed, was attested by the clerk of the court, with its seal attached, and recited that the same was issued by order of the court. According to an affidavit attached to the citation, which was dated January 22, 1929, and filed therewith, the citation was personally served upon petitioner on the day of its issuance. Petitioner did not appear at the hearing, but there was filed on that date a writing, purporting to have been signed and sworn to by a physician, stating that petitioner was under his care, and treatment, and that his physical and mental condition was such that it would be impossible for him to be present.

Petitioner contends that respondent was without jurisdiction to declare him to be incompetent or to appoint a guardian of his person or estate for the following reasons, namely: That no order directing the service of a citation upon him was made, that, notwithstanding the affidavit of service, no citation was in fact served upon him, and that the sworn statement filed by the physician was insufficient to excuse compliance with the requirement of section 1763 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that an alleged incompetent, if able to attend, shall be produced at the hearing. The above section also provides that, upon the filing of the affidavit, "such court or judge must cause a notice to be given to the supposed insane or incompetent person of the time and place of hearing the case, not less than five days before the time so appointed. * * *" The order fixing the time and place of hearing contained no direction that a citation to the alleged incompetent be issued or served, and no finding appears in the order appointing the guardian that such notice was required or given. The latter order recited that the petition came on regularly for hearing "upon due proof to the satisfaction of said court that notice has been given to the relatives of said Findley Buchanan residing in this city and county, as required by law and as directed by this court. * * *" It is contended that the above order shows what notices of the hearing were caused to be given; that consequently the rule that, when the record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done, applies, and it cannot be presumed that an order was made directing a notice to the alleged incompetent.

[1-4] As was held in the leading case of Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 407, 94 Am. Dec. 742, the rule by which inspection of the record is governed is that legal presumptions do not come to the aid of the record except as to acts or facts touching which the record is silent. In such case it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done; but, where the record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done. In determining, however, whether a want of jurisdiction appears, the whole record must be consulted, and, notwithstanding that a portion thereof recites facts and acts done which, if the record were otherwise silent, would make it affirmatively show want of jurisdiction, yet, if in another part further acts or facts not irreconcilable with the former be recited which establish jurisdiction, it is sufficient to uphold the judgment.

[5] The present is a case where the presumption that official duty has been regularly performed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15) should apply, as it is not only averred in the petition that a citation directed to the alleged incompetent was issued by respondent, but the citation recites that it was issued pursuant to the order of the court. The conclusion that such an order was made would not contradict the recitals in the order of appointment, but would be reconcilable therewith. Both acts may have been done, and to so hold would not only be consistent with the record, but in accord with the presumption.

[6, 7] With regard to the sufficiency of the evidence to prove the inability of the alleged incompetent to attend the hearing, the record with the exception of the sworn statement of a physician does not disclose the evidence considered by the court on the question, and it is not alleged that no other evidence was adduced at the hearing. While affidavits are not in their nature the best evidence of issuable facts, they are as a general rule admissible in evidence regarding matters which are incidental to the main proceedings, or as the basis of some preliminary action. 2 Corp. Jur. "Affidavits," § 138, pp. 372, 373. Such was its purpose here, and we cannot say from the record that the evidence before the court was insufficient to support its implied conclusion that the alleged incompetent was unable to attend.

[8-11] The affidavit attached to the citation shows that the same was served upon petitioner. This was prima facie evidence of the fact; and the question whether the affidavit was true or false cannot be reviewed in this proceeding. While this court may inquire into the question as to whether or not there was any evidence whatever to prove the jurisdictional facts (Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 P. 35), its inquiry is limited to that upon which the lower court acted (City of Los Angeles v. Young, 118 Cal. 295, 50 P. 534, 62 Am. St. Rep. 234; Chambers v. Supervisors, 57 Cal. App. 401, 207 P. 288); and, if there was evidence before that tribunal upon which it might act, its order will not be reviewed (Miller & Lux v. Supervisors, 189 Cal. 254, 208 P. 304). The province of certiorari is to review the record, and to determine therefrom whether the subordinate tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction. The reviewing court is bound thereby, and every intendment must be made to support the judgment. Roe v. Super. Ct., 60 Cal. 93; Halpern v. Super. Ct., 190 Cal. 384, 212 P. 916. In the present instance the jurisdictional facts are sufficiently shown by the record, and the writ is accordingly denied.

ADJUSTMENT CORPORATION v. MARCO.★ (Civ. 6721.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 13, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 12, 1929.

1. Judgment $\S$ 253(1)—In action on assignment for rent, it was error to award sum for rent additional to that demanded.

In action on assignment for four months' rent, trial court erred in awarding additional sum for rent accruing between commencement of action and rendition of judgment.

2. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 232—Assignment of rent transferred right to attorney's fee provided for in lease (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1084).

Where lease provided for attorney's fee in case of suit to enforce lessors' rights, party suing on assignment of rent could recover such fee, as under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1084, the transfer of a thing transfers all its incidents, unless expressly excepted.

3. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 184(2)—Where lease was in force, court properly refused to apply security deposit on rent sued for.

Where lessee deposited money as security for faithful performance of covenants of lease which provided that, if lessee faithfully performed all covenants, lessor was to apply said deposit on account of last month's rent, court properly refused to apply deposit on rent sued for, as lease was still in force.

4. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 184(2)—If lease was terminated on lessee's default, lessor could retain only that amount of security deposit necessary to cover damages.

Default of lessee would not forfeit security deposit, but on termination of lease, lessor would be allowed to retain only amount necessary to cover damages resulting from lessee's breach.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive.

Findings of trial court on conflicting evidence are conclusive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by the Adjustment Corporation against Albert B. Marco. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Thomas P. White, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Black, Hammack & Black, of Los Angeles (Carey McWilliams, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover $2,000, being four months' rent of certain premises leased to the defendant by Frank McCoy and Florence McCoy, his wife, who by an instrument in writing assigned to the plaintiff their claim therefor. The plaintiff also asked for the sum of $250 as an attorney's fee for prosecuting the action, the lease between the McCoy's and the defendant having provided that, if suit should be brought by the lessors against the defendant to enforce any of their rights under the lease, the defendant should become liable for a reasonable attorney's fee.

The answer of the defendant denied the material allegations of the complaint; and as a separate defense averred that he had been induced to enter into the lease by means of certain false representations, and that, after entering into possession of the premises, he discovered that they bore a bad reputation by reason of the commission thereon prior to the making of the lease of violations of the liquor laws of the United States and of acts of immorality, in consequence of which he was unable to conduct a profitable business thereon, whereupon he sought and obtained from the lessors a cancellation of the lease, relinquishing to them in consideration thereof the sum of $500, theretofore held by them as security for performance on his part of the terms of the lease. Defendant also pleaded the same facts by way of estoppel as a third defense, alleging that by reason thereof he was induced to surrender the premises to the lessors.

A trial being had, the court filed findings of fact and conclusions of law, in which it found the allegations of the complaint to be true, and found against the allegations of the defendant's second and third defenses, and entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $3,375, being $2,000, the amount of rent sued for, $1,125 for rent of the premises accruing between the time of the commencement of the action and the rendition of judgment, and $250 for an attorney's fee.

The defendant has taken an appeal from the judgment and urges as grounds therefor that the court was in error in awarding to plaintiff any sum for rent additional to that demanded in the complaint; that the court also erred in allowing to the plaintiff an attorney's fee; that the court was in error in not crediting the defendant with the sum of $500 held by the lessors as security; and, finally, that the findings in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, particularly on the defendant's affirmative defenses, are not supported by the evidence.

[1] The appellant's contention on the first point we think must be sustained. The only evidence in the case supporting any right on the part of the plaintiff to recover any sum whatever from the defendant is his written assignment of the sum of $2,000, being rental for four months. The assignment reads as follows: "Los Angeles, California April 24, 1925. In consideration of the sum of One Dollar ($1.00) and other good and valuable consideration, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, we hereby assign, set over, and transfer to the Adjustment Corporation, a corporation, all right, title and interest in and to a certain claim for Two Thousand and 00/100 Dollars ($2,000.00) against Albert B. Marco on account of rental of a certain premises near Sawtelle, California, for the months of January, February, March, and April, 1925, at the rate of Five Hundred and 00/100 Dollars ($500.00) per month. Frank McCoy Florence McCoy." It is well settled that an assignee cannot recover in the absence of an allegation and proof of his assignment. Read v. Buffum, 79 Cal. 77, 21 P. 555, 12 Am. St. Rep. 131; King v. Felton, 63 Cal. 16; Lapique v. Denis et al., 23 Cal. App. 683, 139 P. 237. There is no evidence in the record of any assignment, either oral or written, of rent accruing after the commencement of the action—even assuming that such rent could be recovered in this action. The respondent makes some contention that there was a delivery of the lease to it by the lessors, and that we should infer therefrom an oral assignment of whatever might be due to them. But there is no evidence in the record that the lease was ever delivered to the plaintiff; and, a fortiori, none as to the intention with which any such delivery was made.

[2] Coming to the appellant's second contention respecting the attorney's fee, we have no doubt that this amount was correctly allowed. The lease by its terms provided for it in case of suit to enforce any of the rights of the lessors. The right to such fees in that event was an incident to the demand, and a valuable one. If the suit had been brought by the lessors, there is no question but that such an allowance would have been proper. Section 1084 of the Civil Code provides that "the transfer of a thing transfers also all its incidents, unless expressly excepted."

* * * No case precisely in point has been cited in the briefs, but the principle has been frequently applied quite aside from its common application in the case of notes secured by mortgage or pledge, where it is uniformly held that the transfer of the note without mention of the security carries with it the benefit of the security. Thus in Heisen v. Smith, 138 Cal. 216, 71 P. 180, 94 Am. St. Rep. 39, it was held that an assignment by a ward of a judgment against the guardian upon the settlement of his accounts operates as an equitable assignment of the ward's cause of action against the sureties of the guardian; and entitles the assignee to maintain an action against them upon their bond. In Lattimer v. Capay Valley Land Co., 137 Cal. 288, 70 P. 82, 84, it was held that an assignment of a contract of sale of real property by the purchaser carried with it all the right which the assignor had by reason of its breach by the vendor, including the right to rescind the contract and recover money expended by the assignor. In support of its conclusion, the court said: "The assignor having parted with his interest in the land, as well as in the contract, of course there was no right left in him to recover the costs of any improvements placed on the land on a breach of the contract by appellant [vendor]. If, then, this right was not left in the assignor, what had become of it? The most satisfactory answer to this question is that it followed the contract; the assignee stands in the shoes of the assignor, and whatever right of recovery was in the assignor on a rescission of the contract passed with the contract to the assignee. We think this principle finds illustration in the well-considered case of Oneida v. Ontario Bank, 21 N. Y. 490, wherein it is said: 'He who sells a security and receives his pay for it necessarily sells whatever claim or right the security is understood by the parties to represent.'"

In Duncan v. Hawn, 104 Cal. 10, 37 P. 626, it was held that the laborers' lien given by the statute passes by the assignment of the claim by the laborer which the lien is given to secure, and may be enforced by the assignee; and in Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 129 P. 462, it was decided that, where a creditor of a corporation takes from it promissory notes evidencing its debt to him, and passes them on in the course of business to his creditor, the assignment of the notes operates as an equitable assignment of the original indebtedness, notwithstanding that the notes themselves were eventually determined to be invalid as corporate obligations.

We think it clear that the application of this principle in the present case entitled the plaintiff to recover from the defendant the attorney's fee in question in precisely the same manner as his assignors could have done.

[3] Appellant next questions the correctness of the court's refusal to apply on the amount due the plaintiff the $500 deposited by the defendant as security for the performance of the covenants of the lease. The precise provision in question is in the following terms: "The lessee herewith deposits with the lessors the sum of $500 as security for the faithful performance by the lessee of all of his covenants hereunder; the lessors may have recourse to said deposit upon three days' written notice to the lessee for any damage they may suffer by reason of any default of the lessee hereunder, in which event the lessee agrees to immediately restore said deposit to its original amount. If the lessee fully performs all of his covenants herein contained, the lessors shall apply said deposit or any part thereof remaining in their hands to the credit of said lessee on account of the last month's rent becoming due hereunder." Since the court found that the lease is still in force and effect, and since by its terms it had at the time of the rendition of the judgment some two years to run, the lessors were not bound to resort to it to indemnify themselves against any particular item of damage, but they could hold it for future protection, especially as, if the lessors had applied any part of it to make good a default in the payment of rent, it immediately became the defendant's duty to restore the deposit to its original amount.

[4] We are not in accord with the contention of the respondent made with respect to this deposit that upon any default by the lessee it was immediately forfeited to the lessors and became their property. We think the rule applicable in the present case is stated in 16 Ruling Case Law (Landlord and Tenant), p. 931, where it is said: "Unless it clearly appears that it was the intention of the parties that the amount deposited was to be retained by the lessor irrespective of the actual amount of damages the stipulation for its retention by or forfeiture to the lessor will be regarded in the nature of a penalty, and the deposit in the nature of a security, and the lessor upon the termination of the lease, though for the default of the tenant, will be allowed to retain only the amount necessary to cover the damage resulting from the lessee's breach of his contract."

[5] The remaining contention of the appellant is that the findings of the court are not supported by the evidence. Only one point of the appellant's argument under this head need be noticed; namely, that the trial court refused to permit him to prove certain essential parts of his defenses. As we read the record, it does not sustain the contention of the appellant. The court did at the time defendant commenced to put in his case refer to one of the alleged false representations upon which the defendant relied in his attack upon the lease, and stated that it would not hear evidence upon it or any evidence of facts occurring before the time of the alleged cancellation by agreement. As a matter of fact, the allegations in question, even if true, would not have constituted ground for rescission by the defendant of the lease; nor did he in fact attempt a rescission. The court did eventually admit all evidence offered by the defendant tending to prove his defenses of cancellation by agreement and estoppel. The evidence of the defendant and his witnesses upon these matters was directly contradicted by the plaintiff's case, and the findings of the trial court—which are amply sustained—must therefore stand.

In view of the foregoing, we conclude that the judgment must be modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $1,125, and, as thus modified, it will stand affirmed, the appellant to recover his costs of appeal.

PEOPLE v. WHIPPLE. (Cr. 1805.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 5, 1929.

1. Criminal law ☞9—There is no common-law crime in this state.

In view of Pen. Code, § 6, in this state, common law is of no effect, so far as the specification of what acts or conduct shall constitute crime is concerned.

2. Criminal law ☞31—There is no unwritten or common-law justification for commission of crime.

Where there is no statutory excuse or justification, there is neither common-law nor unwritten law justification for commission of a crime.

3. Escape ☞6—Escaping from an officer was not justified by unsanitary conditions of jail or fear of punishment.

Unsanitary conditions of jail, or fear of inhumane punishment inflicted by custodian, was not justification for escaping from an officer.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

H. Whipple was convicted of the crime of escaping from an officer, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. E. Balcom and H. Wenzlaff, both of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of escaping from an officer (section 107, Pen. Code), and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is an admitted fact that defendant, while in the custody of the sheriff under lawful judgment of imprisonment for a misdemeanor, and while working in the prison camp of San Bernardino county, made his escape from the custody of the sheriff and from said prison camp. The sole defense offered is that the conditions existing in the camp, together with the brutal and inhumane treatment of the defendant, made his imprisonment intolerable and justified the escape.

The gist of the point made on appeal herein is that the trial court committed reversible error in instructing the jury that an excuse for the escape of defendant, founded upon any alleged unsanitary conditions, or alleged harsh, brutal, or inhumane treatment received by him at the hands of his custodian, would constitute no defense in the law for the commission of the offense.

[1, 2] In this state the common law is of no effect so far as the specification of what acts or conduct shall constitute a crime is concerned. Section 6, Pen. Code; 7 Cal. Jur. 841. In order that a public offense be committed, some statute, ordinance, or regulation prior in time to the commission of the act must denounce it; likewise with excuses or justifications—if no statutory excuse or justification apply as to the commission of the particular offense, neither the common law nor the so-called “unwritten law” may legally supply it. As an illustration, section 187 of the Penal Code defines the crime of murder as the unlawful killing of a human being, with malice aforethought; section 195 lays down the law as to when or under what circumstances a homicide is excusable, and by sections 196, 197, and 198 of the same Code the conditions are specified which must exist before a homicide is justifiable. Although the “unwritten law” sometimes may be regarded by jurors as sufficient, and so accepted by them, in the law the principle is unknown and unrecognizable. The legal excuse or legal justification for murder may be found only in the statute.

Nor, ordinarily, at least, will the “law of necessity” prove sufficient as a legal excuse. For example, take the extreme case of a man burglarizing a bakery for the sole purpose of procuring bread for his starving babes. Even in such dire circumstances, so far as the particular offense is concerned, the law itself is powerless to accept the excuse. Nor yet will good faith, or the fact that the end accomplished is rightful, avail as a defense. The probation law (section 1203, Pen. Code) is broad and comprehensive in its scope. The relief of a defendant, who, by reason of mitigating circumstances, seeks exemption from punishment for the commission of a crime by him, must rest upon the liberal terms of that statute and the wise discretion of the trial court. In the case of People v. Beggs, 178 Cal. 79, 172 P. 152, it was held that one who obtained payment from a thief of the value of property stolen by him, by threatening him with an accusation and prosecution thereon unless he made such payment, was guilty of the crime of extortion, without regard to the exercise of good faith in exacting the amount justly due.

[3] Although authority exists to the effect that, generally speaking, absolute necessity will excuse the commission of a criminal offense (Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 119 Ky. 519, 84 S. W. 566; Commonwealth v. Brooks, 99 Mass. 434), so far as the crime of escaping from a jail is concerned, the authorities are in practical accord in holding that ordinary adverse circumstances will not present such a condition as will support a legal excuse for effecting an escape. In 1 Hale, P. C. 611 (1736), it is said that “if a prison be fired by accident, and there be a necessity to break prison to save his life, this excuseth the felony.” The sole authority for such declaration of the common law is Coke’s Second Institutes, 590, where, without the citation of either judicial or other authority in its support, the statement occurs that if “a man imprisoned for petit larceny or for killing of a man se defendendo, or by misfortune, and break prison, it is no felony, because he shall not for the first offense subire iudicium vitæ vel membri. Et sic de similibus.” But whatever may be the common law with reference to escape, where either “se defendendo,” misfortune, or “first offense” is or may be invoked as a defense to the accusation for which imprisonment has resulted, so far as the decisions by the courts of sister states are concerned, neither the insubstantial condition of the jail (State v. Davis, 14 Nev. 439, 33 Am. Rep. 563), fear of violence from third persons (Hinkle v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 66 S. W. 816), nor unmerited punishment at the hands of the custodian (Johnson v. State, 122 Ga. 172, 50 S. E. 65) will present a situation which in the law may be accepted as an excuse for violation of the statute.

In the case of State v. Cahill, 196 Iowa, 486, 194 N. W. 191, the defendant was charged with escaping from a solitary cell of the penitentiary, rather than from the prison itself. He presented the defense that while in solitary confinement his food consisted of an insufficient quantity of bread and water; that the cell was infested with bugs, worms, and vermin; that the toilet was so out of repair that when it was flushed the water ran out upon the floor; that the cell was without a chair, bed, or other reasonable comforts. He further claimed that he had been suffering from lung trouble, and that the cell was rendered unhealthful by the conditions existing and the manner in which it was kept. In deciding the particular question of whether such conditions would constitute a defense to the crime of escape, the court, in part, said: "The quantity of bread furnished appellant was inadequate if the confinement was protracted over many days, but neither this nor the other matters complained of afforded him the slightest justification for escaping from the cell, or attempting to secure his liberty from confinement."

The case of State v. Davis, 14 Nev. 439, 33 Am. Rep. 563, supra, was an "escape" case in which, in the absence of a proper foundation by defendant that he had exhausted the lawful means of relief in his power before attempting to effect his escape, it was held not error in the trial court to reject evidence as to "what was the condition of the jail * * * as to whether it was a filthy, unwholesome, and loathsome place, full of vermin and uncleanness. * * *" In passing upon the question there presented, among other things, the court said: "A person confined by the law should be delivered by the law; and no other means can be justified in any case, until the officers in charge, and the law, refuse him relief; and then the evidence of the necessity must be clear and conclusive, and the act must proceed no further than the emergency absolutely requires. Bishop on C. L. vol. 1, § 352."

It is manifest that to allow a prisoner to decide whether the conditions justify him in attempting to escape would be destructive of the necessary discipline which must be maintained in any well ordered prison. As was said in one case: "The escape or attempt to escape by a prisoner, whether from a local jail or a state prison, tends to the general disruption of the prison discipline, and, as often such conduct by prisoners has caused, may be the cause of the slaying or serious wounding of officers or guards of the prison from which the escape or attempt to escape is made. Hence, such an act by persons legally confined in prisons or jails before their terms of imprisonment have expired is justly regarded as among the most flagrant violations of the rules governing prison discipline."

In re Haines, 68 Cal. App. 522, 527, 229 P. 984, 985. Generally speaking, when a man has been lawfully convicted of a crime, and a judgment of imprisonment has been regularly entered against him, it becomes his duty to submit to the penalty. Unquestionably, it is the duty of the state and of its officers to accord to the prisoner such safety and humane treatment as may be consistent with the safekeeping of the prisoner. It is, unfortunately, possible for the conditions of imprisonment to be so unwholesome as to seriously imperil the health and life of the prisoner by exposure to infection and disease, and unhappily it is possible for prison guards to subject prisoners to abuses and serious physical injury unjustified by any disciplinary need. However, a prisoner who escapes for any such reason does so at his peril.

In the instant case—aside from the principle that what constitutes a crime is necessarily based upon statute, and so must positive law excuse or justify it—the record fails to disclose any attempt on the part of defendant to show that, before escaping, he had, in good faith or at all, endeavored to be relieved by lawful means from any alleged improper irregularities or practices which he claimed were present in the matter of his confinement. The trial court committed no error in giving to the jury the instruction to which reference has been had. However, it is with very great reluctance that we admit that, under practically all of the authorities, the foregoing opinion states the established law. The testimony of the defendant, although contradicted by that of other witnesses, might have been believed by the jury. And, if the facts were as stated by the defendant, he was subjected to brutal treatment of extreme atrocity. In a remote mountain camp, far from the sheriff's office, what relief could he obtain by telling his custodian that he wanted to see the sheriff? If the defense could be admitted at all, it should not be conditioned upon the making of a plainly useless request. The function of the court is to declare the law as it is, and we are not authorized to usurp the place of the Legislature, which has the power to make laws, and the duty to make just laws.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

Where part of consideration for purchase of property was illegal, the entire contract was void, it being impossible to determine which part of the consideration was controlling factor which induced agreement, and such contract could not be made the basis of a suit for damages under Civ. Code, § 1608.

3. Licenses ⇨39—Agreement by corporation to transfer stock without authority of corporation commissioner was illegal (St. 1917, p. 673, § 3).

A contract by a corporation to exchange corporate stock without authority of the corporation commissioner to sell or transfer stock was illegal under St. 1917, p. 673, § 3 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 3814, § 3).

4. Corporations ⇨82—Judgment for plaintiff for face value of stock agreed to be exchanged held not supported by evidence, where market value was not alleged or proved.

Where, in action for breach of contract to exchange corporation's stock, market value of stock was neither alleged nor proved, judgment for plaintiff for the face value of stock agreed to be exchanged was not supported by the evidence, as the measure of damages in such case is the market value.

5. Trial ⇨404(1)—Finding that allegations of complaint were true supported no facts not clearly and directly alleged therein.

Finding of trial court that allegations of complaint were true supported no facts beyond such as were clearly and directly alleged in complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by C. H. Castle, Jr., and another against the Acme Ice Cream Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Joseph C. Meyerstein, of San Francisco, and H. K. Landram, of Merced, for appellant.

Edward Bickmore, of Merced, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in an action for damages for the breach of a contract and for partial failure of the consideration therefor.

The plaintiffs were the owners of an ice cream business in Merced, called the Castle Ice Cream Company, valued at the sum of $45,000, which was sold and delivered to the defendant corporation, subject to an indebtedness of $26,679.65, which obligation was assumed by the purchaser. This sale was consummated pursuant to the terms of a written contract which was executed by the respective parties August 22, 1922. The title to the ice cream plant thereupon passed to the defendant. The balance of the purchase price agreed upon was the sum of $1,000 in cash, which was paid, and the transfer of "common stock of the Acme Ice Cream Company in the amount of $9,000 par value," which was delivered. In a subsequent written contract executed by the respective parties August 26, 1922, it was agreed that within two years therefrom plaintiffs might exchange one-half of the common stock which they held for preferred stock of the corporation defendant. On May 25, 1924, pursuant to the last-mentioned agreement, plaintiffs tendered to the defendant an amount of common stock of the corporation defendant of the par value of $4,500, and demanded in exchange therefor preferred stock of an equivalent value. The defendant failed and refused to consummate this exchange of stock. Thereupon, for the first time, the plaintiff discovered that the defendant corporation had never procured an authorization from the corporation commissioner pursuant to the Corporate Securities Act of California to sell or transfer either its common or preferred stock, and that the common stock of the par value of $9,000 which had been transferred to the plaintiffs was promotion stock which had been previously issued by authority of the corporation commissioner to C. O. Swanberg, the president of the corporation defendant, in payment of obligations due to him from the corporation, and that said Swanberg and not the corporation defendant was the owner and holder of the common stock which was transferred to plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then tendered to the defendant the entire $9,000 issue of common stock, on the ground that its transfer to them was void, and demanded in lieu thereof the sum of $9,000 cash, which the defendant refused. This action for damages was then commenced. Judgment for the sum of $9,000 was rendered in favor of plaintiffs for partial failure of consideration. The court found that all of the allegations of the complaint were true, and, upon the contrary, that all of the allegations of the answer in conflict therewith were untrue. No other findings were adopted.

The appellant contends that this cause was necessarily an action for rescission, which must fail for the reason that plaintiffs omitted to restore or tender to the defendant the entire consideration paid for the ice cream business, and that a suit for damages will not lie based upon a void contract. In other words, the appellant asserts that, if the portion of the consideration for the purchase of the ice cream business relating to the transfer of corporation stock is void for lack of authorization on the part of the corporation commissioner, then the entire contract is void, and may not become the basis of an action for damages.

[1] It is conceded that this is not an action for rescission. Indeed, the necessary prerequisites to the maintenance of an action in rescission pursuant to section 1691 of the Civil Code were neither pleaded nor proved. There is no contention on the part of respondents that they restored, or offered to restore, everything of value received by them from the appellant under the contract. Rescission is the proper remedy for cancellation of a contract where it is unlawful and the invalidity does not appear on the face of the instrument. Section 3406, Civ. Code.

[2] Where a part of the consideration for the purchase of property is illegal, the entire contract is void (section 1608, Civ. Code; Taterson v. Kehrlein, 88 Cal. App. 34, 263 P. 285, 292; 13 C. J. 513, § 471), for the reason that it is impossible to determine which part of the consideration was the controlling factor which induced the agreement to sell. In some jurisdictions it is held that, even though a part of a consideration for the purchase of property is illegal, this will not necessarily invalidate the entire contract, provided the illegal portion of the consideration can be segregated from the balance of the consideration which is valid. 6 R. C. L. 814, § 214. But this is not the rule in California. Section 1608 of the Civil Code leaves no opportunity for such a limitation of the rule. It provides: "If any part of a single consideration for one or more objects, or of several considerations for a single object, is unlawful, the entire contract is void." Haas v. Greenwald, 196 Cal. 236, 247, 237 P. 38, 59 A. L. R. 1493; Teachout v. Bogy, 175 Cal. 481, 166 P. 319. Since the contract is void, it may not become the basis of a suit between the original parties for damages for partial failure of consideration. In 6 Ruling Case Law, 817, § 215, it is said: "The general rule that no action can be based on an illegal contract is * * * not open to question. As no court of law or equity will lend its assistance in any way towards carrying out an illegal contract, such a contract cannot be enforced by one party against the other, either directly by asking the court to carry it into effect, or indirectly by claiming damages or compensation for a breach of it." 1 Elliott on Cont. 436, § 248.

[3] It is argued that since the 90 shares of the common stock of the defendant corporation of the par value of $9,000 were owned individually by Swanberg, the president of the company, and that the sale and transfer of his private stock required no authorization of the corporation commissioner, the transfer of this stock was not a violation of the statute or illegal. The contract, however, was with the corporation for 90 shares of its common stock, and not with its president as an individual. The evidence does not disclose the nature of the transaction by means of which 90 shares of Mr. Swanberg's private stock was transferred to the plaintiffs in satisfaction of an obligation of the corporation. This may have been a circuitous way of avoiding the statute, but, since the burden rested on the plaintiffs to establish their claim that the stock was illegally transferred, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, we may assume that Swanberg voluntarily gave this stock to the plaintiffs without consideration to fulfill the corporation's contract. It is, however, unnecessary to decide this problem, for the subsequent agreement which is an inseparable part of the contract to purchase the Castle ice cream business did specifically provide that the corporation would exchange and transfer to plaintiffs preferred stock of the corporation for one-half of the value of the 90 shares of common stock held by plaintiffs. This part of the contract, at least, was illegal and void for lack of authority to make such exchange or to transfer the preferred stock. The California Corporate Securities Act (Stats. 1917, p. 673, § 3, Act 3814, Deering's Gen. Laws of Cal. 1923, § 3) provides: "No company shall sell, * * * or offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of, or take subscriptions for any security of its own issue until it shall have first applied for and secured from the commissioner a permit authorizing it so to do." Section 12 of the same act renders void any securities issued in violation of the provisions of this statute.

[4] The judgment is supported by neither the evidence nor the findings, for the reason that the value of the stock was neither proved nor determined by the findings of the court. The amount recoverable for failure to deliver corporation stock is ordinarily measured by its market value which must be alleged and proved. Peek v. Steinberg, 163 Cal. 127, 134, 124 P. 834; 4 Thompson on Corp. (2d Ed.) 699, § 4172. There is no presumption that the face value of stock is its real value. 14 C. J. 718, § 1099. The Peek v. Steinberg Case, supra, is cited by respondents as authority for the contention that the par value of stock is prima facie its actual value. This case does not so hold.

[5] In the present case the pleadings nowhere directly allege the actual or market value of the stock. It is invariably referred to in the complaint as of the face or par value of $9,000. Our attention is not called to any evidence of the actual or market value of the stock. The court failed to find that the stock possessed any actual specific value. It merely found that all of the allegations of the amended complaint were true. The character of these findings will support no facts beyond such as are clearly and directly alleged in the complaint. 24 Cal. Jur. 986, § 214.

The judgment is reversed.

LEVINGSTON v. LEVINGSTON.★
(Civ. 6814; S. F. 12031.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 6, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 7, 1929.

Divorce §133(1)—Evidence sustained finding that wife deserted husband.

Evidence, in action by wife for separate maintenance, wherein husband set up cross-complaint, held to sustain finding of court that wife deserted husband, and that testimony of husband that wife left him without his consent was corroborated.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by Carrie E. Levingston against Jacob Levingston, wherein defendant set up a cross-complaint. Findings were made in favor of the defendant, and, from an interlocutory decree based thereon, the plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Owen D. Richardson and Bohnett, Hill & Campbell, all of San Jose, for appellant.

Louis Oneal and Wm. F. James, both of San Jose, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant for separate maintenance. Therein she alleged cruelty on the part of the defendant. The defendant interposed an answer in which he denied the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, and he also set up a cross-complaint alleging in one count plaintiff's desertion of him and in another count the extreme cruelty of the plaintiff. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, and the action was tried before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendant, and from an interlocutory decree based thereon the plaintiff has appealed, and has brought up a typewritten record.

The plaintiff makes one point—there was no sufficient evidence or corroboration of the charge of desertion upon which the decree was rendered. From the record it appears that the plaintiff and defendant intermarried at Denver, Colo., Feb. 20, 1901. They lived together until June 5, 1924. On that date they separated, and since then they have lived separate and apart. The wife has lived continuously in New York City, and the husband has lived continuously in the Western States. At the time of the separation the defendant was conducting a hotel at Waterloo in the state of Iowa. Shortly after the separation, he sold out and came to California and purchased the Hotel Vendome in San Jose. Afterwards business compelled him to sell out, and he made a sale on such terms that he had little or nothing left. A short time before the separation the plaintiff suspected that the defendant was committing acts of infidelity. The particular act arose some weeks prior to the separation. However, at that time one of the sons was in a high school. The plaintiff waited until he finished his course, and in June, 1924, she and two sons left for New York. The evidence is conflicting as to what conversations occurred between the two parties immediately before her departure. The plaintiff contends that she was waiting to be asked not to go. The defendant contends that he frequently asked her not to go, but nevertheless she proceeded to make her arrangements to depart. While those arrangements were progressing, the defendant says that she asked him whether he would make any remittances, and that he made the reply that he wished she would not go, but, if she was determined to go, he would make remittances. He continued to make remittances of $200 per month until his business failed. When he ceased to make remittances, certain conferences between the attorneys of the respective parties were held. Those conferences led to nothing, and this action was commenced. There is no conflict in the evidence regarding the fact that the plaintiff sent for packers and had her personal belongings packed and shipped to New York; that at the same time the plaintiff and two sons left the family dwelling place; that, when they left, the defendant went with them to the depot and kissed them goodbye; that, except as we will note, from that date forward no communications, written or otherwise, were exchanged between the defendant and the members of the family in New York. The plaintiff says she wrote a note to the defendant that some of her luggage was damaged in transportation, and asked him to look into the matter. The defendant testified that he received no letter, but one of the maids in the house received a letter. The relations as just described continued down to the very date of the trial. There is some evidence in the record that neither the plaintiff nor her son Max, while in San Jose attending the trial, communicated with the defendant in any other manner except through their respective counsel.

That the plaintiff voluntarily left the family dwelling, and took with her two of her children as recited above, was testified to by the defendant, the plaintiff, and their son Max, a young man 24 years of age. It may be that at the instant she left there was no evidence of intent to desert. However, that fact appeared very soon thereafter, and was demonstrated by the subsequent conduct of the plaintiff, which we have already recited.

The plaintiff now contends that separation by consent is not desertion. That theory was not pleaded, and the evidence thereon was distinctly conflicting. The defendant testified that he did not give his consent, and the whole story is susceptible of the view that what the plaintiff did was by reason of her own determination, and was done wholly without regard to the wishes of the defendant. There was no attempt made to plead or to prove the theories expressed in Civil Code, §§ 101 and 102. The plaintiff did attempt to plead Civil Code, § 98, but her allegations did not bring her within its provisions. She did not plead and she did not prove, or attempt to prove, a single act of bodily harm or threats of bodily harm. She does not cite any authority to the effect that the section last cited includes within its scope mental cruelty as distinguished from bodily cruelty, inflicted or threatened.

It therefore appears that there was evidence sustaining the finding of the court that the plaintiff deserted the defendant, and that the testimony of the defendant was corroborated.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a hearing herein is denied. In denying said petition, however, we disapprove that concluding portion of the opinion of the appellate tribunal reading as follows: "The plaintiff did attempt to plead Civil Code, § 98, but her allegations did not bring her within its provisions. She did not plead, and she did not prove, or attempt to prove, a single act of bodily harm, or threats of bodily harm. She does not cite any authority to the effect that the section last cited includes within its scope mental cruelty, as distinguished from bodily cruelty inflicted or threatened"—upon the authority of *Brandt v. BOWMAN v. MOTOR TRANSIT CO.★
(Civ. 6222.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 28, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 7, 1929.

1. Negligence ⇨93(2)—Negligence of husband, contributing proximately to wife's injuries in car collision, was imputable to wife.

In action for injuries received in car collision, if negligence of husband in driving car contributed proximately to wife's injuries, such negligence was imputable to wife, and would constitute a defense just as effectively as if injury had resulted from her own negligence.

2. Negligence ⇨122(1)—Burden of proof of contributory negligence was on defendant.

Affirmative issue on question of contributory negligence was required to be borne by defendant.

3. Negligence ⇨135—Evidence of contributory negligence need not be such as produces conviction.

Contributory negligence may be established by a preponderance of evidence, and need not be such as produces conviction, and an instruction so requiring constitutes reversible error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; H. G. Ames, Judge.

Action by Verna M. Bowman against the Motor Transit Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Kidd, Schell & Delamer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William L. Waters, of Fullerton, and Francis B. Cobb, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Plaintiff recovered judgment in damages for personal injuries received in an automobile accident alleged to have been caused by negligence of the defendant. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

Of the many assignments of error, we find it is not important to discuss more than one. We shall assume, for the purposes of the decision, that there was sufficient evidence in favor of the plaintiff, so that the jury might have found that according to the "preponderance of the evidence," as that phrase is defined in the law, the issues were established in favor of the plaintiff.

[1] At the time of the accident the plaintiff was riding in an Overland car, which her husband was driving in a southerly direction on Fullerton road in Orange county. At the same time a stagecoach of the defendant was traveling in an easterly direction on Central avenue. A collision between the Overland car and the stage occurred at the intersection of those two streets. It is the contention of appellant, not only that the evidence was insufficient to prove negligence of appellant, but that the evidence conclusively proved that the accident was caused by the negligence of respondent's husband in driving the car. If his negligence did contribute proximately to his wife's injuries, such negligence is imputable to the wife, and will constitute a defense just as effectively as if the injury had resulted from her own negligence. Dunbar v. San Francisco, etc., Rys., 54 Cal. App. 15, 201 P. 330.

We have been favored with a careful analysis by counsel on each side, setting forth the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses and of the defendant's witnesses concerning the speed of the respective vehicles, the objects observed, and the manner in which the drivers of these two vehicles conducted themselves, so that the net result of their acts and omissions produced a collision and caused plaintiff's injuries. We are satisfied that there was evidence sufficient to establish negligence on the part of defendant's driver, both in crossing the intersection at an excessive rate of speed and in failing to observe the plaintiff's automobile when it was within plain view. We are also convinced that there was evidence sufficient to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question as to whether respondent's driver was guilty of negligence contributing proximately to the accident and injury.

[2, 3] The issue concerning alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff's husband was supported by some substantial evidence produced by the defendant. It seems to be conceded on both sides that the obstruction to the view across the property lying between the two drivers as they approached the intersection was such that, under the provisions of the statute, the lawful speed was limited to the rate of 15 miles per hour at the intersection. The witness Hyde was a passenger on the stage. He testified that he saw the Bowman car approaching the intersection at a speed of between 35 and 40 miles an hour, and that it did not change its speed until it arrived at a point approximately 50 feet from the intersection, at which time the driver of plaintiff's car applied his brakes and locked the rear wheels, and caused them to slide the rear wheels on the pavement up to the time of the crash; that he saw where the Bowman car had slid its tires approximately 50 feet, and where the skidding stopped there was an imprint of the car, where it made a swerve in the skidding of the car after it came in contact with the bus. This testimony is positively contradicted by other witnesses. But from the evidence, as a whole, the jury might have found that, according to a preponderance of the evidence, plaintiff's driver was guilty of contributory negligence proximately causing the accident.

This brings us to the very serious error which, in our opinion, requires a reversal of the judgment. The defendant requested that the court give the following instruction: "In civil cases the affirmative of the issue must be proved, and when the evidence is contradictory the decision must be made according to the preponderance of the evidence. By preponderance of the evidence is meant the weight of the evidence or the preponderance of probability." The court gave this instruction, but added to it the following clause: "Or that evidence which produces conviction in the unprejudiced minds of the jurors." The error assigned relates to this addition. That such an instruction defining the preponderance of evidence is erroneous seems to be beyond doubt. Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 629, 633, 178 P. 510; Campbell v. Bradbury, 179 Cal. 364, 372, 176 P. 685; People v. Miller, 171 Cal. 649, 154 P. 468. That the affirmative of the issue on the question of contributory negligence was required to be borne by the defendant is, of course, not denied; but the defendant was not under any obligation to establish the fact which would prove contributory negligence by evidence producing "conviction" in the minds of the jurors, or by anything more than a preponderance of the evidence.

As suggested by counsel for appellant, the jury may have been well convinced that both vehicles approached the intersection at an unlawful rate of speed, and also that the defendant's stage entered the intersection at an unlawful rate of speed. They may not have been convinced, in the strong sense which the word "conviction" implies, that the plaintiff's automobile also entered the intersection at an unlawful rate of speed, and yet they may have been satisfied that according to the preponderance of the evidence it did enter the intersection at an unlawful rate of speed. Nevertheless, following this instruction, which was to the effect that the evidence of contributory negligence must be such as produces conviction in their minds, they may have been led thereby to find, as they did, that the facts constituting contributory negligence had not been proved. We are forced to the conclusion that the error is prejudicial, and that the judgment based upon a verdict so obtained should be reversed.

The judgment is reversed.

PETERSON et al. v. KAUFMAN et al.
(Civ. 6957.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 9, 1929.

1. Pleading $\S$ 245(3)—Order authorizing petition amended on day of trial, by pleading agreed value of goods sold, instead of reasonable value, was not error.

Court did not err in permitting plaintiffs to amend petition on day of trial, by pleading agreed value of goods sold, instead of reasonable value.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Where 18 days' delay was only evidence in record of agreement on account stated, finding delay was not controlling could not be disturbed.

Where defendants sent to plaintiffs an account of sales as on consignment, and at same time forwarded two checks, which plaintiffs did not cash, but 18 days later commenced action for goods sold and delivered, implied finding that 18 days' delay was not an agreement that balance was correct could not be disturbed, as no other facts appeared in record indicating agreement.

3. Tender $\S$ 15(1)—Bringing action for goods sold was sufficient objection to claim of tender.

Where plaintiff did not cash checks, but 18 days after receiving them brought action for goods sold and delivered, commencement of action was sufficient objection to any claim of tender.

4. Sales $\S$ 382—Where seller resold goods, returned by buyer in manner not provided by law, admission of resale price in action against buyer was error.

Where plaintiffs sold grapes to defendants, title passed, a dispute arose, and plaintiffs retook possession and attempted to sell on account of defendants, in action for breach of agreement to buy grapes, admission in evidence of amount which plaintiffs received from private sale, which was not in manner provided by law, was error.

5. Corporations $\S$ 306—Corporation alone was liable, where agency was disclosed.

Where party acted as disclosed agent of corporation, the corporation alone was liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by C. V. Peterson and others against Harry Kaufman and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

W. M. Conley, Philip Conley, Matthew Conley, and Conley, Conley & Conley, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts, Dan F. Conway, and C. M. Ozias, all of Fresno, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action to recover on two alleged contracts of sale of certain carloads of grapes. The defendants answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiffs, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendants have appealed.

[1] In form the first count of the plaintiffs' complaint was a common count for goods, etc., sold and delivered, for the reasonable value. The defendants answered that count by interposing certain denials, but did not plead any affirmative defenses. On the day the cause was called for trial, the plaintiffs were allowed to amend by pleading the agreed value, instead of the reasonable value. The defendants assign the order authorizing the amendment as error. The point cannot be sustained. 21 Cal. Jur. p. 195, §§ 135-137.

[2, 3] On or about the 1st of July, 1926, the plaintiffs turned over to the defendants four cars of grapes. The defendants paid the plaintiffs $500 per car, or a total of $2,000. On the 9th day of August the defendants transmitted to the plaintiffs documents in the form of an account of sales as on consignment, and at the same time forwarded two checks—$286.65 and $240.96. The plaintiffs did not cash the checks, but 18 days later they commenced this action. No interviews or correspondence took place between the parties between the date of the transmission of the documents just mentioned and the commencement of the action. It was the theory of the plaintiffs that the plaintiffs and defendants had entered into a contract to buy and sell, and they introduced evidence to sustain their contention. It was the theory of the defendants that the parties had entered into a contract of sale on consignment, and they introduced evidence to support their contention. The defendants are emphatic in stating that they do not contend that they are entitled to question the findings based on a conflict in evidence, but they urge most earnestly that the general principles relative to an account stated and to a tender should apply, and that therefore the judgment should have been for the defendants, and not for the plaintiffs. Taking up the theory of stated accounts, one of the essentials underlying that theory is that there be an agreement that the balance is correct. An examination of the record shows nothing whatever as indicating an agreement, except the mere delay of 18 days. The findings of the trial court imply that it did not consider the delay of 18 days as controlling. No other fact appearing in the record, we cannot disturb that implied finding. Taking up the theory of a tender, certain objections are waived, if not made at the time of the tender. The entire theory is in the nature of an estoppel. 24 Cal. Jur. p. 531, § 14. As no estoppel or tender was pleaded in the instant case, under the facts above recited we are unable to state that the act of the plaintiffs in commencing their action was not in itself a sufficient objection to the tender which the defendants now claim.

[4] In their second count the plaintiffs sought to recover damages for the breach of an agreement to buy 1,790 crates of grapes; that is, two carloads. The plaintiffs introduced evidence to the effect that they sold to the defendants 1,790 crates at $1.50 per crate, for the total sum of $2,685. The defendants introduced evidence that the grapes were delivered to defendants to be sold on consignment. It is admitted that the grapes were packed in boxes, the boxes were loaded on cars, and the cars were shipped to the defendant Baldwin-Pope Marketing Company, Inc., that plaintiffs turned over to the defendants the bills of lading, and that the defendants delivered to the plaintiffs a check for $750. Shortly thereafter a dispute arose. The result was that the plaintiffs received back the bills of lading and they returned to defendants the check for $750. Nothing was said by either party about rescission. After the plaintiffs received back the bills of lading, they resold at private sale to Sweeney & Lyons, of Chicago. On the trial, for the purpose of proving damage, over the objection and exception of the defendants, one of the plaintiffs, Mr. Peterson, was allowed to testify that the net proceeds received from Sweeney & Lyons on the first car was $459.61, and the net proceeds received from Sweeney & Lyons on the second car was $1,083.58; that is, a total of $1,543.19. In making up its findings, the trial court estimated the contract price, and from that sum it deducted $1,543.19, and awarded judgment in favor of the plaintiffs on the second count for the sum of $1,141.81. In other words, the record shows a transaction in which the plaintiffs sold their grapes, the title passed, a dispute arose, and the plaintiffs retook possession and attempted to sell for the account of the defendants, but not in the manner provided by law.

The defendants contend that the trial court applied the wrong rule in ascertaining the damage. The plaintiffs in one part of their brief state: "In other words, title as well as possession of the grapes was, for a limited time, actually transferred to the defendants." We do not understand them to claim that title was reconveyed. However, their reply to the point made by the defendants is that the plaintiffs took the proper course; "otherwise the plaintiffs would have been precluded from making any resale at all." This is not a sufficient answer. When they sold their grapes for eastern shipment they should have considered the possible contingencies. Having made the contract in the form in which it was made, it cannot be said that they did not waive all remedies inconsistent with and inappropriate to the facts. The exact question involved is not new. It received most careful consideration in Bennett v. Potter, 16 Cal. App. 183, 116 P. 681. Later the question was most carefully examined into in the case entitled Phillips v. Stark, 186 Cal. 369, 199 P. 509. According to those decisions the admission in evidence of the amount which these plaintiffs received from the private sale to Sweeney & Lyons was prejudicial error.

[5] As to both counts the trial court rendered judgment against all of the defendants as designated in plaintiffs' complaint. Later the trial court granted a new trial as to the individual Harry Kaufman. The defendants call to our attention the record showing that Harry Kaufman was the individual who transacted the business with the plaintiffs; that in doing what he did he acted as the disclosed agent of Baldwin-Pope Marketing Company, Inc., and not otherwise. The plaintiffs concede that under those circumstances the corporation alone is responsible.

The judgment on the first count is reversed as to Harry Kaufman and Harry Kaufman doing business under the firm name and style of Baldwin-Pope Marketing Company, Inc., and on that count it is affirmed as against Baldwin-Pope Marketing Company, Inc. The judgment on the second count is reversed. The defendants will recover their costs on appeal.

KETTLE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 6652.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 13, 1929.

1. Courts $\hookrightarrow$ 190(4)—Municipal court had jurisdiction to continue beyond 5-day period matter of justification of sureties on bond on appeal to superior court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, and § 986, as added by St. 1927, p. 120, § 4; and § 831d, as added by St. 1927, p. 1343).

Municipal court had authority to continue matter of justification of sureties on bond on appeal to superior court beyond 5-day period prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 986, as added by St. 1927, p. 120, § 4, since section 1054 permits extension of time for justification of sureties up to 30 days, and section 831d, as added by St. 1927, p. 1343, makes rules of practice in superior court applicable in municipal courts.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 391(1)—New surety on appeal bond could be substituted by presenting separate document differing from original only in matter of substitution of surety.

Mode of substituting new surety on appeal bond by presenting separate document unchanged from the original document, except for the substitution, held authorized; substituted document being in point of law the original undertaking with amendment by substitution of new surety.

Application by Mabel H. Kettle for certiorari to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the county of Los Angeles, and Walter S. Gates, Judge thereof, to review an order dismissing an appeal from the municipal court to the superior court. Order annulled.

Max Schleimer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert F. Shippee, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. The action in the municipal court was brought to recover judgment for an amount within the jurisdiction of that court. Judgment having been entered in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appealed to the superior court. The motion to dismiss appeal was made upon the ground that the appellant at no time justified the sureties on her undertaking on appeal after exception to the same had been taken by the respondent.

According to section 986 of the Code of Civil Procedure (added to that Code in 1927 [St. 1927, p. 120, § 4]), where the undertaking on appeal from the municipal court has been filed within due time, and exception to the sureties has been taken within due time, it is provided that, "unless they or other sureties justify before a judge of the municipal court within five days thereafter, upon notice to the adverse party, to the amounts stated in their affidavits, the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given."

"The rules of pleading and practice applicable to the prosecution of civil actions and enforcement of judgments in the superior court of this state shall apply to and govern the prosecution and maintenance of civil actions and enforcement of judgments in the municipal courts of this state, except as follows. * * * Code Civ. Proc., § 831d (as added by St. 1927, p. 1343). It does not appear that the exceptions include any exceptions applicable to the case at bar. Section 1054 of the same Code contains the following language: "When an act to be done, as provided in this code, relates to * * * the undertakings to be filed, or the justifications of sureties * * * the time allowed by this code, unless otherwise expressly provided, may be extended, upon good cause shown, by the judge of the superior court in and for the county in which the action is pending, or by the judge who presided at the trial of said action; but such extension shall not exceed thirty days, without the consent of the adverse party. * * *"

The exceptions to the sureties on the undertaking as originally filed by appellant were taken on the 24th day of October, 1928. On the 5th day thereafter, October 29th, pursuant to notice given by appellant, the matter of justification of the sureties came before the municipal court. On account of the absence of one of the sureties, the court continued the matter to November 5th. To this continuance the respondent objected. On November 5th respondent again objected, although one of the original sureties and another proposed to be substituted were sworn and tendered by appellant as sureties upon the undertaking. The ground of respondent's objection was that the justification of sureties had not been accomplished within the five days provided by section 986, Code of Civil Procedure. The objection was sustained by the court, and the sureties were not permitted to justify. In offering the substituted surety in place of the one who did not appear, appellant presented the undertaking as a separate document or amended undertaking executed by the original surety together with the substituted surety. Respondent objected upon the ground that this was not an amended undertaking and that the new surety should have signed the original undertaking, which had been first filed. Thereupon the court administered the oath to said sureties, and asked the attorney for respondent if he wished to examine them. Respondent's attorney answered in the negative. Thereupon the judge stated that he would sustain the objection made by respondent's attorney.

[1, 2] It thus appears from the record that the dismissal of the appeal was based upon the ground that the court had lost jurisdiction of the appeal, first, because the court was without jurisdiction to continue the matter of justification beyond the period of 5 days specified in section 986, Code of Civil Procedure; and for the further reason that the substituted offer of the undertaking was a separate document from the undertaking as originally filed. We are of the opinion that section 1054, Code of Civil Procedure, was applicable to the case and authorized the continuance of the proceeding from October 24th to October 29th. In view of the Code sections, to which we have referred, we perceive no good reason why the power to extend the time within the limit of 30 days does not exist in the municipal court the same as in the superior court. See Schloesser v. Owen, 134 Cal. 546, 66 P. 726. We are likewise of the opinion that the mode of substituting a new surety by presenting a separate document in all respects the same as the original document, except in the matter of the substitution of a surety for one not appearing, is authorized by law, and that the substituted document is, in point of law, the original undertaking with amendment by substitution of the new surety. Lee Chuck v. Quan Wo Chong Co., 81 Cal. 222, 228, 229, 22 P. 594, 15 Am. St. Rep. 50.

The order of dismissal of the appeal is annulled.

LA RUE v. BARR. (Civ. 6812.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 6, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 7, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨221(2)—
Plaintiff suing for value of unskilled services rendered decedent had burden of proving value of services (Code Civ. Proc. § 1869).

In action to recover reasonable value of services rendered in behalf of decedent, plaintiff alleging value of services as material affirmative allegation had burden of proving value to recover under Code Civ. Proc. § 1869, though services were unskilled and unprofessional, and full details as to kind and character thereof were testified to.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨221(3)—
Invalid oral agreement to devise property to plaintiff for services held not evidence of reasonable value of services.

In action to recover reasonable value of services rendered in behalf of decedent, evidence of oral agreement by decedent to devise and bequeath plaintiff all of real and personal property which was invalid under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7, held no evidence of reasonable value of plaintiff's services, since not constituting agreement to pay in money.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨205(2)—
Plaintiff suing for reasonable value of services rendered decedent held entitled to no more and no less than reasonable value of services.

In action to recover reasonable value of services rendered in behalf of decedent, plaintiff was entitled to reasonable value of services no more and no less.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨221(2)—
Granddaughter of decedent suing for reasonable value of services had burden of rebutting presumption that services were rendered gratuitously.

In action to recover reasonable value of services rendered decedent, plaintiff, who was granddaughter of decedent, had burden of rebutting presumption that services were rendered gratuitously.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨221(2)—
Invalid oral agreement to devise property to granddaughter held admissible to rebut presumption that services by granddaughter were rendered gratuitously.

In action to recover reasonable value of services rendered decedent by granddaughter, oral contract by decedent to devise and bequeath real and personal property to granddaughter was admissible to rebut presumption that granddaughter rendered services gratuitously.

6. Executors and administrators ⇨451(3)—
Instruction that plaintiff suing for services rendered decedent could recover only actual value of services without reference to contract to devise or value of decedent's property held erroneously refused.

In action to recover reasonable value of services rendered decedent, requested instruction by administrator that plaintiff, if entitled to recover, could recover only actual, intrinsic value of her services for time rendered, wholly without reference to alleged contract to devise property, and without reference to value of property of decedent, held erroneously refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by Jennie La Rue against Warden T. Barr, as administrator of the estate of Helen C. La Rue, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, defendant's motion for new trial was granted, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lewis H. Smith, of Los Angeles, and Archie A. Smith, of Fresno, for appellant.

Frank Kauke, of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant as administrator of the estate of Helen C. La Rue, deceased. She pleaded her action in two counts. In the first count she set forth a purported cause of action based on the promise of the decedent to make her will in plaintiff's favor. In her second count she sought to recover the reasonable value of her services rendered in behalf of the decedent. A demurrer was sustained to the first count. The defendant answered the second count, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, awarding her a money judgment as prayed. A motion for a new trial was granted, and the plaintiff has appealed from that order, and has brought up a typewritten record.

[1] The plaintiff states that there is one point before the court: "In an action for the reasonable value of unskilled and non-professional services, the fact of the rendition of the services having been proved, together with full details as to the kind and character thereof and the circumstances and conditions under which they were rendered, is it necessary, in order to sustain a verdict, that there be introduced statements of witnesses as to the value of such services?" Except as will hereinafter be noted, there was not a particle of evidence introduced proving, or tending to prove, the reasonable value of the services rendered by the plaintiff. The value of her services had been alleged by the plaintiff, and it was one of her material affirmative allegations. On her rested the burden of proving it. Code Civ. Proc. § 1869. There is authority supporting the contention of the plaintiff. Craig v. Durrett, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 365, 19 Am. Dec. 103. However, the great weight of authority is against the plaintiff. 2 Labatt's Master and Servant, p. 1623, § 573a, pp. 1642-1644; McDaniels v. Harrington, 80 Or. 628, 157 P. 1068; Winch v. Dobbin (Mo. App.) 204 S. W. 918; Gillen v. Haley, 185 Mo. App. 23, 171 S. W. 638; Woodward v. Donnell, 146 Mo. App. 119, 123 S. W. 1004; Wood v. Barker, 49 Mich. 295, 13 N. We believe the authorities are correctly summarized in 2 Labatt's Master and Servant, p. 1623, as follows: "In several jurisdictions it has been declared that, where no specific evidence of value has been adduced, the claimant cannot recover anything whatever; this doctrine seems to be clearly correct."

The plaintiff cites a number of cases decided in this state. Some were cases brought to recover attorney fees. They are not in point for obvious reasons. None of the rest of the cases were actions in assumpsit to recover the reasonable value of services rendered.

She cites Cederberg v. Robison, 100 Cal. 93, 34 P. 625. That was an action to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract. The plaintiff offered evidence of what he did in making preparations for performing the contract and how far he had performed. He did not offer evidence of the value of the services rendered by him. No attack was made on the verdict as being excessive. The court held that, unless it should appear that the amount allowed was excessive, the verdict should not be disturbed. In the instant case the defendant has, at all proper times, claimed that $12,000 was grossly excessive. In his motion for a new trial he so contended. The motion was granted. The order recited that it was "granted on the insufficiency of the evidence." Nothing to the contrary appearing, in support of the order, we may assume that it was granted on other grounds also. 2 Cal. Jur. 700, § 403; Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 134, 85 P. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059.

The plaintiff dwells extensively on the proposition that expert evidence is not necessary. Herein she errs in assuming that all evidence regarding reasonable value is confined to the evidence of experts. 2 Labatt's Master and Servant, pp. 1641-1646; Jones on Evidence, §§ 360-363.

[2, 3] The plaintiff introduced in evidence the oral agreement by the terms of which the decedent promised to devise and bequeath all of her real and personal property to the plaintiff. It is conceded said agreement was invalid. Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7; Code Civ. Proc., § 1973, subd. 7. The plaintiff claims it was some evidence of the reasonable value of her services. If the agreement had been to pay in money, that claim would have support. Offeman v. Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc., 80 Cal. App. 1, 251 P. 830. But the agreement was not to pay in money. It was to pay in property. The introduction of the agreement for the purpose of showing value was therefore but the creation of a false issue, because it still remained necessary to show what was the value of the property. When that value was shown, another false issue was created. Whether the property was of great value or little value was immaterial. The plaintiff under her pleading was entitled to the reasonable value of her services—no more, no less. In Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 526, 5 N. E. 666, at page 669, the Supreme Court of Indiana said: "The most that can be recovered in such a case is the value of what may have been paid or performed by one party in reliance upon such a contract, when the other refuses to perform. 2 Reed, St. Frauds, §§ 737, 761, 762; Day v. Wilson, 83 Ind. 463 [43 Am. Rep. 76]. Where, therefore, services have been performed or money paid in consideration of property to be conveyed, if the contract is not enforceable by reason of the statute of frauds, the action is not on the special contract, but, in the case of services performed, the action is on a quantum meruit, to recover the value of the services. Ham v. Goodrich, 37 N. H. 186; Emery v. Smith, 46 N. H. 151; Leslie v. Smith, 32 Mich. 64; Seymour v. Bennet, 14 Mass. 268; 2 Reed, St. Frauds, §§ 622, 623, and cases cited in notes; 2 Suth. Dam. 453. In such a case the value of the services performed, and not the value of the property agreed to be conveyed, is the measure of damages." And, after further discussion, the court, at page 672 of 5 N. E. (105 Ind. 531), says: "Many other cases might be cited which support and illustrate the conclusions reached, but those referred to are deemed sufficient. The value of the services are to be determined without any reference to the value of the estate of the intestate. But, in estimating the value of the services, regard should be paid to the situation of the parties, the nature of the service required or performed. Allowance should be made, too, for the fact that, under the circumstances, the presence and society of the plaintiff's ward may have been of sufficient value to compensate for her education, clothing, and support."

The rule so declared is quite general, but it does not obtain in every jurisdiction, because the statutes are different. 2 Labatt's Master and Servant, pp. 1631-1634. Be that as it may, it is certainly the rule in California. In Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 99, at page 110, the court said: "But, in assumpsit for the recovery of money paid, or services rendered upon a void contract for the conveyance of lands, the measure of plaintiff's relief is the money he has advanced, with interest, or the reasonable value of the services rendered, without reference to, and disconnected with, the express contract; the defendant's liability in such case rests upon an implied promise or assumpsit, and evidence of the value of the land stipulated to be conveyed by the express void agreement is inadmissible as a measure of the value of services rendered by plaintiff, or the relief to which he is entitled in consideration of money advanced upon such express contract. To permit such testimony for the purpose of establishing the reasonable value of services rendered by plaintiff, or the measure of indebtedness of defendant upon his implied promise to refund money advanced by plaintiff, would, in effect, allow a party in one breath to disaffirm a contract, and in the next to affirm and claim the benefit of the same contract as valid and subsisting, and substantially enable him to recover as for breach of a valid express contract in a simple action of assumpsit upon an implied contract." See authorities cited in 2 Labatt's Master and Servant, pp. 1631-1634, and see also (1906) McGrew's Ex'r v. O'Donnell (Ky.) 92 S. W. 301, 302; (1924) Appleby v. Noble, 101 Conn. 54, 124 A. 717, 719; (1910) Appeal of Beardsley, 83 Conn. 34, 75 A. 141, 143; (1925) Goodrich v. Emma L. Hubbard's Estate, 233 Mich. 346, 206 N. W. 480, 481; (1921) Kutzner v. Stuart, 215 Mich. 270, 183 N. W. 905.

The value of the estate of the decedent was alleged in the answer to be $10,500. On the trial the plaintiff accepted those figures. The verdict of the jury was $12,000. As stated by the court in Fuller v. Reed, supra, the result of the ruling complained of was " * * * in effect, [to] allow a party in one breath to disaffirm a contract, and in the next to affirm and claim the benefit of the same contract as valid and subsisting, and substantially enable him to recover as for breach of a valid express contract in a simple action of assumpsit upon an implied contract." The statute of frauds may not be so circumvented. No competent evidence of the value of plaintiff's services was received.

[4, 5] As the plaintiff is the granddaughter of the decedent, it was incumbent on her to rebut the presumption that she rendered her services gratuitously. For that purpose the oral contract was admissible. The trial court did not err in admitting it. But, as said in Kutzner v. Stuart, 215 Mich. 270, 273, 183 N. W. 905, at page 906: "The serious error of the trial court was not in admitting the contract, but in permitting the jury to use the clause [payment in property] quoted as a measure of damages." That the trial court allowed the use of the special agreement for an improper purpose is clearly shown by a consideration of the next two points made by the defendant.

The plaintiff requested, and the trial court gave, a long instruction which appears in the reporter's transcript, page 200. The closing clause is "then your verdict should be for the plaintiff for the reasonable value of such care, aid, services and companionship, having in mind all of the circumstances under which they were rendered." Both in the trial court and in this court (see reply brief, p. 67) the plaintiff contended that the special agreement was a "fact and circumstance" to be considered in fixing the reasonable value of plaintiff's services.

[6] The defendant requested, and the trial court refused, an instruction as follows: "You are instructed, if you find from the evidence, and under the instruction of the court, that the plaintiff in this case is entitled to recover from the estate of the decedent compensation for services rendered by the plaintiff to the decedent in her lifetime, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover only the actual, intrinsic value of her services, for the time they were rendered, and according to kind and character, and wholly without reference to any alleged contract, and wholly without any reference to the value of the property of the decedent at the time of her death." It should have been given as requested. Goodrich v. Emma L. Hubbard's Estate, supra.

The court did not err in granting the motion for a new trial. The order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (Cr. 1812.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 13, 1929.

1. Criminal law ☞1159(5)—Jury's determination of whether confession was voluntarily made was final.

Where evidence regarding promises of immunity and of acts of violence was presented before jury, who were properly instructed, jury's determination of whether confession was voluntarily made without promise of immunity or reward was final.

2. Witnesses ☞274(2)—Permitting cross-examination of defendant's character witness regarding whether witness had heard what defendant did on certain occasion held not error (Pen. Code, § 288a).

In prosecution for violating Pen. Code, § 288a, permitting district attorney in cross-examining character witness presented by defense to ask questions regarding whether witness had heard what defendant did to a little girl on certain occasion held not error, where it did not appear that district attorney was not acting in good faith.

3. Criminal law ☞726—Defendant cannot complain regarding district attorney's argument in answer to inquiry of defendant's counsel.

Where remarks of district attorney in argument to jury were in answer to inquiry by defendant's counsel, defendant cannot complain that argument was prejudicial.

4. Criminal law ☞730(3)—District attorney's objectionable remarks held not reversible error, where court instructed jury to disregard statements made by counsel except so far as correctly restating evidence (Pen. Code, § 288a).

In prosecution for violating Pen. Code, § 288a, objectionable remarks of district attorney in argument regarding what defendant did to little girl on certain occasion held not reversible error, where court instructed jury to disregard any statement made by counsel in their arguments, except so far as it correctly restated evidence in case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Edward Henderson, Judge.

Albert W. Smith was convicted of violating Pen. Code, § 288a, and he appeals. Affirmed.

James M. Burke, of Visalia, and Thomas Gould, Jr., and Jarrett G. Beckett, both of Ventura, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James C. Hollingsworth, Dist. Atty., of Ventura, for the People.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime denounced by section 288a of the Penal Code of the state of California, with which he was charged by an information filed by the district attorney of Ventura county. The victim of the alleged unlawful conduct of the defendant was a lad of the age of seven years.

The grounds upon which the appellant urges a reversal of the judgment are, stated in brief, as follows: (1) The alleged "confession" of Smith was not voluntary, and should not have been admitted in evidence; (2) the district attorney was guilty of misconduct highly prejudicial to the defendant; (3) the trial court erred in ruling on the admission of evidence.

We do not deem it necessary to present a recital of the evidence relating to the offense, or the detailed testimony bearing on the question as to whether or not the confession was voluntary. We have carefully examined the voluminous transcript of the evidence adduced at the trial, and have concluded that there are no reversible errors appearing in the record. We will therefore briefly refer to such matters which we feel should be discussed in this opinion.

[1] The defendant testified that, while he was incarcerated in the city jail after his arrest, the father of the boy, who was the chief of police of the city of Oxnard, and in whose custody the defendant then was, promised he would not prosecute him for the offense if he would admit that he "did it." Defendant also testified as to certain acts of physical violence visited upon him by the father of the boy and one of the police officers at the time of his arrest, and also while incarcerated in the city jail, which acts of violence so instilled him with fear as to induce him to make the alleged confession. The promises of immunity, as well as all of the acts of violence, except the attack made upon the defendant by the chief of police in the home of the chief of police prior to or at the time of defendant's arrest, were all specifically denied by the chief of police and other police officers and persons present at the time the certain incidents were alleged to have occurred. All of this evidence was presented before the jury, who were properly instructed by the court as to their power in weighing the evidence and determining whether or not the confession was made without any promises of immunity and voluntarily made without threat or duress. This court cannot, under the circumstances, disturb the findings of the jury, assuming that they accepted the confession as voluntarily made and without promise of immunity or reward. The jury's determination under the circumstances is final.

[2] The next question as to the misconduct of the district attorney relates, first, to the question asked by him in cross-examining a witness by the name of Rothert, who was a character witness presented by the defendant. After the witness in question had stated that he was acquainted with the defendant's reputation in the community where he resided, with regard to the traits of character of the defendant involved in the action, and having answered that such reputation was good, the district attorney propounded the following question to him: "I will ask you this, Mr. Rothert: Have you had occasion to hear during your residence in Oxnard, either before or after the filing of the complaint in this case, as to a certain act of perversion that the defendant in this case committed upon a little girl named Betty Culver, a music pupil of the defendant Smith, in the city of Oxnard?" The question was objected to by counsel for the defendant and assigned as improper conduct on the part of the district attorney. He also moved to have the question stricken from the record and the jury instructed to disregard the same and that the district attorney be reprimanded by the court for asking the question. The objection was overruled, and the motion of the defendant's counsel was denied by the court. It is urged with considerable force by appellant that a serious injustice was done him by the asking of this question, in that it implied that such an occurrence had taken place, and there was no evidence introduced by the district attorney either that the incident had occurred or that there was any rumor, report, or public comment of such an incident that could have come to the hearing of the witness. Whatever may be the merits of defendant's contention on this point, the question is no longer open to debate, as it has repeatedly been held in this state that it is not error for the district attorney in cross-examining a character witness presented by the defense, to ask questions of this kind, unless it appears from the record that the district attorney is not acting in good faith. People v. Sieber, 201 Cal. 341, 257 P. 64; People v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. App. 730, 236 P. 214; People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 48, 77 P. 777; People v. Perry, 144 Cal. 748, 78 P. 284; People v. Burke, 18 Cal. App. 72, 122 P. 435.

In the instant case there is nothing in the record, other than a total absence of any evidence as to the truth of the wrongdoing implied in the question, that would suggest that the district attorney was not asking the question in good faith.

[3, 4] The other criticism urged against the conduct of the district attorney relates to statements made by him in his argument to the jury. In his closing argument the district attorney made the following statement: "The witnesses that he called here to support his reputation, themselves, all but one, testified that they had never heard it discussed. They knew nothing about it. But one had; Rothert had. He was asked the question that Mr. Gould made much of in his argument to this jury: 'Did you hear what he did to Betty Culver—the Betty Culver whose mother, he claims, called up on the phone the week previous to that, about that little girl's music lesson.' And Mr. Gould is asking now and he asks me to state to him where I got my information about Betty Culver. I'll tell him to ask Robert Clark, the sheriff, and to ask the parents of Betty Culver in the city of Oxnard, and find out where we got our information. If he wants to ask me the question, I have answered it."

Defendant's counsel objected to this statement, and assigned the remarks as reversible error, and requested the court to strike the remarks of the district attorney and admonish the jury to disregard them. Whereupon the court made the following statement to the jury: "Of course the jury will remember what the testimony is; and any remarks that are made by counsel are not evidence in the case and if any remarks are made by any counsel in this case, which are not supported by the record, you will disregard them. You may proceed."

Whereupon the district attorney made the following statement: "Mr. Gould in his argument—I took it down at the time—wanted to know and wanted me to state to this jury what there was about this Culver business. That is why I made the statement."

The language used by defendant's attorney does not appear in the record, nor does appellant in his brief claim that the statement, made by the district attorney with regard to the Betty Culver matter in his argument to the jury, was not made in answer to the challenge of defendant's counsel in his address to the jury. We are therefore justified in assuming that the remarks complained of were elicited by the challenge of defendant's counsel, and in that case he is not in position to complain that the answer to the inquiry was prejudicial. Notwithstanding the challenge, it would have been better had the district attorney ignored the query and refrained from making any reference to the Betty Culver matter in his argument. Furthermore, it appears that the court instructed the jury to disregard any statement made by counsel in their arguments, except so far as it correctly restated the evidence in the case.

Under the circumstances disclosed by the record, the remarks of the district attorney in his argument would not constitute reversible error.

The last ground urged by appellant on behalf of a reversal deals with several specified rulings made by the court during the trial. In several of the instances the rulings were erroneous, but they referred to relatively unimportant matters, and we are quite satisfied that they did not constitute reversible error. In the interest of brevity, we do not deem it necessary to specifically refer to each point urged in connection with these rulings.

The judgment is affirmed.

WINTER v. KITTO. (Civ. 6730.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 7, 1929.

1. Judgment ⇨562—Judgment, to operate as bar, must go to merits of second action in respect to matters necessary to plaintiff's recovery or in respect to affirmative defenses.

Judgment, to operate strictly as bar to a subsequent action, must go to merits of the latter action either in regard to matters necessary to plaintiff's recovery or in regard to affirmative defenses applicable to both actions.

2. Judgment ⇨585(3)—Decree quieting vendor's title, entered upon disclaimer by vendee, held not to bar vendee's action to recover purchase money based upon vendor's rescission.

Decree quieting vendor's title upon default of one defendant and upon disclaimer of vendee of property joined as defendant held not to bar action by vendee for return of purchase money upon ground that vendor had rescinded contract for purchase of property.

3. Contracts ⇨35—Where sufficient consideration for signer's agreement is shown from instrument itself, signer cannot be released because other persons failed to sign.

Fact that contract has not been signed by all the persons who were expected to sign will not release one of signers if sufficient consideration is shown from face of instrument to authorize enforcement of agreement.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨43(2)—Vendee held bound by contract notwithstanding failure of covendee to sign, where vendee took possession and treated contract as in effect.

Vendee held bound by contract for purchase of land notwithstanding failure of person named in contract as covendee to execute instrument, where vendee received possession of the property and acceded to terms of contract and treated contract as in effect, especially where there was no showing that vendee's signature was conditional or that there was any understanding that signing by all the parties was condition precedent.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨335—Where vendor, not in default, stands upon contract defaulting vendee cannot recover purchase money.

Vendee in default cannot recover purchase money where vendor who was not in default stands upon the contract.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⇨335—Vendor, on vendee's unexcused default, may retain purchase money irrespective of provisions for forfeiture or retention of payments as liquidated damages.

Vendor's right to retain purchase money upon unexcused default by vendee is independent of any express clauses in the contract for the forfeiture of vendee's rights or retention of payments as liquidated damages.

7. Contracts ⇨318—Provision in contract for forfeiture and avoidance thereof does not prevent contract from remaining in effect to protect innocent party.

Contract remains in force to protect rights of innocent party and enforce obligations of delinquent, notwithstanding provision for forfeiture and avoidance of contract on default.

8. Vendor and purchaser ⇨335—Under contract providing for forfeiture on vendee's default, notice of election to cancel put vendee in default, precluding recovery of purchase money.

Where contract for sale of land provided that, in the event of default on the part of the vendee, all sums theretofore paid should at vendor's option be forfeited and agreement become entirely void, vendor's notice stating election to cancel contract pursuant to terms thereof did not amount to technical cancellation or rescission entitling the defaulting vendee to recover back purchase money, but merely terminated vendee's rights under the contract; contract and notice being construed together.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by Frank E. Winter against Margaret J. Kitto. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Lovett K. Fraser, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John L. McVey, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendant is the owner of certain real property in Lake county. Early in 1927 the parties to the action and Fred T. Winter entered into negotiations for the sale and purchase of the property. On February 1st of that year a written agreement was drawn setting forth the terms of sale, in which the defendant was named as vendor and the plaintiff and Fred T. Winter, his brother, as vendees. The writing was signed by the plaintiff and the defendant, but not by Fred T. Winter. The terms of sale were $4,000, payable $250 in cash, a like sum on August 1, 1927, and the balance in semiannual payments of the same amount, with interest. The writing further stipulated that upon the payment of the purchase price, with interest, the property should be conveyed to the vendees, but, upon default in the payment of any installment of principal or interest, time being of the essence, all sums theretofore paid should, at the option of the vendor, be forfeited and retained by her as liquidated damages, in which event it was provided that "this agreement shall then become and be absolutely void and of no effect."

It appears that the plaintiff on February 1, 1927, paid to the defendant the sum of $600 on the purchase price, and thereupon went into possession of the property, but that Fred T. Winter neither had possession nor paid any part of the purchase price. On February 6, 1928, the defendant, through her attorney, served upon the vendees named a writing, signed by her, which, after reciting that default had been made in the payment of the installment of $250 which was payable on February 1, 1928, contained the following: "You and each of you are hereby notified that the undersigned elects to cancel said contract pursuant to the terms thereof, and that said contract is hereby canceled and is absolutely void and of no effect." Following the receipt of the notice, the plaintiff on February 9, 1928, sent the defendant's attorney the following letter:

"Dear Mr. Perkins: Received your notice of cancellation of contract re my purchasing Lake county property from Mrs. Kitto and I am at a loss to understand why this was sent to me.

"The last part of January I wrote to Mrs. Kitto about a lot I thought she might be interested in taking as a payment which would be more substantial than the regular payment due, and if she did not want the lot to let me know and I would send the payment. Not hearing from Mrs. Kitto I naturally presumed she was considering taking the lot and of course I did not send the check.

"I have made several requests for the copy of the contract, also Mr. F. Fogal some time ago asked you to send it to him, but up to the present time it has not been received. I am entitled to a copy of this agreement, so please see that it is forwarded to me at your earliest convenience.

"Yours very truly, _____."

A letter from the attorney in reply contained the following: "I beg to remind you that at the present writing there is no contract existing between yourself and Mrs. Kitto, the contract dated February 1, 1927, having been canceled by Mrs. Kitto on February 6, 1928, by reason of your failure in the payment of the instalment of principal due February 1, 1928. * * *" The letter further stated that Mrs. Kitto would be willing to revive the contract upon receipt of the payment mentioned, but would not otherwise waive the breach.

It appears that shortly after the above correspondence the defendant went into possession of the property, but nothing further was done by any of the parties until March 5, 1928, when defendant filed an action against plaintiff and Fred T. Winter to quiet the title to the property. The latter defaulted, and the plaintiff herein having filed a disclaimer, a decree was entered adjudging Mrs. Kitto to be the owner of the property and that the vendees named and all persons claiming under them be barred from asserting any claim of right or title therein.

The present action is one for money had and received. As defenses thereto, the defendant set up the contract mentioned, alleging the default of the plaintiff and his co-vendee, and further pleaded as a bar the decree entered in the action to quiet title. The court found that the parties had agreed that their agreement should be reduced to writing and executed by each of them; that the writing mentioned was not signed by Fred T. Winter or delivered to the plaintiff, but was retained by the agent for the defendant. It was further found that the agreement was canceled by the defendant, the cancellation being acquiesced in by the plaintiff, and judgment was accordingly entered for the latter.

[1, 2] The defendant, who has appealed, contends that the judgment in the suit to quiet title was a bar to the present action and that the findings are unsupported.

As held in Williams v. MacDonald, 180 Cal. 546, 182 P. 29, a judgment, in order to operate strictly as a bar to a subsequent action, must have gone to the merits of the latter action, either in regard to some matter which the plaintiff must have made out in order to entitle him to a recovery, or in regard to some affirmative defense which was a defense to the second action as well as to the first.

As shown by the record, the action to quiet title involved merely the title to the land in question; all that appears on the face of the judgment to have been adjudged being the title of Mrs. Kitto, her right to have such title quieted, and that judgment was entered upon the default of one defendant and upon the disclaimer of the other (who is the plaintiff here) of any claim or title to the land. In the above respects, the facts of the present case are not distinguishable from those of Heilig v. Parlin, 134 Cal. 99, 66 P. 186, wherein it was held that a decree quieting the vendor's title was not a bar to an action by the vendee for the return of the purchase money upon the ground that the vendor had rescinded the contract.

[3] It appears that the contract in question was left by the plaintiff and defendant with the latter's agent, who drew the instrument, awaiting the signature of plaintiff's brother, who, for reasons not shown, failed to sign. It has been held that, where an instrument has been executed by only a portion of the parties between whom it purports to be made it cannot be enforced against those who have executed it (Tewksbury v. O'Connell, 21 Cal. 60; Barber v. Burrows, 51 Cal. 404; Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 P. 695; Olson v. Lovell, 91 Cal. 506, 27 P. 765); but, as the court said in Cavanaugh v. Casselman, 88 Cal. 543, 549, 26 P. 515, 517: "It is not the rule that a contract which on its face purports to be inter partes must invariably be executed by all whose names appear in the instrument before it shall be binding upon any. One reason why it is held in many of the cases that an agreement is not to be operative upon one until it has been signed by another, is that such signing is the consideration upon which the first signer agrees to be bound; but when a sufficient consideration for the agreement on the part of the first signer is shown to authorize its enforcement, he cannot be released therefrom unless he shall show clearly that there were other considerations for his signing the agreement than those named in the instrument." The court in the same connection quoted with approval the following from Bishop on Contracts, § 348: "If by parol stipulation, or, a fortiori, if by the writing itself, the contract was not to be deemed complete until other signatures should be added, it without such addition will not bind those who have signed it; but if nothing of this appears, the parties signing will be holden, though even on the face of it the signatures of others were contemplated by the draughtsman." The same rule is stated in Kurtz v. Forquer, 94 Cal. 91, 29 P. 413.

In Mullarky v. Young, 9 Cal. App. 686, 100 P. 709, 710, wherein the language of the instrument indicated that the parties intended that all should be bound or none, it was held that a contract between two named parties of the first part and two named parties of the second part, which was signed by one only of each part, did not constitute a complete contract, but the court, referring to the above rule, said: "If in the case at bar the contract had been signed by both parties of the first part, the vendors, and although not signed by the parties of the second part, had been accepted and acted upon by them, then it would be deemed complete."

[4] In the present case not only did the plaintiff receive a consideration for his signature, namely, the possession of the property, but it is manifest from his letter to the vendor's attorney that the contract was considered by him to be in force and effect notwithstanding the failure of his brother to sign. There having been an accession to its terms by the parties who signed, and part performance on both sides, neither could assert its invalidity upon the ground urged by the plaintiff. Sparks v. Mauk, 170 Cal. 122, 148 P. 926; Minton v. Mitchell (Cal. App.) 265 P. 271. Moreover, neither vendee—both being witnesses at the trial—testified that the signature of the plaintiff was conditional, nor that it was the understanding between themselves or with the vendor that the contract should not be operative unless signed by all the parties named; the only testimony in this connection being that of the defendant, who testified that the plaintiff and his brother were to buy the property but that the contract was never signed by the latter.

We are satisfied that the circumstances shown do not reasonably support the conclusion that the contract was not intended to bind the plaintiff and defendant, and that the findings in this respect are not sustained by the evidence.

Plaintiff further contends that the correspondence shows a mutual rescission of the contract which entitles him to recover the amount paid.

In Heilig v. Parlin, supra, cited by plaintiff in support of his claim, a demand was served upon the vendee for the possession of certain real property agreed to be sold to the latter, with a notice that, because of his failure to make a certain payment, the contract was "absolutely abandoned and determined." It is urged as the effect of that decision that the vendor by his notice elected to rescind the contract, thus giving the vendee the right to recover the payments made. We do not so understand the decision, as the court, after referring to a previous action to quiet the title to the property, wherein the question of the alleged rescission was not involved, said: "In the present case, however, the complaint directly alleges a rescission on the part of the vendor, Parlin, and this allegation is not denied in the answer. In such case the vendee is clearly entitled to recover what he paid under and in pursuance of the contract so rescinded." With the exception of the question of the effect of the previous decree quieting the title to the property, the only question involved or decided was the vendee's right to recover the payments made under the contract where its rescission by the vendor was admitted by the pleadings.

[5, 6] It has been held that, after the vendee's breach, the vendor may agree to a mutual abandonment or rescission, in which case the vendee would be entitled to recover the amounts paid. Such were the facts proved or admitted in the following cases wherein recovery was allowed: Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 25 P. 749, 22 Am. St. Rep. 257; Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572, 30 P. 774; Shively v. Semi-Tropic, etc., Co., 99 Cal. 259, 33 P. 848; Merrill v. Merrill, 102 Cal. 317, 36 P. 675; Heilig v. Parlin, supra; Gaume v. Sheets, 181 Cal. 119, 183 P. 535; Bernardo v. Soderman, 19 Cal. App. 161, 124 P. 866; Smith v. Jacobard, 20 Cal. App. 281, 128 P. 1023, 1026; Burmester v. Horn, 35 Cal. App. 549, 170 P. 674; Aderholt v. Wood, 66 Cal. App. 666, 226 P. 950. The same rule applies when there is a mutual failure to perform, the conditions of the contract being concurrent (Clary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, 24 P. 280, 18 Am. St. Rep. 187); and the vendee may also recover where the vendor is in default or refuses to be bound by the contract (Chatfield v. Williams, 85 Cal. 518, 24 P. 839; Merrill v. Merrill, 95 Cal. 334, 30 P. 542; Duncanson v. Walton, 111 Cal. 516, 44 P. 174; Carter v. Fox, 11 Cal. App. 67, 103 P. 910; Seals v. Davis, 25 Cal. App. 68, 142 P. 905; Robben v. Benson, 37 Cal. App. 227, 173 P. 766). But a vendee in default cannot recover where the vendor who is not in default stands upon the contract (Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 102, 30 P. 1106, 31 Am. St. Rep. 189; Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 335, 32 P. 320; Glock v. Howard, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 P. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17); and the right to retain the purchase money upon an unexcused default by the vendee is independent of any express clauses in the contract for the forfeiture of rights or the retention of payments as liquidated damages, such clauses being but declarations of what would have been the legal rights of the vendor without such provisions (Glock v. Howard, etc., Co., supra; Tuso v. Green, 194 Cal. 574, 586, 229 P. 327).

[7, 8] The grounds for the claim in the present case that the vendor rescinded the contract were the statement in the notice of default that she elected "to cancel the contract pursuant to the terms thereof," and that the same "is hereby canceled and is absolutely void and of no effect," and the statement by her attorney in his letter to the vendee that the contract by reason of the latter's default had been canceled and was no longer existing. It has been held that a provision in a contract to the effect that a violation of any of its terms or conditions by either party should work a forfeiture and the contract should thereupon become void and of no effect means only that the rights of the party violating it cease, and, as to him and to that extent, the agreement becomes void and of no effect. The contract, however, remains in effect so as to protect the rights of the innocent party and to enforce the obligations of the delinquent. Central Oil Co. v. Southern Refining Co., 154 Cal. 165, 97 P. 177. The contract having provided that, in the event of a default on the part of the vendee, all sums theretofore paid should at the option of the vendor be forfeited and retained by her, and the agreement thereupon "become and be absolutely void and of no effect," the notice stating that she elected to cancel the contract pursuant to the terms thereof should be construed therewith; and, when so construed, it is evident that she did not intend a technical cancellation or rescission, but merely to terminate the vendee's rights under the contract pursuant to its provisions. Such was the view of the court in Hyman v. Harbor View Land Co., 46 Cal. App. 98, 188 P. 828, wherein a vendor, in a notice to the vendees following their default, stated that he rescinded the contract, and it was held not to be his intention to make a technical rescission, but only to terminate the contract in accordance with its terms, which were that, in the event of a default of the vendees, time being of the essence, the vendor might at his option rescind the contract, and all moneys paid thereon should thereupon be forfeited and retained by him as rent and liquidated damages. Also, in List v. Moore, 20 Cal. App. 616, 129 P. 962, a contract for the purchase of real property made time of the essence, and provided that, in the event of his failure to comply with its terms, the vendee should forfeit all right thereto and the vendor released from all obligation to convey. In a written extension granted the vendee, it was provided that, in case of a default by the latter, the contract, which was deposited in escrow, should be surrendered to the vendor, and thereupon "be considered canceled and terminated," and also that "upon the surrender of the said contract * * * the same is to be null and void and of no further effect. * * *" The vendee having defaulted, he was notified that the contract was "at an end." The action was brought to recover the amounts paid by him on the purchase price; a rescission by the vendor being alleged. A judgment for the defendants was affirmed on appeal. In holding that the notice did not constitute a rescission, or give to the purchaser the right to recover any part of the purchase money paid, the court said: "It would be rather singular if under the circumstances the mere notice given to the contemplated purchaser by the owner of the land of a fact that was expressly provided in the agreement and of which each had knowledge, would operate to change the legal effect of said fact to the detriment of the said owner. The contract was at an end either with or without any formal notice. * * * Rescission implies, of course, the restoration of the parties to the same situation, and the same terms as existed when the contract was made. It requires the surrender of any consideration or advantage secured by either party. But the only fair interpretation of the notice here, considered in connection with the terms of the contract, is that no further affirmative action should be taken by either party to execute said contract, and that the status of each should remain as provided without further change."

While, as held in Glock v. Howard, etc., Co., supra, a vendor may, "if his generosity prompts him so to do," agree with a vendee in default for a mutual abandonment and rescission of the contract, in which event the vendee would be entitled to repayment, the facts of the present case do not fairly support the conclusion that the vendor, to use the language of the court in List v. Moore, supra, "was so gratuitously generous as to voluntarily surrender the valuable right secured to her by the terms of the contract."

We are satisfied the evidence was insufficient to reasonably support the findings of the trial court in this and the other respects mentioned, and the judgment is accordingly reversed.

JAMES v. FRAZEE et al. (Civ. 6948.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 30, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 30, 1929.

Appeal and error §699(4)—Reversal cannot be predicated on error in instructions where record does not show at whose request instructions were given.

A judgment cannot be reversed on ground of asserted error in instructions where record does not show at whose request such instructions were given, since appellate court must presume that any instruction complained of was given at request of appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Action by Stuart James against Leonard D. Frazee and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages resulting from an automobile collision. The cause was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $35,000. This verdict was reduced on order of the trial court to $17,500, and the defendant has appealed from the judgment upon typewritten transcripts.

The collision occurred at the intersection of two streets in the city of Oakland while defendant was endeavoring to make a left-hand turn through the intersection. Each party charged the other with negligence in the operation of his vehicle; the principal act of negligence charged to the defendant being his alleged failure to give a proper signal before attempting to make the turn. The plaintiff suffered a fractured leg and other minor injuries, and on this appeal the suggestion is made that the verdict is highly excessive, but the point is not urged for a reversal of the judgment. On the merits of the case appellant concedes that the evidence is conflicting and that there is some evidence to support the verdict. For this reason no attack is made upon the judgment on that ground.

The only point urged on the appeal is that the trial judge erred in giving certain listed instructions to the jury. These instructions relate generally to the definitions of negligence and contributory negligence and to the duty of the defendant in the operation of his vehicle on the public highway as such duty is laid down by certain sections of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended). The appellant argues that these instructions cast too heavy a burden upon him and that the jury should likewise have been instructed that these provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act applied to the respondent as well.

There is considerable merit in appellant's criticism of some of the instructions listed, but we will not discuss them because the record is not in condition to enable us to give appellant any relief. The record presented by the appellant shows 63 instructions given by the trial judge and 10 instructions requested by the appellant and either given as modified or refused. The record does not disclose which party requested any of the instructions which the appellant now attacks, but it does appear that none of the instructions requested by the defendant and refused touch upon the subject-matter covered by the instructions now complained of.

The rule of the decisions is that when the record does not show at whose request certain instructions were given the appellate court must presume that any instruction complained of was given at the request of the appellant and the judgment cannot be reversed on the ground of asserted error in such instruction. Sutter Butte C. Co. v. American R. & A. Co., 182 Cal. 549, 554, 189 P. 277; Gray v. Eschen, 125 Cal. 1, 5, 57 P. 664; Finkelstein v. Cosgrove, 83 Cal. App. 201, 202, 256 P. 608; Walters v. Evick (Cal. App.) 268 P. 1061.

For this reason the judgment is affirmed.

VATCHER v. EGAS et al. (Civ. 5306.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 23, 1929.

1. Bail §74(1)—Surety held not exonerated because principal was released without date certain being specified for his appearance and because personal service of order so to appear was necessary; "process" (Code Civ. Proc. § 715).

Surety on bail bond held not entitled to be exonerated because principal was released without a date certain being specified for his appearance and because personal service of an order so to appear was necessary, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 715, by which surety assumed the burden of paying amount specified if principal should fail to attend from time to time as might be directed; word "process" in statute signifying understanding that principal will hold himself available to process of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Process.]

2. Bail §74(1)—Surety held not released from liability because absconding principal was in custody of sheriff of foreign state awaiting extradition.

Surety held not exonerated on bail bond because principal who failed to appear was indicted in the state and was in custody of sheriff of another state awaiting extradition upon order from which he appealed, since principal, by absconding and by effectively invoking legal procedure of foreign state to prevent his return, gave rise to contingency against which surety obligated itself.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by L. V. Vatcher against V. M. Egas and J. E. Roman-Checa. Judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order which forfeited a bail bond furnished by defendant Roman-Checa, the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, as surety, appeals. Affirmed.

John B. Haas and John D. Home, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. On February 20, 1925, the respondent recovered judgment upon a promissory note executed by the defendant V. M. Egas, and indorsed by the defendant J. E. Roman-Checa. On February 21, 1925, upon an affidavit reciting that execution had been issued, but that collection was impossible, although the defendants had property, and that the defendant Roman-Checa was about to depart from the jurisdiction, and to abscond and thus avoid process, he was arrested. On the date last mentioned, bail was fixed in the sum of $1,100, the amount of said judgment, whereupon the appellant furnished in his behalf an undertaking which provided as follows:

"* * * We, United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, a Maryland corporation, as surety hereby undertake that the said J. E. Roman-Checa will appear and will at all times hold himself amenable to the order and process of the court and will appear for such further proceedings in the above entitled action as may be had in accordance with law and the rule of the above entitled court, or if he fails to perform either of these conditions, that we will pay to the People of the State of California the sum of eleven hundred and 00/100 dollars, lawful money of the United States."

The defendant was thereupon released from custody and immediately left the state. An order for his examination in supplementary proceedings was issued, directing that the sheriff serve the same upon J. E. Roman-Checa personally, or, if he could not be found, that it be served upon the surety, which latter service was made for the reason already stated. The company appeared from time to time, and after numerous continuances an order was entered forfeiting said undertaking to the people of the state of California, for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, from which order the surety appealed.

Appellant contends that it should have been exonerated, for the reason that the defendant was released without a date certain being specified for his appearance, and that personal service of an order so to appear was necessary before the principal could legally be held in such default as to create a liability upon the undertaking. Section 715 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relied upon by appellant, provides in part:

"Upon being brought before the judge, he may be ordered to enter into an undertaking, with sufficient surety, that he will attend from time to time before the judge or referee, as may be directed during the pendency of proceedings and until the final termination thereof, and will not in the meantime dispose of any portion of his property not exempt from execution."

[1] This section affords a complete answer to appellant's contention, because in furnishing an undertaking that he would appear and "at all times hold himself amenable to the order and process of the court and will appear for such further proceedings in the above entitled action as may be had," the surety assumed the burden of paying the amount specified if the principal should fail to "attend from time to time * * * as may be directed." Both the statute and the undertaking contemplated future proceedings, orders, and process, whereas the defendant created and the surety permitted the precise contingency for which the obligation was demanded and provided. The word "process" in the statute is singularly significant in the present instance, because it signifies the understanding that the person released will hold himself available to the process of the court. Appellant undertook to assure the court that Roman-Checa would attend from time to time as might be directed. The fact that a date had not previously been set or personal service effected is, from the very nature of the situation, immaterial, since he was bound to obey future orders, although he rendered them impossible to serve by voluntarily placing himself beyond the court's jurisdiction.

[2] It is further urged that Roman-Checa was thereafter indicted in this state, and was in the custody of a sheriff in Louisiana awaiting extradition upon order from which he appealed, and that this also was a ground for requiring the exoneration of the surety. It has been held in certain criminal cases cited by appellant that, under a bail bond providing for the surrender and commitment of the principal, his arrest and incarceration elsewhere releases the surety from liability. However, the reasoning already employed herein applies equally in this respect, since the defendant, by absconding, and by effectively invoking such legal procedure of a foreign state as to prevent his return to hold himself amenable to the orders of local tribunals, gave rise to the contingency against which the surety obligated itself to the people of this state. County of Los Angeles v. Maga (Cal. App.) 276 P. 352, is squarely in point. It was there held that, the accused having voluntarily left the jurisdiction, the sureties were liable, and the fact of arrest in other proceedings did not exonerate them.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GODFREY et al. (Cr. 1796.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 22, 1929.

1. Criminal law ☞1023(12)—Appeal lies from order refusing motion to vacate judgment of conviction (Pen. Code, § 1237).

Order denying motion to vacate judgment of conviction is appealable under Pen. Code, § 1237 permitting appeal to be taken by defendant from order made after judgment affecting substantial rights.

2. Criminal law ☞1131(4)—Defendant's tardiness in moving to vacate judgment of conviction held insufficient ground for dismissing appeal from order denying motion (Pen. Code § 1237).

That defendant's motion to vacate judgment of conviction was presented to trial court too late held not ground for dismissal of appeal from order denying motion under Pen. Code § 1237, since question whether motion was made in time involved consideration of merits of appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Mark Godfrey and Russell Smith were charged with, and Smith was convicted of, an offense. From an order denying Smith's motion to vacate the original judgment, he appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

HOUSER, J. More than three years after the date of the affirmance by this court of a judgment of conviction against him, defendant made a motion in the trial court to vacate said original judgment. The motion was denied. Thereupon defendant appealed to this court from the order denying such motion. The instant proceeding is a motion made in this court by respondent to dismiss said appeal on the ground that the motion to vacate the judgment was made by defendant in the trial court "too late," and, therefore, that the order denying such motion was not appealable.

[1] By section 1237 of the Penal Code, among other things, it is provided that an appeal may be taken by a defendant "from any order made after judgment, affecting the substantial rights of the party." In several cases within this state the rule there enunciated has been followed. See Ward v. Dunne, 136 Cal. 19, 68 P. 105; People v. Perez, 9 Cal. App. 265, 98 P. 870; People v. O'Brien, 4 Cal. App. 723, 89 P. 438; People v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 594, 30 P. 963. As it is manifest that the order in question was made after final judgment, and that it affected substantial rights of defendant, the right to appeal from the order in question seems firmly established.

[2] Whether the motion to vacate the judgment was made within the time permitted by law in such cases was one of the questions which was to be determined by the trial court. If made "too late," it is manifest that other grounds, although furnishing possibly sufficient legal reasons for a denial of the motion, were at least unnecessary as a basis for the ruling. But, assuming that the only reason for a denial of the motion was that it was made "too late," the right of defendant to appeal from the ruling was just as completely assured to him by the statute and the decisions of the Supreme Court as though such denial had been based upon any other reason.

The appeal from the order of the trial court presented for review to this court each and every reason which might afford a sufficient legal foundation for the action of the trial court in the premises. In other words, the legal merits of the controversy, including the question of whether it should be dismissed because of the tardiness of defendant in instituting it, were placed before this court for its determination. To solve the problem presented by the motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the motion in the trial court was made "too late" would require at the hands of this court at least a duplication of the work and investigation of the facts and the law which would become necessary to reach a decision on the appeal.

In the case of People v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 594, 30 P. 963, 964, in ruling upon a motion to dismiss an appeal taken from an order made after final judgment in the action, among other things, the court said: "To dismiss an appeal is to refuse to consider its merits, and therefore there can be no dismissal of an appeal on the ground that it is without merit; for to reach this conclusion the merits must be considered, and the record must be examined."

It follows that the instant motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied. It is so ordered.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and L. G. Campbell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. In brief, the history of the litigation represented by this appeal is that in the month of May, 1925, defendant was convicted of the crime of robbery. His appeal from the judgment rendered against him resulted in an affirmance of such judgment. People v. Smith, 76 Cal. App. 105, 243 P. 882. In the month of January, 1929, which was nearly four years after the date of his conviction, defendant presented a motion in the trial court to vacate the judgment theretofore rendered against him. In substance, the grounds of such motion were that the verdict of the jury by which defendant was found guilty of the charge preferred against him was void—first, for the reason that on the return of the verdict by the jury the clerk of the court failed to read the verdict to the jury or to inquire of the jury whether it was their verdict—all as required by section 1164 of the Penal Code, and, secondly (without going into detail as set forth in the motion) that the grand jury which presented the indictment against defendant was not legally drawn or qualified. The motion, by order of the trial court, was denied; and defendant has appealed to this court from such order.

In his closing brief appellant has expressly abandoned the point first suggested herein.

Assuming (but not conceding) that the facts as shown by the record presented herein compel the conclusion that the grand jury in question was irregularly drawn and selected, nevertheless, according to the statutes and the decisions affecting such a situation, it does not follow that in the circumstances defendant is now in a position to take advantage of such defects.

By a provision of the Penal Code, among other things, in effect it is provided that in answer to his arraignment the defendant may move to set aside the indictment or information (section 990, Pen. Code); and section 995 of the same code provides that the indictment must be set aside "where it is not found, indorsed and presented as prescribed in this code. * * *". In the case of People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195, 27 P. 204, 205, the defendant was prosecuted by information. He was convicted; and on his appeal he sought "to avail himself of the alleged fact that there was no preliminary examination and commitment of defendant by a magistrate before the filing of an information. * * ". With reference to the point presented by the appellant, in the course of the opinion the Supreme Court said: " * * Moreover, a defendant, upon arraignment, may move to set aside the information upon the ground 'that before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate'; and if the motion be not then made, the defendant is

The following authorities also support the rule: People v. Lawrence, 21 Cal. 368; People v. Fritz, 54 Cal. App. 137, 201 P. 348; People v. Knight, 63 Cal. App. 63, 218 P. 79; People v. Lopez, 26 Cal. 112; People v. Stacey, 34 Cal. 307; People v. Parsons, 82 Cal. App. 17, 255 P. 212.

In the case of People v. Murphy, 71 Cal. App. 176, 235 P. 51, a situation identical with that here presented was before the appellate tribunal, and the ruling was in accord with that hereinbefore indicated. The case of *Bruner v. 3. Schools and school districts ⇨117—Actions to enforce liabilities of school district may be brought against trustees, and no judgment as condition to proceeding against trustees as such need be shown (Pol. Code, §§ 1575, 1623).

Actions to enforce liabilities of school district may be brought against board of trustees as such or against them in designated name of district, under Pol. Code, § 1575, and no judgment as condition to proceeding against trustees as such need be shown; effect of sections 1575 and 1623 being to authorize trustees to sue and be sued and make board responsible for judgments against district.

4. Schools and school districts ⇨122—Instruction that, to recover from school district for student's injury, dangerous condition, notice to defendant, and failure to remedy within reasonable time must be shown, held proper (Gen. Laws, Act 5619; Pol. Code, § 1623, as amended by St. 1923, p. 298).

In action against school district for injury to manual training student while operating power-driven circular saw, instruction that plaintiff must show dangerous condition, knowledge or notice thereof by defendant, and failure to remedy within reasonable time, held proper, under Gen. Laws, Act 5619, when read with Pol. Code, § 1623, as amended by St. 1923, p. 298, as against contention that same legal responsibility for negligence is imposed on school district as that resting on private corporations.

5. Schools and school districts ⇨122—Instruction that school district was liable for student's injury if its negligence was proximate cause and plaintiff was not contributorily negligent held erroneous (Gen. Laws, Act 5619).

In action against school district for injury to manual training student while operating power-driven saw, instruction that, if defendant or any of its officers was negligent, which negligence was proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, without any negligence on part of plaintiff proximately contributing thereto, defendant was liable, held erroneous, since school district's liability is measured by Gen. Laws, Act 5619.

6. Schools and school districts ⇨121—In action against school district by student injured while operating saw, plaintiff's testimony that guard was not in place and he had never seen guard on saw held admissible.

In action against school district for injury to manual training student operating power-driven saw, plaintiff's testimony that guard on day of accident was not in place, and that he had never seen guard on saw, held admissible as circumstance relating to instructor's knowledge of danger.

In action against school district for injury to manual training student operating power-driven saw, testimony of safety engineer as to general practice respecting guarding of saws, if incompetent, held harmless, where defendant conceded that guard was necessary but contended that sufficient guard had been furnished and kept on saw.

9. Witnesses ~~C~~406—In personal injury action, testimony to conversation with witness some months after accident held admissible to contradict testimony of such witness.

In personal injury action against school district, witness' testimony to conversation with instructor some months after accident held properly admitted, where offered to contradict that given on material matter by instructor while witness.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Homer R. Spence, Judge.

Action by Martin Ahern, by his guardian ad litem, Theresa J. Ahern, against the Livermore Union High School District of Alameda County. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Earl Warren, Dist. Atty., Ralph E. Hoyt, Chief Asst. Dist. Atty., and Agnes R. Polsdorfer, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of Oakland, for appellant.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An action brought by Martin Ahern, through his guardian ad litem, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the officers and employees of defendant school district. A jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and, from the judgment entered thereon the defendant, following the denial of a motion for a new trial, has appealed.

[1] The plaintiff at the time he was injured was 14 years of age. He had been a student in the manual training department of the school district since August, 1925, and on December 7th of that year, while operating a power-driven circular saw therein, suffered the loss of the middle and index fingers of the right hand which came in contact with the saw blade. The complaint alleged that the injuries were sustained through the negligence of the defendant in that its officers and employees, without due regard for the safety of the children of the school, failed to have in place a guard over the saw disc; that such guard was a necessary and standard safeguard to prevent injuries from the use of the saw, which was hazardous to operate, particularly to children, without being so guarded, and which fact defendant knew or, in the exercise of proper care, ought to have known; furthermore, that an instructor of the class in which plaintiff was a student, and who was in the employ of the defendant, had authority and the ability to remedy the dangerous condition without the expenditure of school funds, that he knew for a long time prior to the injury that the saw while in an unguarded and dangerous condition was being operated by students in his absence, but that notwithstanding he neglected to remedy the condition or to take such action as was reasonably necessary to protect the students and the plaintiff against the danger. The defendant denied that the injuries were caused by its negligence, alleged that the same were due solely to the negligence of the plaintiff, and also pleaded contributory negligence on his part.

Appellant contends that the allegations of notice or that its officers failed to remedy the dangerous condition of the saw after receiving notice contained in the complaint were insufficient to state a cause of action under section 2 of Act 5619 of the General Laws, and that, in order to recover under section 1623 of the Political Code, it was essential that judgment be first recovered against the district.

The act, which by section 1 limits the personal liability of the trustees for the acts of employees, provides by section 2 that " * * * School Districts shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition * * * of buildings, grounds, works and property in all cases where the governing or managing board of such * * * school district, or other board, officer or person having authority to remedy such condition, had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition of any such * * * building, grounds, works or property and failed within a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice, to remedy such condition, or failed and neglected within a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice to take such action as may be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such dangerous or defective condition." Approved June 13, 1923, St. 1923, p. 675.

Section 1623 of the Political Code, as amended in 1923, approved May 10, 1923, St. 1923, p. 298, provides that "boards of school trustees, high school boards * * * are liable as such in the name of the district for salary due any teacher on contract, and for all debts contracted under the provisions of this chapter, and for any judgment against the district on account of injury to any pupil arising because of the negligence of the district or its officers or employees, and they must pay any judgment for debts, liabilities or damages out of the school funds. * * * Members of the boards of school trustees and city boards of education shall not be held personally liable for accidents to children going to or returning from school, or on the playgrounds, or in connection with school work."

The material portions of the last section previous to its amendment were the following: "Boards of trustees are liable as such, in the name of the district, for any judgment against the district for salary due any teacher on contract, and for all debts contracted under the provisions of this chapter and they must pay such judgment or liabilities out of the school moneys to the credit of such district," etc.

[2, 3] We are satisfied that the complaint was sufficient under the provisions of the general law, and we find no merit in the second objection. A school district is a public corporation (Estate of Bulmer, 59 Cal. 131; Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 P. 1067; Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 32 P. 558) against which actions will lie directly (Barber v. Mulford, 117 Cal. 356, 49 P. 206). Actions to enforce its liabilities may be brought against its board of trustees as such (Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 P. 44), or against the latter in the designated name of the district (section 1575, Pol. Code); and no judgment as a condition to a proceeding against the trustees as such need be shown; the effect of the last section and section 1623 of the Political Code being, as was held in Hancock v. Board of Education, supra, to authorize the trustees to sue and be sued and "make the board responsible for judgments" obtained against the district.

[4] Based upon the provisions of Act 5619, General Laws, appellant offered the following instruction, which was refused: "I instruct you that before you can render a verdict against the defendant in this case the following facts must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence: (1) That a dangerous or defective condition existed in public property belonging to defendant; (2) that the governing or managing board of such defendant, or an officer or person having authority to remedy such condition, had knowledge or notice of such defective or dangerous condition of such property, and (3) that such governing or managing board or officer or person having authority to remedy such condition failed or neglected within a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice to remedy such condition, or failed and neglected within a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice to take such action as may be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such dangerous or defective condition."

Respondent contends that the Code section as amended imposes the same legal responsibility for negligence upon school districts as that resting upon private corporations, and that the instruction was properly refused. It is conceded by counsel that the legislation in question followed actions against the trustees in several districts seeking to hold them personally liable for injuries to pupils. The acts were adopted at the same session. Act 5619 was approved on June 13, 1923, and was the last to pass the Legislature. The amendment to the section of the Political Code was approved on May 10, 1923, and both acts took effect on the same day. Both relate to the same subject, namely, the liability of a district for negligence. Act 5619 prescribes the conditions under which liability shall attach, as to which the amended section is silent; while the latter, in addition to providing for the enforcement against the district of liabilities both for torts and upon contracts by actions against the trustees of the district as such, prescribes, subject to the constitutional limitation, how judgments shall be paid. Under such circumstances the acts should be read together (Old Homestead Bakery v. Marsh, 75 Cal. App. 247, 258, 242 P. 749), and, when so read, are not inconsistent. While the Code section refers to judgments for injuries due to negligence, and provides that the trustees as such shall be liable therefor, the provision has no other effect than to make the board responsible for such and other judgments entered against the district (Dawson v. Tulare Union High School Dist. [Cal. App.] 276 P. 424; Hancock v. Board of Education, supra) to the extent that the section directs that such judgments be paid from school funds. We are satisfied that the provisions of Act 5619, General Laws, determine the liability of a district for the negligence of its officers, and that the proposed instruction correctly stated the law.

[5] The following instruction was given at the request of the plaintiff: "If you find that defendant district or any of its officers was negligent, which negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries while a pupil in the defendant's school without any negligence on the part of the plaintiff proximately contributing thereto then and in that event defendant is liable in damages to this plaintiff."

It being our conclusion that the responsibility of the district for the negligence of its officers or employees is measured by the above act and not by the rule applicable to private corporations, the above instruction was erroneous.

[6, 7] The plaintiff was asked over objection whether the guard on the day of the accident was in place and whether he had ever seen the guard on the saw. His answer to both questions was in the negative. Defendant contends that the questions were intended to convey the impression that the guard was customarily off the saw, and that the ruling thereon was erroneous and prejudicial.

The evidence showed a condition likely to have attracted or to have been called to the attention of the instructor, and was a circumstance relevant to the question of his knowledge of the danger. Wigmore on Evidence, § 252; Dotton v. Albion, 50 Mich. 129, 15 N. W. 46; Noyes v. Gardner, 147 Mass. 506, 18 N. E. 423, 1 L. R. A. 354; Dawson v. Tulare Union High School Dist., supra. If appellant desired the evidence to be restricted, an instruction to that effect should have been asked.

[8] A safety engineer was permitted to testify to the general practice with respect to guarding power saws in wood-working estab-fishments, and gave his opinion as to the dangerous character of an unguarded circular saw. It is claimed that the evidence was incompetent and tended to prejudice defendant's case in the minds of the jury. If incompetent, as claimed, the evidence was harmless, as defendant conceded throughout the trial that the guard was necessary, contending, however, that a sufficient guard had been furnished and kept on the saw.

[9] The same witness testified to a conversation with the instructor some months after the accident. This is claimed to have been hearsay and consequently inadmissible. The evidence was admitted to contradict that given on a material matter by the instructor while a witness, and was properly admitted.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support a finding that defendant district was negligent, or that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, as alleged. After a careful review of the testimony we are satisfied that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding against the district under the rule which we believe the Legislature intended to prescribe, and that, considering the age of the plaintiff and his inexperience, the conclusion of the jury that he was not negligent was justified.

In the matter of the instructions, however, we are convinced that a broader rule respecting the liability of school districts for negligence than the law sanctions was applied by the court, and that the necessary effect of the error was to mislead the jury.

For this reason, the judgment is reversed.

PONCINO v. SIERRA NEVADA LIFE & CASUALTY CO. (Civ. 6923.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 22, 1929.

Appeal and error $\S$ 464—Where appellant attempted to give stay bond, but attorney's clerk made error in notice of justification, writ of supersedeas should be granted.

Where appellant in good faith made an honest effort to give a stay bond, but through mistake and inadvertence attorney's clerk gave notice of justification of surety on April 16 instead of April 23, writ of supersedeas should be granted on appellant's furnishing good and sufficient undertaking in sum required by law to stay execution of judgment.

Action by Alinda Poncino, administratrix, against the Sierra Nevada Life & Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. On application for writ of supersedeas, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Alameda County, Leon E. Gray, Judge, to prevent issuance of execution of a judgment in an action upon a policy of accident and health insurance. Writ granted.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edwin H. Williams, of San Leandro, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. The record shows that a certain judgment was obtained by plaintiff against defendant, petitioner herein, for the sum of $2,500. The action in which such judgment was rendered was one brought on an accident and health insurance policy.

Defendant moved for a new trial, which motion was denied on the 4th day of April, 1929, and thereafter it perfected an appeal to this court. For the purpose of staying execution on said judgment, appellant, on April 8, 1929, filed a surety bond in the sum of $5,000. Respondent thereafter, on April 12, 1929, filed notice that she excepted to the sufficiency thereof. On April 15, 1929, appellant served notice on respondent's attorney that the surety on said bond would justify on the following morning at 10 o'clock; said notice being served in San Francisco, and the place set for justification being fixed at Oakland. Respondent's attorney, deeming the notice insufficient as to time, did not attend. Appellant's attorney did not discover his mistake concerning this notice until the 2d day of May, 1929, when he was served with a motion for execution to issue. Thereafter, on May 10, 1929, appellant duly filed another undertaking in the sum of $5,136.32, being twice the amount of the judgment and costs. Notwithstanding the filing of such undertaking, the court made an order on May 13, 1929, for execution to issue. This order was stayed pending the hearing and determination of this petition.

It is claimed by petitioner herein that the notice of justification of the surety was set for Tuesday, the 16th day of April, 1929, instead of Tuesday, the 23d day of April of the same year through mistake and inadvertence on the part of a clerk in the office of appellant's attorney, and it is prayed that an order be made by this court permitting appellant to file with the clerk of this court a good and sufficient undertaking to stay execution of the said judgment during the pendency of the appeal, and that upon the filing of the same the writ prayed for issue to the court below and the officers thereof, requiring each of them to desist from executing said judgment.

We are of the opinion that the relief sought should be granted. Appellant has, in good faith, made an honest effort to give a stay bond, and the mistake or inadvertence of the clerk as to the notice of justification should not disturb the status quo until the final determination of the action, as appellant might lose the fruits of its appeal, if successful.

Nonpareil Mfg. Co. v. McCartney, 143 Cal. 1, 76 P. 653; Segarini v. Bargagliotti, 193 Cal. 538, 226 P. 2. It is ordered that upon the filing by petitioner with the clerk of this court, within 20 days, of a good and sufficient undertaking in the sum required by law to stay execution of said judgment, and which said undertaking shall have been first approved by a judge of the superior court at a hearing upon 10 days' notice to the respondent, a writ shall issue as prayed for herein. It is further ordered that in the meantime, during said period of 20 days, execution of the judgment be stayed.

1. Contracts ⇨147(1), 152—Contracts should be construed to effectuate intent of parties, giving common and accepted meanings to words used.

Contracts are to be construed to give the true intent of the parties, and words are to be given their common and accepted meaning.

2. Sales ⇨76—Contract for sale of raisins, based on "price quoted" by seller, referred to price quoted in general market; "market price;" "market value."

Contract for sale of raisins to packing company by co-operative association based on "price quoted by seller," required sale at price quoted in general market, and not in particular localities; "market price" and "market value" both meaning price or value of article established or shown by sales in the way of ordinary business, "market value" being price at which goods are freely offered in the market to all the world.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second and Third Series, Market Price; First, Second, and Third Series, Market Value.]

3. Sales ⇨76—Co-operative association, contracting to sell raisins on basis of "price quoted," was required to fill orders at current quoted price, notwithstanding different price given 4 of its 17 divisional sales offices.

Co-operative association, contracting to sell raisins to packing company at "price quoted by seller," with certain deductions, was required to fill orders at general market price quoted for raisins on dates when orders were accepted, and was not entitled to set price in accordance with that stated in night telegram to 4 of the 17 divisional sales offices.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1178(6)—Case should be remanded for determination of damages, where trial court failed to consider evidence on that point (Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

Where trial court failed to consider evidence as to buyer's damages by reason of seller's breach of contract, and took view that plaintiff was not entitled to damages on that ground, judgment for damages should not be entered on appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, but cause should be remanded for trial court's determination of damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by the Kings County Packing Company against the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with direction.

Carl E. Lindsay and Lindsay & Gearhart, all of Fresno, for appellant.

M. B. Harris and Harris, Johnson, Willey & Griffith, all of Fresno, and Harry M. Creech, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is taken by appellant from the judgment in its favor for the sum of $250, and in favor of respondents for their costs incurred in the action, amounting to $147.47. There are five counts or causes of action set forth in the complaint. The first four are for damages because of the alleged breach of a certain contract existing between appellant and respondents. The fifth is a cause of action for money had and received to the use of appellant in the sum of $600. It was upon this fifth count that the court rendered judgment in favor of appellant for $250.

Appellant states that, as the amount involved under the fifth count is so small, no attempt will be made on this appeal to question the findings or judgment in that particular, but does urge with respect to the other four counts that the findings wherein the court found appellant had breached its contract are not supported by the evidence, but, instead, the evidence shows that the contract was breached by respondents. We have referred to respondents in the plural, although the contract was signed but by Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, for the reason that it is alleged in the complaint and admitted in the answer that Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, in the matter of the making and executing the agreement and in all matters connected therewith, acted as and was the agent and broker of respondent Sun-Maid Raisin Growers' Association and Sun-Maid Raisin Growers' Association of California, and consequently, if the alleged breach of the contract was committed by the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, all three of the respondents are bound thereby.

The facts are without material dispute. The appellant Kings County Packing Company is engaged in the business of packing and selling canned fruits. Its plant is situated at Armona, Kings county, Cal. Several years prior to 1925 it began to pack and sell canned raisins of the Muscat type. It built up quite a large business along that line, particularly in the southern states. A few years prior to 1925 the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers took over this business, and under a contract with the Kings County Packing Company the packing company canned Muscat raisins for the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers, which in turn marketed the product. This particular branch of business was discontinued by the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers in 1924, and the Kings County Packing Company concluded to resume for its own account such enterprise. It was with that end in view that in June, 1925, the Kings County Packing Company entered into the contract in question with the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association. At that time of the year it would, of course, be impossible to determine the volume of the raisin crop maturing in September and October. The Sun-Maid Raisin Growers' organizations having control of the major portion of the product to be produced by the growers throughout the raisin districts, and the remainder of the product being divided among a number of independent packers, the Kings County Packing Company endeavored to obtain such quantity of Muscat raisins as it might need for its enterprise from the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers, and that was done or arranged for by the agreement referred to.

The agreement is simple in its terms and unmistakable in its language. The Sunland Sales Co-operative Association is therein called the "seller," and Kings County Packing Company the "buyer." The covenants of the agreement were to the following effect: The buyer agreed to purchase and to receive from the seller, and the seller agreed to sell and deliver to the buyer, the buyer's entire requirements of 1925 crop of Muscat raisins; the buyer was to pay therefor for 2-crown loose Muscats per pound the price quoted by the seller on 15-ounce seeded cartons, less 4 cents, with a minimum of $4\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound, and for 3-crown loose Muscats per pound the price quoted by seller for 15-ounce seeded cartons, less 3 cents, with a minimum of $5\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound. It should be mentioned, in passing, that 15-ounce seeded cartons referred to a certain pack of raisins, which were at that time being marketed, and had for a long time been marketed, throughout the country by the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers' organizations. This pack consisted of a carton containing 15 ounces of seeded Muscats. The Sun-Maid Raisin Growers' organizations marketed many other packs, but the basis for the charge to be made to the Kings County Packing Company for raisins ordered by it and delivered under the contract was the quoted price of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers' organizations for its 15-ounce seeded carton packs. The Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, a subsidiary organization of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers, acted as the sales agent for the co-operative association. Its sales operations extended throughout the United States, the Dominion of Canada, and other foreign countries. Its operations were explained by Ellsworth Bryce, whose deposition was read in evidence at the trial. His testimony reduced to a narrative form was substantially as follows:

I am manager of the sales administration division of the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association. In general, I direct the sales activity of the sales organization under the explicit direction of our sales counsel. I have charge of the sales personnel and the administration of the sales under the specific direction of the sales counsel. The particular business of the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association is merchandising for co-operatives, and we do merchandising for the co-operative association known as the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California. We handle the entire line of merchandise that they manufacture, consisting of Sun-Maid raisins and syrup and different by-products thereof. We sell for them and recommend the prices on the commodity. The recommendation is either approved or disapproved, and, if it is approved, we wire out to our divisional sales offices, making the price effective. These divisional sales officers are located in 17 cities in the United States and Canada; some of them are New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Boston, Atlanta, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Vancouver, Montreal, Dallas, New Orleans, Kansas City, and Denver. We sell the Sun-Maid raisins in different styles of packages; among them was a package known as the 15-ounce seeded Muscat package; those 15-ounce seeded Muscat cartons contained seeded Muscat raisins.

Another official of the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, Millard S. Bury, testified regarding the way in which the marketing of the products of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers was done and the manner in which prices were quoted substantially as follows:

I am assistant to Mr. Bryce, assistant to the manager, sales administration division, Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, and have been acting in that capacity from the first part of October, 1925. Since that time I have been in charge of the contract department, as well as acting as assistant to Mr. Bryce, having supervision of sales administration in his absence. In November, 1925 we had 17 divisions and it was our practice to wire from the home office to the divisional offices information relative to prices and withdrawals of different packs and brands of our products. We had a manager at each of these different divisions and we wired that manager. Referring to our different products we used different terms; one was "cartons." "Cartons" means a particular pack; that is, puff pack, carton puffed pack. We were then just getting into distribution of puff raisins; we had announced them a few months before that. "Package" was our term for 15-ounce seeded Muscats, the old style seeded package; wherever there is a reference to "package," and wherever that term is used, it meant the 15-ounce old-style carton seeded, not the puffed.

This witness also testified that the prices for the various packs of raisins set by the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association were not communicated by that organization directly to the trade, but that such quotation was done by the divisional offices. So it appears from the testimony of these two officials of the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, Ellsworth Bryce, the sales manager, and Millard S. Bury, his assistant, that the manner in which prices for the various packs of raisins handled by that organization for the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers were quoted to the trade was as follows: The sales organization fixed a price for the various packs, which, when agreed to by the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers, became the established price to be quoted to the trade; thereupon the Sunland Sales Co-operative Association would wire instructions to the 17 divisional offices scattered throughout the United States and Canada, which divisional offices would then in turn issue circulars to the trade quoting the price.

It appears from the record without dispute that in September and October, 1925, it was found that Muscat grapes were not plentiful; that the crop itself was light, and, further, that because of the conditions prevailing a quantity of this variety of grapes had been sold by the producers green, which means that they were picked, boxed, and shipped to Eastern markets in an undried condition; and that the quantity of Muscat raisin grapes of the crop of that year produced and dried by the vineyardists was much less than in former years. It also appears that the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers that year were placing on the market a new variety of raisin, which they termed "puffed," prepared through a secret process, and over which Sun-Maid Raisin Growers' Association had a monopoly.

It is argued by counsel for appellant—and not without force or support in the evidence—that the price on the grapes under appellant's contract was raised to a prohibitory price, in order that respondents would not be required to make delivery and would thereby be enabled to put upon the market more of the "puffed" variety. The witness, Millard

S. Bury, assistant to the manager of Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, testified:

"Q. Well, I don't know what you did. I will withdraw that. I don't think you made any offer for seeded after that. Well, then, as a matter of fact, this direction sent by you to these four offices, Chicago, Atlanta, San Francisco, and Boston, directing your divisional agents to sell the Muscat seeded pack at 11 cents, higher than you were selling the puffed for, was to stimulate the trade in puffed? A. No; more to get in the eyes of the trade, get over in the eyes of the trade, that fact that we still had seeded. That was not to quote them. We did not want to sell seeded particularly. In other words, our major thought was on puffed.

"Q. Sure. You really did not expect that those experienced men in the East, throughout the country, jobbers and wholesale men, were going to pay you a higher price for an inferior article when they could get a superior article for less price? You did not really expect that, did you? A. We had hoped that large sales would not be made.

"Q. Well, I think that answers it. You had hoped that large sales would not be made. A. Because of the fact, as stated before, we wanted to get general distribution—if possible, full distribution—on puffed, because we knew, if we put puffed over, as we should, nobody else would have much of a look-in on old-styled seeded. The demand would be nil, which has later resulted."

Augmented to this are the prices quoted in bulletins received in evidence issued on various dates from and after October 21, 1925, to and including December 1, 1925. In these bulletins whenever puffed Sun-Maid raisins in 15-ounce packages and package seeded Muscats Sun-Maid in 15-ounce packages are quoted together, the price fixed for the puffed raisins is greater than the price fixed for the "old-style" package seeded Muscats. The reason for this seems obvious. The puffed raisins were a new product, which was considered superior to the old-style seeded Muscats, and which the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers were then featuring. And yet, after the order of appellant was sent in, respondent Sunland Sales Co-operative Association refused to fill the order at the quoted price, but made a price at which the seeded Muscat contracted for and ordered by appellant was quoted higher than the higher grade of puffed Muscat.

The purpose of raising the price on appellant's order for seeded Muscat raisins, however, under the view we have taken, becomes immaterial, as the sole question presented is the interpretation to be placed upon paragraph three of the contract, which provides: "Buyer shall pay hereunder for two-crown loose Muscats per pound the price quoted by seller on 15-ounce seeded cartons less four (4¢) cents, with minimum of four and one-half ($4\frac{1}{2}\phi$) cents per pound; for three-crown loose Muscats per pound the price quoted by seller for 15-ounce seeded cartons less three (3ϕ) cents, with a minimum of five and one-half ($5\frac{1}{2}\phi$) cents per pound. Prices shall be f. o. b. sellers' plant at Fresno or Selma."

Appellant placed the two orders in dispute with respondent Sunland Sales Co-operative Association—the first, November 13, 1925, for 60 tons Muscatel, three-crown loose, lug boxes, and 40 tons Muscatel, two-crown loose, lug boxes; and the second, November 17, 1925, for 300 tons Muscat, three-crown loose, lug boxes, and 200 tons Muscat, two-crown loose, lug boxes. Having no quoted price other than that published in the market news or fruit news, the price was left blank and a letter written by Leslie S. Smith, the general manager of appellant corporation, requesting that the proper price be inserted in accordance with the conditions of the contract. These orders were accepted by respondent, Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, on the days following their respective dates, the first on November 14th and the second on November 18th, and the prices quoted on those dates were filled in both orders, namely, 8 cents a pound for three-crown raisins and 7 cents a pound for two-crown raisins. On November 14, 1925, Ellsworth Bryce, manager of the sales administration division of Sunland Sales Co-operative Association, sent a night telegram, dated November 14, 1925, to the sales offices at Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, and Atlanta as follows: "View of demand certain territories you may offer effective November 14th thirty-six fifteen ounce carton seeded to your trade at a price of eleven cents valley subject to home office confirmation." The number "thirty-six" mentioned means, according to Sales Manager Bryce, 36 cartons to the case of 15-ounce seeded.

[1, 2] The question narrows itself to what the parties to the contract intended by the use of the term "price quoted." It is so well established as not to require the citation of authority that contracts are to be construed to give the true intent of the parties and that words are to be given their common and accepted meaning. All of the dictionaries—Webster's, Century, Imperial, and Standard—concur that the definition of the term "quoted" is to name or give the current market price. "Market price means the current price." Sloan v. Baird, 162 N. Y. 327, 56 N. E. 752, 753. "Market price" and "market value," when applied to any article, mean the same thing. They mean the price or value of the article established or shown by sales in the way of ordinary business. Sanford v. Peck, 63 Conn. 486, 27 A. 1057; Murray v. Stanton, 99 Mass 348; Cliquot's Champagne, 70 U. S. (3 Wall.) 114, 18 L. Ed. 116. "Market value" is the price at which goods are freely offered in the market to all the world. Musser v. Magone, 155 U. S. 240, 15 S. Ct. 77, 81, 39 L. Ed. 135. It is clear, then, that the term "price quoted" in the contract was intended to mean the price quoted in the general market and not in a few particular localities.

[3] The last price quoted to the general trade for the 15-ounce seeded carton pack, when the orders of appellant were accepted, was 9 cents, and therefore respondents, in refusing to fill the orders at the quoted price, and not appellant, breached the contract. The night telegram to 4 of the 17 divisional sales offices did not establish the "price quoted" in accordance with the understanding of the contracting parties as disclosed by the evidence and the contract itself. On the contrary, it appears to be an arbitrary attempt to name a price to fit the situation confronting respondents.

If respondents could establish the price to be paid by appellant for raisins ordered under the contract by wiring a price to 4 out of the 17 of the divisional offices, raising the price in these 4 offices and maintaining the lower price in the remainder, the same result could likewise be accomplished by wiring a price to one of the divisional offices. It is too clear to admit of argument that such was not contemplated by the parties at the time they entered into the contract. The market for raisins was widespread. It covered the United States and Canada, as well as foreign lands, and therefore what was in the minds of the parties at the time of executing the contract was the general market price—not the price which might be confined to one locality. Appellant certainly did not intend by its contract to place the power in the hands of respondents to fix the price to be charged it by respondents naming the price at which raisins might be sold in one of the divisional offices.

[4] Appellant urges that we make findings and direct the entry of judgment in its favor, under the authority conferred by section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure (as added by St. 1927, p. 583), which provides that the Supreme and appellate courts may make findings; but, as the trial court under the view it took concluded that appellant was not entitled to damages under any count of the complaint, excepting the fifth, alleging a cause of action for money had and received, and upon which it rendered judgment for appellant, and therefore did not consider evidence as to plaintiff's damages by reason of respondents' breach of the contract, we deem it proper that the trial court should hear the evidence as to appellant's damages and determine the same.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the trial court to find appellant's damages and enter judgment in accordance with such finding.

PEOPLE v. WILLIAMS. (Cr. 1547.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 27, 1929.

1. Weapons ⇨—Steel wrench which could be fitted in leather strap and held in hand of user held to constitute a "slungshot" within statute punishing possession thereof (St. 1925, p. 542).

Flat steel wrench about six inches in length, and weighing approximately five ounces, and looped leather strap about twelve inches long, so contrived by means of wire and leather thongs as to allow the wrench to be placed in pocket at one end, while the end forming the loop could be slipped over the wrist of the user and held in the hand, and, though both were not combined at the time they were found, they were designed to be, held to constitute a "slungshot" within St. 1925, p. 542, punishing possession of a "slungshot," which is defined as a small mass of metal or stone fixed on a flexible handle, strap, or the like, used as a weapon.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Slung Shot.]

2. Weapons ⇨—Deadly weapon does not cease to be such by becoming temporarily inefficient.

Deadly weapon does not cease to be such by becoming temporarily inefficient nor is its essential character changed by dismemberment, if the parts may be easily assembled so as to be effective.

3. Criminal law ⇨1172(1)—Error in instruction in defining slungshot in language applicable to blackjack held not prejudicial, where jury disregarded instruction.

In prosecution for possession of blackjack or slungshot, error of court in defining a slungshot in the language applicable to a blackjack held not prejudicial, where jury properly disregarded instruction and found that weapon was a slungshot.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Will Williams was convicted of the possession of a blackjack or slungshot, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Martin C. Thuesen, of Fresno, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was charged in an information filed in the superior court in and for the county of Fresno with a felony, to wit, the possession of a blackjack or slungshot. He was convicted, and, from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial, has appealed.

The information was based on section 1 of chapter 323 of the Statutes of California (St. 1925, p. 542). The section provides that "Every person who * * * possesses any instrument or weapon * * * commonly known as a blackjack, slungshot, * * * shall be guilty of a felony and upon a conviction thereof shall be punishable by imprisonment in a state prison for not less than one year nor more than five years. * * *" As grounds for the appeal it is contended that the evidence of the character of the instrument found in defendant's possession was insufficient to justify the finding of the jury that the same was a blackjack or slungshot, or to warrant a verdict of guilty; that the verdict was contrary to law, in that there was no evidence upon which the jury could find that the defendant had possession of either a blackjack or slungshot as the same were defined in the court's instructions to the jury, and that the jury was misdirected as to matters of law.

On February 10, 1929, the defendant, with others, was arrested in a resort near Firebaugh, in Fresno county. There was found in his pocket a flat steel wrench about six inches in length and weighing approximately five ounces. In the same pocket was found a looped leather strap about twelve inches long, so contrived by means of wire and leather thongs as to allow the wrench to be placed in a pocket at one end, while the end forming the loop could be slipped over the wrist of the user and held in the hand. While the two were not combined at the time they were found, an inspection shows beyond a reasonable doubt that they were designed to be, and when joined were capable of being, used as an offensive weapon of deadly character.

Webster's International Dictionary defines a blackjack as a small leather-covered club or billy, weighted at the end, and having an elastic shaft; and a slungshot as a small mass of metal or stone fixed on a flexible handle, strap, or the like, used as a weapon.

[1, 2] Defendant claims that the articles found in his possession are not within either definition, but an inspection shows that, when combined, they were well within the last; and the question whether this was true was properly submitted to the jury (People v. McPherson, 220 N. Y. 123, 115 N. E. 515), whose verdict is fully supported. The rule is well settled that a deadly weapon does not cease to be such by becoming temporarily inefficient, nor is its essential character changed by dismemberment if the parts may be easily assembled so as to be effective. Mitchell v. State, 99 Miss. 579, 55 So. 354, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1174, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 512; Hutchinson v. State, 62 Ala. 3, 34 Am. Rep. 1; Fielding v. State, 135 Ala. 56, 33 So. 677; People v. Freeman, 86 Cal. App. 374, 260 P. 826.

[3] In its instructions to the jury the court defined a blackjack or slungshot as "a small leather-covered club or billy weighted at the head and having an elastic shaft," and charged the jury that, unless they believed that the property found in defendant's possession was a blackjack or slungshot, they must find him not guilty. As stated, the above is the definition of a blackjack as given by Webster, a slungshot being otherwise defined, and defendant claims that the instruction was consequently erroneous. Assuming this to be true, the instruction was not prejudicial to the defendant, but rather to the prosecution, and the error is not a ground for reversal. Kirk v. Santa Barbara Ice Co., 157 Cal. 591, 108 P. 509; People v. Harris, 169 Cal. 53, 145 P. 520. The jury, however, disregarded the instruction—which they might properly do (O'Neill v. Thomas Day Co., 152 Cal. 357, 92 P. 856, 14 Ann. Cas. 970)—and impliedly found, in accordance with the evidence, that the weapon was a slungshot.

The defendant was fairly tried and convicted upon sufficient evidence, and no error appears which can fairly be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

CHANDLER et al. v. BOWMAN and Consolidated Cases. (Civ. 6217; L. A. 9723.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 20, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 30, 1929.

1. Covenants ⇨122—Evidence justified finding, in action for breach of warranty in sale of oil and gas, that pre-existing mineral lease was in force.

In action by purchasers of oil and gas against vendor thereof for breach of warranty on account of existence of outstanding mineral lease, evidence held to justify finding that prior lease granted to oil company was in force at time of sales to plaintiffs.

2. Covenants ⇨10—Instruments granting 1 per cent. of oil produced on land constituted conveyance of interest in realty subject to implied warranty against incumbrances (Civ. Code, § 1113).

Instruments whereby one of joint lessors of oil and gas property, who held himself out as owner of undivided interest in realty, granted 1 per cent. of oil and gas produced therefrom, "to have and to hold to the said grantees," constituted conveyances of interest in realty subject to implied warranties, under Civ. Code, § 1113, that grantor had not previously conveyed any interest in the same estate and that estate was free from incumbrances.

3. Principal and agent ⇨156—Vendor of oil property, purchased because of misrepresentations of vendor's agent that vendor's interest was free of incumbrances, was liable for resulting damages.

Where agent of vendor represented to purchaser that oil and gas property was free and clear of incumbrances, and purchaser was induced to purchase oil and gas on strength of such misrepresentations, vendor was liable for resulting damages.

4. Covenants ⇨108(1)—Purchasers of undivided interest in oil and gas property held not estopped to assert vendor's breach of warranty by virtue of outstanding mineral lease, though purchasers permitted lessee to deduct cost of well.

Purchasers of undivided interest in oil and gas held not estopped to assert claim against vendor for damages by virtue of prior outstanding oil lease, though purchasers subsequently entered into agreement with lessee by which they gave lessee right to deduct cost of well before accounting for oil produced.

5. Covenants ⇨107—Purchaser may sue for damages for breach of warranty without making offer to rescind.

Purchaser, on discovering breach of warranty as to property sold, is not compelled to rescind or offer to accept return of purchase price, but may sue in damages for loss sustained.

6. Principal and agent ⇨115(2)—Agent authorized by vendor to fill in deeds had authority to make representations concerning vendor's title.

Agent whom part owner of oil and gas property, by instructions to escrow holder, authorized to have deeds filled in, had authority to make representations to purchasers concerning character of vendor's title.

7. Appeal and error ⇨719(4)—Ruling on demurrer in action in which no judgment was filed, and concerning which no review was asked, was not presented on appeal.

Trial court's failure to sustain demurrer to amended complaint on ground of misjoinder of parties was not presented on appeal, where no judgment was filed in the action in which the complaint was filed, and the court was not asked to review any rulings therein.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

8. Covenants ⇨122—Evidence of misrepresentations of condition of title made by vendor's agent supported judgment for purchasers of oil and gas, suing for breach of warranty because of outstanding lease.

In action by purchasers of oil and gas against vendor thereof for breach of warranty on account of existence of outstanding mineral lease, evidence of misrepresentations relating to condition of title, made by agent of defendants to plaintiffs, held sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Actions by W. S. Chandler and another against George Bowman, and by J. A. W. Meiling against George Bowman. Judgment for plaintiffs in the first case, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. G. Shelton, of Glendora, for appellant.
McGee, Sumner & Tilden, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem. Defendant Bowman appeals from a judgment rendered in a certain action in favor of W. S. Chandler and S. K. Mansfield for the sum of $4,500. Likewise defendant Bowman appeals from a judgment rendered in another action in favor of J. A. W. Meiling for the sum of $1,500. The first of these suits will be hereafter referred to as the Chandler Case, and the second as the Meiling Case.

These two actions, pursuant to stipulation of the parties, were tried as companion cases with two other actions, under an arrangement whereby the evidence, objections and rulings in one, so far as applicable, should be received and apply to each of the other suits.

In the Chandler Case the complaint alleged that, at all times therein mentioned, Bowman was a part owner in fee in the real property involved herein, and the owner of certain oil and gas rights in said property; that on December 5, 1922, he executed a lease to a certain company, hereinafter referred to as the oil company; that said lease conveyed to the oil company the right to drill for and produce oil and gas from said property, and further provided that the oil company should be reimbursed for the cost of drilling and placing on production of a well or wells for oil on said land, before any oil, et cetera, should be payable to the lessors, or those claiming under them. The lease, it was further alleged, was registered with the registrar of titles about December 18, 1922.

The complaint further charged that subsequently the defendant executed and delivered three certain deeds, a copy of each of which was set forth in hæc verba. One of said instruments purported to convey to the plaintiffs 1 per cent., another purported to convey to Chandler 1 per cent., and the third purported to convey to Mansfield 1 per cent., "of all of the oil and gas produced from said property." Each of said deeds also recited that said 1 per cent. "is a portion of all of the oil and gas produced from the above property, as reserved in deed from George Bowman to Philip A. Grohs" et al.

The answer contained no denial of any of these allegations. The defendant, however, in his answer, in addition to denying that the transaction whereby the plaintiffs acquired these deeds was a joint purchase, pleaded, by way of an affirmative defense, that he had deposited with the First National Bank of Whittier, as security for a certain note in the sum of $600, three deeds of conveyances to 1 per cent. each of the oil and gas from said property, "with instructions to deliver the same to Philip A. Grohs, who might sell 1 per cent. for sufficient to pay said sum of $600, and that this defendant instructed the said Philip A. Grohs that, if he could sell the remainder at the price of two thousand dollars ($2,000) a per cent., or more, to do so, and deliver to the purchasers a deed."

The answer further charged that the plaintiffs had knowledge of said lease prior to the purchase of their respective interests, also that the defendant had withdrawn said royalty from the market, and that the plaintiffs had knowledge of such withdrawal before they purchased. In addition, the answer alleged that about December 5, 1922, the oil company had entered into a lease with the owners of said property and that defendant had signed the same, but that the oil company had abandoned said lease and subsequently had entered upon the property under a modified agreement without his consent, and had drilled a well thereon. The defendant further alleged that the lease signed by him was of no effect, and that the oil company had no right to retain any part of the oil attempted to be conveyed by him to the plaintiffs.

In the Meiling Case the complaint alleged that Bowman was the owner of certain oil royalties and oil and mineral rights in the property involved herein. In all other respects the allegations in the respective complaints in the two actions were substantially alike, and substantially similar admissions were made by the pleadings.

It is not disputed that the various deeds whereby plaintiffs acquired their respective interests were delivered to them in March, 1923; that they paid to Grohs the purchase price which he had fixed for the same; that in August, 1923, the oil company brought in a producing well at a cost of not less than $150,000; and that the oil company refused to account to the plaintiffs for their full percentage of the oil as fixed in their deeds, but instead deducted the sum of $1,500 against each 1 per cent. interest in the oil.

[1] The first point raised by appellant is that the above-mentioned lease granted to the oil company had been abandoned and was not in force at the time the plaintiffs acquired their respective interests. In this connection, it is argued that said oil lease was modified by a certain instrument, claimed to have been executed under date of February 9, 1923, and that the oil company was operating under the later agreement. Although a document, purporting to change some of the terms of that lease, was filed for identification, it was not introduced in evidence. On the contrary, so far as the record discloses, this instrument was never executed by the oil company, nor even by all of the lessors.

While there was evidence indicating that the oil company had not commenced drilling a well within 30 days after the execution of the lease, that delay was readily explained by the fact that the lease had not been signed by all of the owners of interests in the oil, and that the lessors had promised to furnish to the oil company, before the expiration of said 30-day period, written evidence of the approval of said lease by all of such owners as had not signed said lease, but that they had failed to comply with this part of their agreement. On the other hand, the oil company insisted that its rights under said lease had never been modified, and it was engaged in drilling a well on the property in question at the time the plaintiffs acquired their respective interests therein. Appellant's contention, therefore, that the lease granted to the oil company was not in force at the time the sales in question were made to the plaintiff, cannot be sustained.

[2] It is next urged that the deeds obtained by the plaintiffs conveyed no interest in realty, but were merely transfers of personality, and included no warranties as to the title of the interests thereby transferred. Appellant concedes that, if these instruments can be construed as transfers of interests in oil in the ground, then they constituted conveyances of interests in realty, and hence became subject to the implied warranties specified in section 1113 of the Civil Code, to the effect that the grantor has not previously conveyed any interest in the same estate to any other person, and that the estate conveyed is free from any encumbrance suffered by the grantor or any person claiming under him.

In the present cases, however, it is contended that the language employed in the instruments delivered to the plaintiffs was not sufficient to make them conveyances of interests in oil in place, but only purported to give to them interests in such oil as might thereafter be taken from the ground. The answer to this question, therefore, depends upon the construction to be given to said deeds. Omitting such portions as are not material to the point under consideration, each of these instruments recited: "George Bowman, a single man, the registered owner, * * * does hereby grant to * * * all the real property * * * described as follows, to wit: One (1) per cent. of all of the oil and gas produced from lots * * * being a portion of all of the oil and gas produced from the above property, as reserved in deed from George Bowman to Philip A. Grohs, * * * to have and to hold to the said grantees. * * *"

The above referred to deed from Bowman to Grohs et al. contained, in addition to the provisions usually found in a conveyance of real property, a clause reading: "The grantor reserves one-eighth of all oil and gas produced on the above described property." The evidence showed without contradiction that in January, 1923, Bowman deposited with the First National Bank of Whittier the four deeds, which were subsequently delivered to the plaintiffs, and also a number of other deeds, the name of the grantee, however, being omitted in each instance. All of these instruments were similar in form, except that some of them, other than the deeds obtained by the plaintiffs, contained a recital: "Subject to matters of record." The record further discloses that the lease granted to the oil company was executed by Bowman, Grohs, and various others, as joint lessors. No distinction was made in that lease between the interest of Bowman and that of any other lessor, except as to the amount of such interest. Thus it appears that Bowman held himself out as the owner of an undivided interest in the mineral rights in said property, or, in other words, the owner of an interest in the realty. It is not disputed that he undertook to convey undivided portions of the same interest to the plaintiffs. Having himself placed that construction upon his own rights in the property, he must expect to be bound thereby. Accordingly, we hold that under the deeds delivered to the plaintiffs, Bowman undertook to convey to them undivided interests in real property. He therefore became liable to them for any loss sustained by reason of any incumbrances suffered by him to be made against said property.

It is next argued that plaintiffs' knowledge of the condition of the title at the time of the purchase was superior to that of Bowman, and hence that the latter would not be liable for warranty of title. There are two answers to this contention. In the first place, the conveyances delivered to the plaintiffs, as already pointed out, constituted grants of interests in realty, and thereby carried with them the warranties of title defined by section 1113 of the Civil Code. The plaintiffs, as the grantees, were entitled to demand that Bowman deliver to them the kind of title called for by the deeds, and for any failure on his part in that respect he became liable to them in damages for the loss suffered thereby.

[3] In addition, the evidence disclosed that Bowman's agent, Grohs, represented to Mansfield that the property he was selling was a part of Bowman's landowner's interest in the oil and that it was free and clear. While Grohs also informed Mansfield that the latter could examine the records to verify this representation, and at that time stated he would refund the purchase price if such representation should turn out to be false, and although Mansfield did make an effort to ascertain from the recorder's office the condition of the title, he reported to Grohs that he had been unable to get the necessary information from the recorder. Mansfield further suggested that the transaction be handled through an escrow extending over a period of from 30 to 60 days. To this, however, Grohs replied that he could not wait that long, especially as there were others anxious to buy these interests. Mansfield explained to Grohs that he was a unit holder in an oil lease, the royalties in which were incumbered because the cost of the wells was first deducted, and that he wanted to be sure that this did not exist in the Bowman deal. On the promise of Grohs to refund the amount paid, if it should develop that Bowman's interest was not as represented, Mansfield paid the purchase price and accepted the deeds for Chandler and himself.

Meiling testified that he had had only one conversation with Grohs, and that the latter informed him that he had some landowner's royalty for sale. Grohs exhibited to him a grant deed, similar to the one ultimately delivered to him, and, after making inquiry at the First National Bank of Whittier as to Grohs' authority to act for Bowman, and upon being informed that he had such authority, Meiling paid the purchase price to Grohs. From the foregoing evidence it is clear that Bowman's agent deliberately misrepresented the condition of the title to the plaintiffs, and that because thereof they were induced to purchase the respective interests obtained by them. That the principal is liable for such misrepresentation is clear.

[4] Appellant further urges that the plaintiffs became estopped to assert any claim against Bowman, because they entered into an agreement with the oil company, whereby they acknowledged the oil company's right to deduct the sum of $1,500 against each 1 per cent. interest in the oil. By the terms of that agreement the parties thereto confirmed and ratified the lease made to the oil company on December 5, 1922, and stipulated that, upon the plaintiffs receiving the payments provided for therein, such payments were to be deemed payments in full for all claims and obligations arising out of the production of oil and the operation of the oil company on the leased premises. The moneys paid to the plaintiffs, referred to in said agreement, represented the full value of plaintiffs' percentage of the oil produced up to the date involved, less their pro rata of the cost of the well, said pro rata being calculated on the basis of $1,500 for each 1 per cent. interest in the oil.

It will be readily seen that by this agreement the plaintiffs did nothing more than admit that they had no claim against the oil company because the latter, as it was entitled to do under said lease, had deducted the cost of the well before accounting for the oil to those who had purchased interests therein. In executing that agreement, the plaintiffs did not surrender anything which either belonged to themselves or to Bowman. Whatever rights the latter had were neither prejudiced nor affected thereby. The agreement did nothing more than acknowledge the existence of the very conditions, which Bowman created, and upon which plaintiffs have asserted the right to maintain the present suits, and by reason of which they recovered their respective judgments herein.

[5] Appellant also claims that the plaintiffs became estopped to claim a breach of warranty by reason of their alleged laches. The argument is that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs did not rescind the transaction immediately upon discovering the defect in the title—in other words, because they did not offer to accept a return of the purchase price—they thereby forfeited all right to relief. It is elementary that a purchaser, on discovering a breach of warranty, is not compelled to accept a rescission, but may sue in damages for the loss he has sustained.

[6] The appellant's contention that Grohs had no authority to bind Bowman, as principal, requires but little consideration. The evidence disclosed that at the time the deeds were deposited with the bank, Bowman gave to the latter instructions, which in part recited: "The above deeds are executed by me in blank, and you are authorized to fill in the name of the grantees upon the order of Philip A. Grohs. It is understood that no money is to pass through this escrow; as the money will be handed outside of the escrow by Philip A. Grohs, I hereby authorize and appoint Philip A. Grohs my agent, with full power and authority to instruct you to fill in the names of the grantees in the deeds, which I herewith hand you." In view of the foregoing instructions and in the light of the admissions contained in the answer with respect to Grohs' authority, it is obvious that there is no merit to this contention.

[7] The last point advanced by appellant is to the effect that his demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of parties should have been sustained to the second amended complaint in the case of Chandler & Mansfield v. Bowman, and which, in the lower court, was designated as No. 156714. Our examination of the record discloses that this action was tried upon the original complaint and answer thereto, and that no demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of parties was interposed in that case. While it appears that a demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of parties was pleaded to the second amended complaint in the case of Chandler & Mansfield v. Bowman, designated in the lower court as action No. 136985, nevertheless, according to appellant, no judgment was filed in that action, and this court is not asked to review any of the rulings therein.

For the reasons herein set forth, the judgment is affirmed.

MATTSON v. MARYLAND CASUALTY CO.
(Civ. 6679.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 23, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 22, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 12, 1929.

1. Insurance ⇨646(6)—In action on policy for accidental death, burden of showing loss was produced through some excepted cause was on defendant.

In action on policy covering accidental death of insured, it was sufficient for plaintiff to prove the loss and that it occurred by reason of the peril insured against, and burden of showing that the loss was produced by some excepted cause was on defendant.

2. Insurance ⇨668(11)—Defendant's motion for nonsuit should be denied, where plaintiff's testimony establishes prima facie that loss occurred by reason of peril insured against.

Where testimony in support of allegations of complaint in action on policy shows prima facie that loss occurred by reason of peril insured against, defendant's motion for nonsuit should be denied.

3. Witnesses ⇨397—Previous statement of plaintiff's witness, in action on accident policy, that vehicle which insured drove was truck, was admissible for impeachment only.

In action for accidental death, under accident policy excepting injury sustained by insured while driving automobile truck, previous statement of plaintiff's witness, at time of inquest, that insured was driving light delivery truck, while admissible for purposes of impeachment, did not constitute evidence of character of vehicle.

4. Evidence ⇨383(10)—Photographs of vehicle driven by insured held not conclusive, in action on policy excluding injuries sustained while driving truck.

In action on policy for insured's accidental death, in which defense was that insured was injured while driving an automobile truck, within exception of policy excluding injury so sustained, photographs were not conclusive on question of character of vehicle.

5. Insurance ⇨668(11)—Whether vehicle driven by insured, constructed from chassis of model T Ford, was automobile truck, within policy excluding injury suffered while driving truck, held for jury.

In action for accidental death, under policy excluding liability for injuries sustained by insured while driving automobile truck, question whether vehicle used by insured at time of death in making deliveries, having chassis of model T Ford and licensed as commercial vehicle, was automobile truck within policy, held question for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Martin Mattson against the Maryland Casualty Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Charles L. James and C. K. Bonestell, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Ralph Wilson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An action to recover on a policy of insurance issued to Alfred E. Mattson by Maryland Casualty Company, a corporation, which provided that, in the event the insured should be accidentally killed while driving an automobile during the period of one year commencing November 1, 1926, insurer would pay to the plaintiff, who was the beneficiary named therein, the sum of $1,500. The policy provided, among other exceptions, that the same should not cover injuries, fatal or nonfatal, suffered by the insured while driving any automobile truck.

The complaint alleges that the insured was accidentally killed on November 9, 1926, while driving an automobile. The answer alleged as a defense that the insured, at the time he came to his death, was driving an automobile truck. The cause was tried before a jury, and at the close of plaintiff's case the defendant moved for an order directing a nonsuit, which was granted. The plaintiff has appealed therefrom, and from the judgment of dismissal entered thereon.

The evidence adduced by the plaintiff showed that the death of the insured resulted from a collision between the vehicle which he was driving and a telegraph pole; that the insured was employed by a concern engaged in manufacturing and repairing chairs, and at the time of his death was making deliveries, the vehicle being owned by his employers. The chassis of the vehicle was a 1920 Ford, model T, a construction used for light vehicles, such as Ford roadsters, sedans, and touring cars. Upon this chassis the employer of the deceased had constructed a seat with a body similar in shape to that of the ordinary delivery wagon or automobile. It appears that the vehicle was licensed as a commercial vehicle and was commonly used for delivery purposes. Two witnesses, both of whom were engaged in the automobile business (one a dealer in Ford products), testified that the vehicle was not a truck, and that the latter type differed in size, weight, model, and construction from the one in question. As against the foregoing, and for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of a brother of the deceased to similar effect, there was adduced by defendant the former's testimony, given at the time of the inquest upon the body of the insured; the witness there stating that the vehicle was a light delivery truck. There were also introduced in evidence by defendant two photographs of the vehicle taken after the collision. Defendant contends that the only conclusion reasonably supported by the evidence was that the vehicle operated by the insured was an automobile truck.

[1-5] It was sufficient for the plaintiff to prove the loss, and that it occurred by reason of the peril insured against, and the burden of showing that the loss was produced through some excepted cause was upon the defendant. 33 Corp. International Indemnity Co.*, 58 Cal. App. 614, 209 P. 83. The testimony in support of the allegations of the complaint was sufficient prima facie to have that result; and where this is true a motion for a nonsuit should be denied. Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443, 213 P. 45. The previous statement of plaintiff's witness, while admissible for purposes of impeachment, was incompetent for any other purpose, and did not constitute evidence of the truth of the fact so stated by him. Albert v. McKay, 174 Cal. 451, 163 P. 666. Nor were the photographs conclusive on the question of the character of the vehicle. While these, in connection with other evidence, tended to support defendant's contention, nevertheless the evidence on the question, which was conflicting, was sufficient to support a contrary conclusion, and the issue should have been submitted to the jury. Rabe v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 198 Cal. 291, 244 P. 1077.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. HELT. (Cr. 1830.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 6, 1929.

1. Intoxicating liquors ⇨236(4)—Evidence held to warrant jury in believing defendant was acting in own behalf or working for another who had interest in still (St. 1927, p. 497).

In prosecution for possession, ownership, and operation of a still, evidence held to warrant jury in believing that defendant was acting in his own behalf or as agent, servant, officer, or employee of person who was owner of, or had interest in, distilling apparatus in question, under St. 1927, p. 497.

2. Intoxicating liquors ⇨137—To constitute offense of possession, ownership, and operation of still, it is not necessary to show accused intended to claim ownership.

To establish offense of possession, ownership, and operation of still, it is not necessary to show that accused intended to claim ownership, since accused might lay no claim to ownership and yet be acting for real owner, in which event, if other elements of offense charged were established, case would be made against him.

3. Intoxicating liquors ⇨137—Requested instruction to acquit, if still was not on property over which defendant had exclusive control, was properly refused.

In prosecution for possession, ownership, and operation of still, requested instruction authorizing jury to acquit, if apparatus was not on property over which defendant had exclusive control, was properly refused, since instruction might have misled jury into believing that, in order to convict, it would be required to show defendant had exclusive control of property on which apparatus was located.

4. Criminal law ⇨829(1)—Refusal of requested instructions in liquor prosecution amply covered by instructions given, held not error.

In prosecution for possession, ownership, and operation of still, where requested instructions were included in instructions requiring prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt that defendant knew still was on premises and exercised control over it, and that possession denotes a distinct, personal conscious assertion of control, refusal of requested instructions was not error.

5. Intoxicating liquors ⇨239(2)—Requested instructions using word "defendants" held properly refused, where evidence as to ownership of premises where still was found involved third party.

In prosecution for possession, ownership, and operation of still, requested instructions using word "defendants" were properly refused, where evidence in regard to ownership of premises on which still was found so involved third party that minds of jury may have been confused to prejudice of prosecution, if instructions had been given.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Roy Helt was convicted of the possession, ownership, and operation of a still, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. G. Phillips, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was charged with possession, control, ownership, and operation of a distilling device, intended and used for the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor, and appeals from a judgment of conviction.

On the evening of January 28, 1929, two officers visited a house in the city of Los Angeles, and, while inspecting the premises, Roy Helt drove to the rear, parallel with the garage, in an automobile. In response to questions, he stated his name, denied that he resided there, or had ever been in the house, and said that he was returning the machine to the garage, that one John Marston was the owner, and had loaned it to him. Upon demand therefor he produced a folder containing three keys, one of which fitted the lock on the garage, and with another the officers unlocked the front door of the house. Immediately upon entering they noticed a strong odor of whisky, and could hear a still boiling upstairs. Upon ascending to the second floor, they found the still, and large quantities of mash and whisky of more than the legal content of alcohol, fit for beverage purposes. Helt was asked to shut off the still, but stated that he could not do so, and knew nothing about it. He was then taken to the first floor, where all three sat in darkness for some time, awaiting the arrival of Marston, when the telephone rang. One of the officers testified—and it was stipulated that the other would testify likewise—as follows: "Somebody on the other end of the phone said, 'Hello Roy, is that you?' I said, 'Yes.' He said, 'How many cans did it run?' And I was at a loss to make an answer and I hung up." Shortly thereafter it rang again, whereupon the defendant was instructed to answer, and to state that he could not shut the still off, to ask the other party to "come on over," and to say that no officers were there. The witness stood near the telephone where he heard the conversation, and further testified: "He asked the defendant, 'Hello Roy, is that you?' The defendant states, 'Yes.' 'What is the matter?' And he said, 'Nothing.' 'Well, why don't you come on home?' He said, 'I can't get this shut off', meaning the still. He said, 'Why can't you?' He said, 'I don't know; there is something the matter with it.' And they asked him whether there was the law there." Within five or ten minutes the telephone rang a third time, as to which the officer testified: "There was a lady on the other end of the phone talking and asking him, said: 'Hello, Roy, is that you?' He said, 'Yes.' She said, 'What is the matter?' He said, 'Nothing.' She said, 'Why don't you come home?' Then she asked if the law was there and who it was, and he denied the law being there." The defendant testified in his own behalf that he had been connected with an ice company for about five years, where he had met Marston, and that he had been to the house but once before. He admitted that the telephone rang as stated, denied that he knew any of the parties who had called, or that any one said "Hello Roy," or asked when he was coming home, how much liquor ran off, or that he shut off the still. He testified that in these conversations he told the parties to send Marston over, believing that they must have known him. When cross-examined concerning his testimony at the preliminary examination, it appeared that he had then sworn that Marston was one of the parties telephoning, and that the latter did tell him to "shut off the still and get out of there"; that "he said he saw lights there while they were there."

Upon the trial, appellant testified that the occasion of his previous one visit to the house in question was to see Marston. In his testimony at the preliminary he stated that he had merely driven past, and had seen Marston in the yard, but that there had been only one such occasion. This state of the record indicated that there had been two, and he then swore that he believed he had testified at the preliminary that he had been there twice before. He denied that anything had been said on the telephone about the lights. The officers' testimony reveals that appellant in driving parallel to the garage could not have driven in the doorway, and that he indicated no intention of so doing. Marston did not appear upon the night in question, nor did he materialize at the preliminary examination, or at the trial. Appellant knew nothing of his whereabouts, but testified that he had heard indirectly that Marston had gone to Salt Lake City. Finally, he refused to say that he might not have testified at the preliminary contrary to his testimony upon the trial, as disclosed by the record.

[1] It is contended that there is not only no evidence in support of the verdict and judgment, but that the evidence positively shows that appellant had no interest in the premises, automobile, distilling apparatus, or liquor, and that he had no knowledge thereof. However, as observed, his own statements on the telephone, to the officers, at the preliminary examination, and upon the trial, were in sharp conflict and many of them were contrary to the positive testimony of one officer and the stipulated testimony of the other. The position of the automobile, possession of the keys to the house and garage, telephone calls for some person of the same name, Roy, within a short time after his arrival, in spite of the fact that Marston's first name was John, and his conflicting statements indicating difficulty in accounting for the situation and circumstances, with no apparent effort to aid in bringing Marston to his rescue, all doubtless had much weight with the jury. It also appears, and is admitted, that he told the officers if they would go to his home Marston might come there. The jury were invested with the right and duty of choosing between the alternatives of accepting as true the testimony of the officers, which, unexplained, furnished strong evidence of guilt, or that of the defendant that he had no knowledge of the existence of the distillery. We cannot say as a matter of law that they were not justified in accepting straightforward, unimpeached evidence, and in rejecting a mass of contradictory statements upon important matters, none of which was corroborated in any way. The citation of authority as to the province of juries in such cases is unnecessary.

Appellant seeks to rely upon People v. Hurley, 60 Cal. 74, 44 Am. Rep. 55, wherein the defendant was charged with the theft of certain cattle merely because some hides were found in his barn. Four witnesses testified that Hurlley had killed his own cattle, and it appeared from the hides in controversy that they were nothing like the animals which had been stolen. Further, it was said: "If the property were in a locked-up room or box, of which he kept the key, it would be a fair ground for calling upon him for his defense." As to the defendant's showing in that case, it was said that there was "no conflict in the evidence upon any material point," and that the people had failed to make out a case. We think the evidence here such that the jury were not unwarranted in believing that appellant was "acting in his own behalf or as the agent, servant, officer or employee" of a person who was the owner of or had an interest in the distilling apparatus in question. St. 1927, c. 277, § 1.

[2-4] Lastly, it is urged that the trial court committed prejudicial error in refusing to give four requested instructions. The first of these is objectionable, in that it indicated that to establish the defendant's guilt it must be shown that he intended to claim ownership of the still. Of course, this is not the law. He might lay no claim to ownership, yet be acting for the real owner, in which event, if other elements of the offense charged were established, a complete case would be made against him. The third instruction refused also contains a statement which might well be interpreted by the jury as requiring proof of an element not legally required to convict. By it they would have been instructed that, if they should find certain facts, it would be incumbent upon them to acquit. One of these is that the apparatus "was not upon property over which the defendants had exclusive control." This statement, coupled with other facts indicated as necessary, might well have misled the jury into the belief that, in order to convict the defendant, it would be necessary to show that he had exclusive control of the property upon which the still was located. As to the second and fourth instructions under consideration, it is clear that each of them, as well as those parts in the first and third which were not objectionable as above explained, were amply covered by those given. In that behalf the jury were directed that the prosecution must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew that the still was on the premises and that he exercised some dominion or control over it, and that possession denotes a distinct, personal conscious assertion of control. Further, the jury were charged fully as to circumstantial evidence and the law of principal and accessory, and aider and abettor.

[5] Throughout these refused instructions the word "defendants" is used. Ordinarily this might be inconsequential and considered as an oversight, but in this instance, whether intentional or not, it is quite objectionable. Evidence was introduced to show, and the contention was made on behalf of the defendant, that one Marston was the owner of the premises, and that the latter exercised control over the property and apparatus in question. The evidence in that regard so involved Marston that, had the court adopted and given instructions repeatedly referring to "the defendants," it is obvious that the minds of the jury might have been confused in such matter as to have vitally prejudiced the prosecution.

The judgment is affirmed.

100 Cal. App. 325

O'BRIEN v. UNITED BANK & TRUST CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 6634.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 9, 1929.

1. Insane persons ⇐73—Agreement with incompetent under guardianship to open survivor bank account held void (Civ. Code, § 40).

Agreement made with incompetent after guardian was appointed for her to open purported survivor account with bank held void under Civ. Code, § 40, providing that, if one's incapacity has been judicially determined, he can make no contract until restoration to capacity, though judicial determination thereof was had pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1763-1767, which deal with persons who are insane or from any cause mentally incompetent, and Civ. Code, § 38, relating thereto, being limited to persons entirely without understanding, and section 39 applying to person of unsound mind but not entirely without understanding.

2. Insane persons ⇐2—Evidence held sufficient to show determination of incapacity of deceased was established.

Proof that petition was filed to obtain decree determining incapacity of deceased and appointing guardian for her, that hearing was had, and that she was present at hearing, that bond was duly given, and that application was denied to one applying to be appointed guardian, and that finding was made in favor of guardian appointed, held sufficient to establish incapacity of deceased.

3. Insane persons ⇐26—Rejecting proof as to whether decedent, adjudged incompetent at time survivor account was opened, was of sound mind, held not error.

In suit to recover deposit, court did not err in rejecting proof as to whether decedent, who had been adjudged incompetent, and had a guardian appointed at time survivor bank account between plaintiff and decedent was opened, was of sound mind or otherwise, since in collateral proceeding probate decree adjudging incompetency could not be attacked by that line of proof.

4. Trial $\Rightarrow$ 396(3)—Under allegations that from November 1, 1905, until death decedent was "incompetent," finding that from August 27, 1903, until death decedent was "incapacitated," held not erroneous.

Where it was alleged that from November 1, 1905, until death decedent, whose bank account was sought to be recovered by purported survivor in interest from bank and administratrix, was "incompetent," trial court's finding that from August 27, 1903, until her death decedent was "incapacitated" was not erroneous, two expressions being synonymous.

Repeals of laws by implication are not favored.

6. Statutes $\Rightarrow$ 224—Statutes relating to incapacity of incompetents to contract and statute relating to survivor bank accounts will be construed together (Civ. Code, §§ 38-40; Bank Act, § 15a).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Marie G. O'Brien against the United Bank & Trust Company of California, formerly known as the Sacramento Bank, and Cosette D. Allan, as administratrix of the estate of Margaret J. Allan, deceased, in which the last named defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for the last named defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for appellant.

El. B. Power and R. L. Chamberlain, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff sued the defendants to recover a bank deposit. The bank appeared and answered. The defendant Cosette D. Allan, as administratrix of the estate of Margaret J. Allan, appeared and answered and filed cross-complaint. The cross-complaint was answered, and on the issues so framed a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the defendant administratrix, and, from the judgment entered thereon, the plaintiff has appealed, and has brought up a bill of exceptions.

On the 27th day of August, 1903, Margaret

J. Allan was adjudged incompetent, and a guardian was appointed. She was never restored to competency, and her guardian continued to act down to the date of Mrs. Allan's death. Subsequent to August 27, 1903, the plaintiff and deceased opened a purported survivor account with the defendant bank. By the terms of that purported agreement, upon the death of either the survivor would own absolutely, and be entitled to, the whole of the residue of the deposit. Mrs. Allan died on the 12th day of July, 1919. Shortly thereafter the plaintiff made a demand on the bank, and her demand was refused. This defendant, as administratrix, also made a demand which was refused. Later this action was commenced.

[1] The plaintiff contends that the purported agreement under which the plaintiff and Margaret J. Allan opened and maintained the survivor account constituted a valid and enforceable contract. The defendant opposes that contention, claiming that the purported agreement was void, and she cites section 40 of the Civil Code: "After his incapacity has been judicially determined, a person of unsound mind can make no conveyance or other contract, nor delegate any power or waive any right, until his restoration to capacity." The plaintiff replies that the judicial determination was had pursuant to sections 1763-1767 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that those sections deal with persons who are "insane, or from any cause mentally incompetent," and that the Civil Code refers to "a person of unsound mind." The plaintiff argues that the Civil Code section, therefore, refers to a different class than the class mentioned in the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. We think the point cannot be sustained. By its terms section 38 of the Civil Code is limited to persons entirely without understanding. Section 39, by its terms, applies to a person of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding. And section 40 is unlimited, and applies to a person of unsound mind—whether entirely or partly without understanding. There is nothing on the face of the statutes to warrant the construction contended for. The rule declared in our Civil Code obtains in the most of the jurisdictions. 32 C. J. p. 731. We find no case in which it has been limited, as plaintiff contends.

[2] The plaintiff contends that the judicial determination of the incapacity of Margaret J. Allan alleged in the complaint was not established by the evidence. She cites and relies on Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233; Wickersham v. Johnston, 104 Cal. 407, 38 P. 89, 43 Am. St. Rep. 118. Where, as here, the attack on a judicial decree is collateral, the manner of proving the decree is not as contended by the plaintiff. Simmons v. Threshour, 118 Cal. 100, 50 P. 312; Page v. Garver, 5 Cal. App.

383, 385, 90 P. 481. The decree on which the defendant relied was burned April 18, 1906. However, the defendant introduced proof that to obtain the decree a petition was filed, that a hearing was had, and that the deceased was present at the hearing. She also introduced a copy in evidence. She also introduced proof that a bond was duly given, and she introduced that bond in evidence. After the decree was entered, this plaintiff made an application to be appointed guardian of the deceased. That application was denied. The trial court made a finding in favor of the defendant. We are unable to say that, when the foregoing facts, together with the presumptions applicable, are all considered, the proof was insufficient. 22 Cal. Jur. p. 640; 34 C. J. p. 540; Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Boyd, 155 Cal. 193, 197, 100 P. 239; Estate of Schandoney, 133 Cal. 387, 389, 390, 65 P. 877; Johnson v. Canty, 162 Cal. 391, 395, 123 P. 263.

[3] After the defendant had introduced her proof showing the entry of the decree finding the deceased incompetent, the plaintiff called witnesses and attempted to elicit proof as to whether the decedent, at the time the survivor account was opened, was of sound mind or otherwise. That proof was rejected. In rejecting the proof, the trial court did not err. In a collateral proceeding, the probate decree could not be attacked by that line of proof. 32 C. J. p. 646; Van Fleet's Collateral Attack, § 526; Hodgdon v. S. P. R. Co., 75 Cal. 642, 648, 17 P. 928; Fitzhugh v. Wilcox, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 235, 238.

It is claimed that the fourth and fifth findings of fact are really conclusions of law, and should have been so found. The point is not argued. Three citations are given, but no one of them supports the contention.

[4] It is next claimed that the court erred in failing to find on the issues raised by paragraph IV-a of the cross-complaint. The point rests on a misconception of the record. In her cross-complaint the defendant, among other things, alleged that from November 1, 1905, until her death the decedent was incompetent. The trial court's finding, among other things, was that from August 27, 1903, until her death the decedent was incapacitated. The two expressions are synonymous. Cent. Dict. The point cannot be sustained.

[5, 6] Finally the plaintiff asserts that the agreement executed by the plaintiff and Margaret J. Allan conclusively established the right of plaintiff as survivor to recover the amount credited to the cotenancy account. She cites and relies on section 15a of the Bank Act (St. 1921, p. 1367). There is nothing in the statute showing that the Legislature was addressing itself to agreements attempted to be executed by insane or incompetent persons. Repeals by implication are not favored, and, nothing to the contrary appearing, sections 38, 39, and 40 of the Civil Code will be construed together with section 15a of the Bank Act, and force and effect will be given to the provisions of each.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

SAM WONG v. STUYVESANT INS. CO.*
(Civ. 6629.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 25, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 24, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 23, 1929.

1. Insurance ⇨115(4)—Lessee had insurable interest in building erected on leased premises, as he was owner under provision of lease.

Where lease provided that improvements erected on premises by lessee might be removed at end of term, if all rent due was paid and lessee erected building and, having paid all rent, remained in possession after expiration of lease, but without formal renewal, lessee as owner had an insurable interest in building.

2. Insurance ⇨646(5)—Insurer, insuring property on leased premises and accepting premium without misrepresentations by insured, is presumed to have insured property with knowledge of title (St. 1909, pp. 404, 406).

Where lessee had insurable interest in property erected on leased property, and without fraud and in good faith applied for insurance on same and made no actual misrepresentations or concealment of his interest therein, and insurance company made no inquiry concerning same and issued a policy in standard form required by St. 1909, pp. 404, 406, and accepted and retained premium, company was presumed to have knowledge of condition of title, and to have insured property with such knowledge, and to have waived statutory provision requiring sole and unconditional ownership by insured; statute not changing the law relating to waiver and estoppel.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; H. C. Lucas, Judge.

Action by Sam Wong against The Stuyvesant Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Miller & Thornton, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sans & Hudson, of Watsonville, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action to recover upon an insurance policy, issued by defendant company, for a fire loss. The facts show that one L. Ollason was the owner of the land upon which the building destroyed was situated. Some time prior to the year 1908 he had leased the land to a Chinaman, who erected thereon an apple-evaporating plant. The lease was subsequently assigned and the business transferred to one Wong Wah, under the trade-name of Sang Yuen Company; Wong being the sole owner thereof. The assignment carried the building which had been constructed on the premises. On June 20, 1908, Ollason entered into a written agreement with Wong Wah, whereby he leased the premises for a term to expire June 1, 1914; said lease being taken in the name of Sang Yuen Company. The lease provided, among other things, that any improvement erected on the premises by the lessee might be removed at the end of the term provided that all rent due under the lease was paid in full. The rents were paid, and after the expiration of the lease no formal renewal was had, the lessee remaining in possession under the same terms and conditions as provided for under the original lease. Upon acquiring the property Wong Wah had insured the evaporating plant during the period he owned the same. In the year 1918, about five years prior to his death, Wong Wah, being aged, retired and turned his business, including his leasehold interest, over to his son, Sam Wong, plaintiff herein. The son continued in possession of the property, kept the building insured, and paid the premiums on the policies. On the 2d day of October, 1926, plaintiff insured the building with defendant company. No written application for the insurance was ever made by the insured, and the policy was issued by defendant company on application of its agent. While this policy of insurance was in effect, the building was destroyed by fire. Immediately after its destruction, and before any proof of loss or claim could be made upon defendant company, it instructed its agent to return the premium to defendant, as it had elected to refuse to pay the policy on the ground that the building was not owned by the insured, and on the further ground that the building was situate on leased property. The policy was in the standard form required by our statute (St. 1909, pp. 404, 406), which statutory form contains the following provisions: "Unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, this entire policy shall be void, * * * (B) if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership, or (C) if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple." Upon refusal of the company to pay, plaintiff brought this action.

[1, 2] At the trial defendant relied upon the conditions contained in the statutory policy and also certain provisions of the Civil Code of like import (sections 2551, 2587, 2588). Plaintiff contended that the building was his property and that the owner of the land had no interest or title therein. Plaintiff was corroborated by the owner of the land in this contention. The trial court found plaintiff to be the owner of the building. It further found that the allegations contained in defendant's answer that it discovered for the first time, immediately after the fire, that plaintiff was not the owner of the property were untrue. Additional findings were to the effect that at the time the policy of insurance was issued and delivered by defendant to plaintiff the said plaintiff did not sign any written application therefor; that the insurance was solicited by the local agent of defendant company, and there was no discussion between plaintiff and the said agent, or between plaintiff and any other person, regarding the ownership of the property on which the destroyed building was situate; that the agent did not inquire of plaintiff regarding the ownership of the land; that the policy was issued at the request of the agent, and that plaintiff made no misrepresentations or concealment of any fact in this particular. As conclusions of law from the foregoing facts, the court found that defendant had waived the provisions in said policy requiring plaintiff to present proof of loss, and had likewise waived the provision that the entire policy should be void if the subject of the insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple; that defendant was estopped from relying upon said provision in the policy. Judgment followed in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,000, the amount of the policy and costs.

Appellant appeals, and it contends that the insured was not the owner of the building nor did he have any interest therein. In support of this contention it is argued that, after the expiration of the original lease, the building not having been removed, it became a part of the land, and the mere fact that the tenant remained over as tenant at will did not alter or change the situation, as a new lease was thereby created, and, no agreement having been entered into with reference to the removal of the building under this new lease, it became the property of the owner of the land, and plaintiff had no title or interest therein.

The contention is without merit. The case does not present a situation of a controversy between the owner of the land and his tenant. Here the ownership of the building was conclusively established to be in the plaintiff. The landlord so testified, and he disclaimed any right, title, or interest therein. Moreover defendant is in no position to set up as a defense lack of ownership or that the insured did not own the ground on which the building was situate, as it waived objection to the form of the policy and is estopped from denying liability thereunder by issuing the policy and accepting the premiums therefor without any written application having been made by the insured, and also without any discussion having been had relative to either title to the buildings or the title to the property on which the same was situate. Plaintiff herein, as owner, had an insurable interest in the building, he being in possession and operating the same as a dryer. 14 Cal. Jur. p. 465; 14 R. C. L. 915.

Prior to the adoption of the standard form of policy in this state it was held that, where the assured had an insurable interest in property, and without fraud in good faith applied for insurance upon the same, and made no actual misrepresentation or concealment of his interest therein, and the insurance company made no inquiry concerning his interest, and issued a policy to him, and accepted and retained the premium, the company must have been presumed to have knowledge of the condition of the title, and to have assured the property with such knowledge. Raulet v. Northwestern, etc., Ins. Co., 157 Cal. 213-228, 107 P. 292; 14 R. C. L. pp. 926-932. After the adoption of the standard form of policy, the law of waiver and estoppel remained the same as before upon this subject. Kavanaugh v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co., 185 Cal. 307, 315, 197 P. 99; 14 R. C. L. p. 932.

It follows that the court below rightfully determined that defendant had waived the provisions in question contained in the policy. The judgment is affirmed.

DANIELSON v. DANIELSON. (Civ. 6229.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 30, 1929.

1. Divorce ⇨37(3)—One who intends bringing cohabitation between husband and wife to an end commits desertion, entitling other to divorce.

One who intends bringing cohabitation between husband and wife to an end commits desertion entitling other to divorce, and it is immaterial which of married parties leaves marital home.

2. Divorce ⇨133(3)—Evidence held to establish wife's wilful refusal to live with husband without cause, constituting desertion, entitling husband to divorce.

In action for divorce, evidence held to show that wife wilfully and without cause refused to live with husband against his will and without his consent, constituting desertion, entitling husband to divorce.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action for divorce by Carrie Danielson against Charles B. Danielson, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint for divorce on the ground of desertion. Judgment for defendant on the cross-complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George C. Watson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem. This is an action for divorce. The trial court granted the husband, who is the defendant herein, a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion. Plaintiff appeals, claiming that the evidence is insufficient to sustain such decree.

The gist of plaintiff's contention is that the finding of desertion rests wholly upon her alleged refusal to reside in the home selected by the defendant. As to such finding, it is insisted that there is no evidence showing that the defendant had actually selected some particular place as the home, or that he had offered a definite home to her and requested her to follow him, or that such home was a reasonable place of abode.

Appellant argues that, in the absence of such a showing, she could not be found guilty of desertion. The case of Bibb v. Bibb, 39 Cal. App. 406, 179 P. 214, is cited in support of appellant's position.

The answer to appellant's contention lies in the fact that neither the pleadings nor the decree herein restrict the case to so narrow an issue. The cross-complaint upon which the decree was granted, in addition to setting forth the necessary statistical facts, alleges in paragraph V: "That on or about the 21st day of February, 1924, the cross-defendant, Carrie Danielson, disregarding the solemnity of her marriage vow, wilfully and without cause, deserted and abandoned the cross-complainant, and ever since has, and still continues to, so wilfully and without cause desert and abandon said cross-complainant, and to live separate and apart from him, without any sufficient cause or any reason, and against his will and without his consent." The trial court found that the allegations of the complaint were not true, and that the allegations of the cross-complaint were true.

The record on this appeal was prepared under what is known as the alternative method. Although the reporter's transcript contains many pages of testimony relating to the issue of desertion, only the most meager excerpts of the evidence pertaining to the same are to be found in appellant's brief.

Our examination of the record discloses testimony tending to prove the following facts: Defendant was in the oil business, and for many years maintained his headquarters at Bakersfield. For the period of about eight years prior to 1920 plaintiff had resided with her husband in Bakersfield during the winter months. Thereafter she resided in Los Angeles, where defendant visited her from time to time. In February, 1924, the husband, being dissatisfied with this arrangement, had a conversation with his wife wherein he requested her to make her home with him in Bakersfield. Plaintiff declined to do so, claiming that she was in poor health and that it would be injurious for her to move to Bakersfield. In this same conversation, according to the defendant, his wife informed him that she did not want him as a husband, that there were other people who meant more to her. On the evening following this conversation, the husband discovered his wife at a public dance hall, accompanied by a man in no way related to her and who was a stranger to the husband. Shortly prior to this incident the wife collected $1,150 in settlement of personal injuries which she had sustained several months previously, and appropriated this entire sum to her own use.

Very soon after the above-mentioned conversation occurred, defendant returned to Bakersfield and rented, for a period of two weeks, one-half of, or one side of, a dwelling-house, located on Nineteenth street, near A street, in that city. Thereupon, under date of February 25, 1924, he wrote to his wife, stating, in substance, that it would be better for her to come to Bakersfield, and that they should take rooms and go to housekeeping, as he did not wish to be separated from her.

To this the wife replied in writing, stating that defendant knew her health would not permit her to live in Bakersfield, and that he should never again ask her to live in a place that would kill her. The letter makes some further comments about her health, and requests the defendant to send her some money, although, as previously indicated, she had secured $1,150 only a few days prior thereto in settlement of her personal injury claim.

Shortly thereafter the husband came to Los Angeles for the purpose of discussing with his wife the conditions existing between them. Upon arriving at the apartment where his wife had resided for a considerable period, defendant learned that she had moved away, without leaving any information as to new address. In fact, plaintiff took pains to keep her whereabouts unknown to her husband, and in that connection admonished her married daughter, who lived in an adjoining suburb, not to tell her father where she had moved. Thereupon defendant returned to Bakersfield and wrote to his wife, in care of this married daughter, requesting her to meet him and the married daughter at a certain hotel in Los Angeles, on a date specified, for the purpose of talking things over. This letter was delivered to the plaintiff, but the latter informed her son-in-law that she would not keep the appointment requested. The husband, also the married daughter and son-in-law, waited for plaintiff at the hotel for several hours, but she failed to appear.

Plaintiff's son-in-law testified that she told him that she did not want anything to do with her husband, and would not live with him under any circumstances whatsoever. On the Thanksgiving preceding the separation of the parties, the plaintiff had dinner with her married daughter and son-in-law, and on the same evening she went to a dance with the man in whose company her husband saw her in February, 1924. The son-in-law also testified that he had visited plaintiff more than a dozen times during a period of about a year following the separation, and that at no time during that period was she confined to her bed or even ill.

Plaintiff did not deny that she had been going out to dances, but insisted that her doctor had prescribed dancing as a means of recovering her health. However, no medical testimony was offered in support of this contention. Likewise her daughter testified that, while the family lived in Bakersfield, her mother got along pretty well. So far as the evidence discloses, the plaintiff's home, while she resided in Los Angeles, consisted simply of an apartment in one of the hotels of that city and for which she paid a rental of about $55 per month.

These facts readily distinguish the action at bar from the case of Bibb v. Bibb, 39 Cal. App. 406, 179 P. 214, 216. While the court there holds that, in order to prove desertion on the ground of the refusal of the wife to follow the husband to a new home, the evidence must show that he has chosen a particular abode and offered it to her, and must further show that it was a reasonable place for the family abode, that decision must be read in the light of the peculiar facts upon which it rested. As pointed out in the opinion rendered in the Bibb Case, for an indeterminate but considerable time immediately subsequent to the wife's refusal to follow her husband to a suburb of the city in which she was then residing, the parties continued their customary matrimonial cohabitation as man and wife at the old abode. "By this equivocal conduct," said the court in the concluding sentence of its opinion, "he failed to present to her, clearly and definitely, the alternative of a compliance with his will to move to Hollywood, or be deemed guilty of wilful desertion." There was no such conduct or acquiescence on the part of the husband in the present suit.

The case of Vosburg v. Vosburg, 136 Cal. 195, 68 P. 694, cited in the Bibb Case as the authority for the general rule announced in the latter decision, also arose out of a very different state of facts. In the former case the evidence showed that the parties had lived for years in a suitable home belonging to the wife, among her friends, and that the husband's choice of a different home was not made in good faith, and that his offer of a home elsewhere was not made until, as the court expressed it, "long after the lapse of time which ripened his desertion of her into a cause of action for divorce."

[1] Bishop, in the second volume of his work on Marriage and Divorce, at page 597, says: "It is immaterial which of the married parties leave the marital home, the one who intends bringing the cohabitation to an end commits the desertion."

In Hudson v. Hudson, 59 Fla. 529, 532, 51 So. 857, 21 Ann. Cas. 278, at page 279, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614, 616, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 143, the Supreme Court of Florida, in applying the foregoing doctrine, said: "The party who drives the other away is the deserter, and a wife may drive her husband away."

[2] So, in the instant case it can be said that the wife drove her husband away. The evidence leaves little, if any, doubt that the wife had thrown off everything like allegiance and duty to her husband. In a sense, it might be said that the wife forced the separation because the husband would not permit her to usurp his rights. In the light of the testimony before it, the trial court might very well have concluded that the excuse offered by the wife for not residing with her husband in Bakersfield, namely, her alleged poor health, was a mere subterfuge. When in the spring of 1924 she left the apartment which up to that time had been her place of abode, and deliberately concealed her new address from her husband, the wife demonstrated in unmistakable fashion that she was determined to assert her complete emancipation and independence of her husband. His efforts to induce her to reside with him following her secret change of residence only resulted in strengthening her determination to separate from him. The evidence establishes a clear case of desertion on her part.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HANEY. (Cr. 1083.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 7, 1929.

1. Intoxicating liquors ⚡216—Information charging defendant sold minor intoxicating liquor stated offense without alleging liquor contained one-half of 1 per cent. alcohol and was fit for beverage; "intoxicating liquor."

Information charging that defendant sold intoxicating liquor to minor stated facts sufficient to constitute offense, though not alleging that liquor contained one-half of 1 per cent. or more of alcohol and was fit for beverage purposes, in view of section 1, tit. 2, National Prohibition Act (27 USCA § 4), defining "intoxicating liquors," and term "intoxicating liquor" being understood to include any liquor intended for beverage that will produce intoxication.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Intoxicating Liquor.]

2. Intoxicating liquors ⚡215—Information charging sale of intoxicating liquor to minor charged offense without alleging delivery; "sale" including delivery.

Information charging that defendant unlawfully and knowingly sold intoxicating liquors to minor stated facts sufficient to constitute an offense, though not alleging liquor was delivered to minor, since in common parlance retail "sale" of intoxicating liquor includes delivery thereof to bearer.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Sale.]

3. Indictment and information ⚡71—Allegation that sale of intoxicating liquor to minor would tend to make him delinquent held sufficiently certain (Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subds. 8, 11).

Allegations that sale of intoxicating liquor to minor would cause him to come within Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subds. 8, 11 (St. 1915, p. 1225), held made with sufficient certainty.

4. Criminal law ⚡603(9)—Denying continuance of liquor prosecution on date of trial was not abuse of discretion, affidavits not indicating witness could be secured.

In prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor to minor, denying motion when case was called for trial for continuance on ground of absence of material witness held not abuse of discretion, where no reason was given by defendant for waiting until case was called for trial to move for continuance, and affidavits to support motion did not indicate to court that witness could ever be secured.

5. Criminal law ⚡1172(1)—Instruction that sale of intoxicating liquors to minor need not have certain tendency to cause delinquency held not prejudicial (Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subds. 8, 11).

In prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors to minor, having tendency to cause and encourage him to come under provisions of Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subds. 8, 11 (St. 1915, p. 1225), instruction that it is not necessary that defendant's acts should have absolute certain tendency to cause delinquency held not prejudicial, where minor was 17 years of age, and selling and furnishing of bootleg whisky to him would manifestly have tendency to bring him under Juvenile Court Law.

6. Criminal law ⚡1160—Weight of evidence in prosecution for selling minor intoxicating liquors held for jury and trial court (Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subds. 8, 11).

Where there was ample evidence in prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors to minor, having tendency to cause him to come under provisions of Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subds. 8, 11 (St. 1915, p. 1225), to support verdict and judgment of conviction, weight thereof was for jury and trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Ray Haney was convicted of selling intoxicating liquor to a minor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. T. Sharp, of Alturas, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The information herein charges: "That * * * the said Ray Haney did, willfully, unlawfully and knowingly sell intoxicating liquor to one Kelton Blurton, which said act then and there tended to cause and encourage said Kelton Blurton to come under the provisions of subdivision 8 and subdivision 11 of section 1 of the Juvenile Court Law; and then and there tended to cause and encourage said Kelton Blurton to become a person who habitually uses intoxicating liquors and tended to cause and encourage said Kelton Blurton to become one who would lead an idle and dissolute life; that said Kelton Blurton was then and there a minor under the age of twenty-one years."

The defendant demurred to the information on the grounds that it "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense" and that it contains "matters which if true would constitute a legal defense." The second ground may be dismissed from consideration as manifestly without merit. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant was found guilty. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

[1] Appellant contends that the information fails to state facts sufficient to constitute an offense because it does not allege that the liquor in question contained one-half of 1 per cent. or more of alcohol, that the liquor was fit for beverage purposes, or that it was delivered to the minor. Section 1 of title 2 of the National Prohibition Act (27 USCA § 4) defines the phrase "intoxicating liquor" as including all liquors "containing one-half of 1 per centum or more of alcohol by volume which are fit for use for beverage purposes." If that act governs, as appellant seems to contend, it was unnecessary to set forth in the information the statutory definition of the term "intoxicating liquor" used therein. People v. Norcross, 71 Cal. App. 2, 6, 234 P. 438. "In the absence of a statutory definition, the term 'intoxicating liquor' is understood to include any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of being so used which contains such a proportion of alcohol that it will produce intoxication when imbibed in such quantities as it is practically possible for a man to drink." 33 C. J. 491. It thus appears that appellant's first two objections to the information are without merit.

[2] The word "sale" is not of "fixed and invariable meaning." W. F. Boardman Co. v. Petch, 186 Cal. 476, 482, 199 P. 1047, 1050. It is sometimes so used as to include delivery. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Sims, 191 U. S. 441, 24 S. Ct. 151, 48 L. Ed. 254. In common parlance, a retail sale of intoxicating liquor includes the delivery thereof to the buyer. The minor was permitted, without objection, to testify that the liquor was delivered to him by the defendant and that it was in fact used for beverage purposes and was intoxicating. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the defendant was misled or in any manner prejudiced by the alleged defects in the information.

[3] The tendency of the defendant's alleged act to cause the minor to come under the provisions of the Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1225) is alleged with sufficient certainty. People v. Hemma (Cal. App.) 270 P. 457; People v. Perfetti, 88 Cal. App. 609, 264 P. 318; People v. Cohen, 62 Cal. App. 521, 217 P. 78.

[4] March 19, 1929, the case was set to be tried commencing April 1. When the case was called for trial on the latter date, the defendant moved for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a material witness, Harvey White. At the preliminary examination, the minor testified that White was present at the delivery of the liquor. Defendant's affidavits used on the motion for a continuance stated that White had said that he was not so present. The sheriff made affidavit that White had said that he knew of the alleged sale of the liquor by the defendant to the minor. As soon as the case was set for trial, counsel for the defendant placed a subpoena in the hands of the sheriff for service on White. The sheriff was unable to locate White, and on March 22 he sent a subpoena to the sheriff of Tehama county for service on him. March 26 the sheriff of the latter county returned the subpoena, stating: "I have made diligent search, and am unable to find him (White), or any one who knows of him in this county." The sheriff of Modoc county then telephoned the sheriff of Shasta county, and the district attorney made a trip to Redding in an endeavor to locate White, but without success. It appears that the district attorney instructed the sheriff to secure the attendance of White "if at all possible." No reason was given by counsel for defendant for waiting until the case was called for trial to move for a continuance. As stated by the trial court in denying the motion, "there is nothing in these affidavits to indicate to the court that this man Harvey White can ever be secured as a witness." This is a sufficient reason for the denial of the motion. Ford v. Superior Court, 17 Cal. App. 1, 10, 118 P. 96. Under all the circumstances, it cannot be held that the denial of the motion was an abuse of discretion.

Appellant complains of certain instructions given by the court. All of them appear to be accurate statements of the law, except the italicized part of the following: "It is not necessary that the acts of the defendant should be the sole cause of a minor's delinquency in order that such defendant may be guilty of contributing to the delinquency of the minor; it is sufficient if such acts tend to contribute thereto. Nor is it necessary that they should have an absolutely certain or unmistakable tendency to cause delinquency."

[5] It may be conceded that, as an instruction to a jury, the italicized words tend to confuse and the use thereof should be avoided, but, under the facts of this case, the defendant was not prejudiced thereby. The minor was of the age of but 17 years. The selling and furnishing of bootleg whisky to a minor of that age so manifestly tends to cause him to come within the alleged provisions of the Juvenile Court Law that doubtless the jury would have so found without the giving of the objectionable part of the instruction. Other instructions, given or refused, have been carefully examined, and no error appears in the action of the court in relation thereto.

[6] Appellant argues the weight of the evidence, but, there being ample evidence to support the verdict and judgment, the weight thereof was for the jury and the trial court. Complaint is made of certain rulings of the court in admitting and rejecting evidence, and the district attorney is charged with misconduct in his argument to the jury. None of these contentions appear to have merit, and it would serve no useful purpose to enumerate and discuss them specifically.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LEAVITT. (Cr. 1798.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 22, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 520(2)—Confession held inadmissible under evidence indicating officer told defendant it would be much better for him to make confession.

In prosecution for burglary, testimony concerning purported confession of guilt held inadmissible, under evidence tending to show that police officer told defendant it would be much better for him to make confession.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 531(1)—Prosecution must show that confession is voluntary, not induced by promise or threat.

Burden is on prosecution to show that confession sought to be proved in criminal case was voluntary act of defendant, not induced by promise or threat.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 511(2)—Competent testimony connecting defendant with crime, in addition to that of accomplice, is necessary to convict.

In prosecution for burglary, defendant cannot be convicted, in absence of competent evidence, in addition to that of accomplice, tending to connect defendant with commission of crime.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1169(12)—Admission of confession, not shown to have been voluntary, held prejudicial, in view of evidence supporting conviction.

Admission of confession, not shown to have been voluntarily made, was prejudicial error in prosecution for burglary, where other evidence, except that of accomplice, was insufficient to support conviction.

Appeal from the Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Ralph A. Leavitt was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals. Reversed.

C. Morton Booth, of Los Angeles, and Proctor K. Perkins, of Beverly Hills, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant was convicted on five counts, contained in two informations. In each instance the conviction is of burglary in the second degree.

The corpus delicti of each crime was fully established. The failure of the court, on certain occasions during the trial, to admonish the jury as required by section 1122 of the Penal Code, was an irregularity, but not shown to have been prejudicial to any right of the defendant.

The admission in evidence of the photograph, People's Exhibit 8, does not appear to have had any important bearing on the merits, even if, as claimed, it should not have been admitted.

[1, 2] The principal grounds of appeal are that the court erred in admitting in evidence the testimony of one Liebhart, a police officer, concerning a purported confession of guilt, made to him by appellant; that, without this evidence of a confession, there is no evidence tending to connect appellant with the commission of any of the alleged burglaries, except the testimony of an accomplice, one Curryer; that for these reasons, if the confession be excluded, the evidence is insufficient to support the verdicts.

Several witnesses testified to the effect that Liebhart, prior to obtaining the confession told the defendant that it would "be much better for him" to make a confession. Liebhart, when examined about the same matter, was asked directly if he made the said statement to the defendant. When pressed for an answer, he finally said: "I wouldn't say positive whether I made it or not. It is possible." On the foregoing facts, we are satisfied that the court erred in admitting in evidence the said confession. In People v. Barrie, 49 Cal. 342, prior to obtaining a confession from the defendant, it appeared that the sheriff, or his deputy, or some one in their presence, said to the defendant: "It will be better for you to make a full disclosure." The Supreme Court said that "the rule is without exception that such a promise made by one in authority will exclude a confession." The burden is on the prosecution to show that a confession, sought to be proved in a criminal case, was the voluntary act of the defendant, not induced by promise or threat. We have read some of the later cases, where statements rather close to those made in this case have not been held sufficient to require the court to reject evidence of confessions. People v. Haney, 46 Cal. App. 317, at pages 322, 323, 189 P. 338; People v. Castello, 194 Cal. 595, 599, 229 P. 855. But we are satisfied that in the present case no proper exception to the rule is present.

[3, 4] Without the evidence of a confession made by the defendant, he could not have been convicted, unless there was yet other evidence, in addition to that of the accomplice, tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crimes charged. That additional evidence, while possibly it is technically sufficient to support the verdicts, is not such as to clear the case from doubt as to what verdict should have been rendered. It follows that the error of the court, in admitting in evidence the purported confession, was a prejudicial error, which reasonably may have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgments and order are reversed.

NORTHWESTERN PAC. R. CO. v. CURRIE.*
(Civ. 6633.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 29, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Counties ⇨144—County is liable for damages from construction work injuring adjacent property, where contractor properly performed it according to plans and specifications.

Where county contracts for doing of construction work according to plans and specifications theretofore adopted, and contractor performs work with proper care and skill, and in conformity with plans and specifications, but work thus planned and specified results in injury to adjacent property, liability, if there is any, for payment of damages, is on county under its obligation to compensate damages resulting from exercise of its governmental power.

2. Counties ⇨144—County's contractor departing from contract, plans, or specifications, or performing work improperly, carelessly, or negligently, injuring adjacent property, is responsible.

Where contractor departs from contract for construction work for county according to plans and specifications, or goes beyond them, or performs work planned and specified in an improper, careless, or negligent manner, which results in injury to adjacent property, contractor is responsible in damages for tort committed.

3. Highways ⇨115—Complaint founded on contractor's negligent acts in performing highway construction work outside work contract with county required, injuring plaintiff's property, stated cause of action.

Where allegations of complaint showed that plaintiff's cause of action was founded on alleged negligent acts committed by defendant as contractor in performing certain highway construction work for county outside of work required to be done under terms of contract, which injured property of plaintiff, cause of action was stated against contractor.

4. Trial ⇨396(3)—Finding that contractor's work for county conformed to contract would not entitle him to judgment, where complaint alleged unnecessary negligent acts injuring plaintiff's property.

Where allegations of complaint were to effect that specific acts and negligence causing injury to plaintiff's property were not such as defendant contractor was required to perform under highway construction contract with county, finding that work was performed in conformity with contract and plans and specifications would not entitle defendant contractor to judgment.

5. Trial ⇨404(1)—Findings must be liberally construed to support judgment.

Findings are to be liberally construed in support of judgment, and read and considered together and reconciled so as to prevent conflict on material points.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Action by the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company against James Currie. Judgment adverse to defendant, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Coleberd, of South San Francisco, for appellant.

Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, of San Francisco (Christopher M. Jenks, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Defendant appeals from an adverse judgment in the sum of $481.88, in an action to recover damages for the alleged negligent injury to plaintiff's right of way fence, committed by defendant while performing certain highway construction work under a written contract with the county of Marin. The appeal is taken on the judgment roll alone, and the points urged for reversal are that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the findings do not support the judgment. As will hereinafter appear, both points are based upon the single legal contention that the liability for the injury, if any there was, was upon the county of Marin and not the defendant as contractor.

In paragraph II of the complaint it was alleged, in substance, that defendant, "while purporting to act under and pursuant to a contract theretofore entered into" by him with the county of Marin, constructed certain improvements, fills, and paving upon the highway adjacent to and parallel with plaintiff's right of way, along which plaintiff maintained a fence. And in paragraph III of the complaint it was alleged that in performing said construction work defendant willfully and negligently piled dirt and other materials against plaintiff's fence, and did thereupon and thereafter willfully and negligently remove, bend, and otherwise injure said fence to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $481.88.

Besides denying many of the allegations of the complaint, the answer sets up a separate defense (paragraph V) alleging that "the improvement work and fills mentioned in Paragraph II of plaintiff's complaint and all work performed by plaintiff upon the road or highway mentioned in plaintiff's complaint were done and performed under and pursuant to that certain contract entered into between the County of Marin, State of California, and said defendant, a copy of which contract is marked 'Exhibit A' annexed hereto and made a part hereof, and that all said work was performed under the direction and to the satisfaction of the County Surveyor of said County of Marin." In this connection the contract provided that defendant should furnish all the labor and materials, and perform the work therein mentioned "in a good and workmanlike manner, under the direction and to the satisfaction of the County Surveyor of said County of Marin * * * and in accordance with and located at the places and in the manner specified in the plans and specifications * * * which are made a part of this contract."

The trial court found as follows: "That all the allegations of the complaint herein are true and that all the denials in the answer are untrue. That all the allegations contained in paragraph V of said answer are true."

[1,2] Where a county contracts for the doing of construction work according to plans and specifications theretofore adopted, and the contractor performs the work with proper care and skill, and in conformity with the plans and specifications, but the work thus planned and specified results in an injury to adjacent property, the liability, if any there is, for the payment of damages, is upon the county under its obligation to compensate the damages resulting from the exercise of its governmental power (Elliott v. County of Los Angeles, 183 Cal. 472, 191 P. 899; De Baker v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 106 Cal. 257, 39 P. 610, 46 Am. St. Rep. 237); but, where the contractor departs from the contract, plans, or specifications, or goes beyond them, or performs the work planned and specified in an improper, careless, or negligent manner, which results in injury to adjacent property, then he is responsible in damages for the tort he has committed (Shaw v. Crocker, 42 Cal. 435; Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 6 P. 317, 56 Am. Rep. 109; Eachus v. Los Angeles, 130 Cal. 492, 62 P. 829, 80 Am. St. Rep. 147; Norton v. Ransome-Crummey Co., 173 Cal. 343, 159 P. 1177; Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 P. 50).

[3] A fair analysis of the allegations of the complaint herein shows that plaintiff's cause of action is founded upon alleged negligent acts committed by defendant outside of the work required to be done under the terms of the contract, and therefore, under the authorities cited, a cause of action is stated against the contractor.

[4,5] Defendant's point that the findings do not support the judgment is based upon the contention that in finding the allegations of paragraph V of the answer to be true the trial court in effect found that the work which defendant was required to do under the contract was performed by him in conformity therewith and with the plans and specifications, and that therefore the county and not the defendant as contractor is liable. But there is no allegation in paragraph V of the answer to that effect; and, even though there was, and the court found the same to be true, such finding would not have entitled defendant to judgment, because, as pointed out, the allegations of the complaint are to the effect that the specific acts of negligence causing the injury were not such as defendant was required to perform under the contract. The trial court found those allegations to be true, and there is nothing before us to show to the contrary because the plans and specifications were not made part of the record.

As held in Haight v. Haight, 151 Cal. 90, 90 P. 197, "we must continually bear in mind the well-settled rule that findings are to be liberally construed in support of a judgment, that all of the findings are to be read and considered together and, if possible, are to be reconciled so as to prevent any conflict on the material points; and that unless the conflict is clear and the findings incapable of being harmoniously construed, a judgment will not be reversed on the ground of a conflict in the findings." Citing cases.

Applying the foregoing rules to the present situation, we find no ground for reversal. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PAGE.

Appeal of NATIONAL SURETY CO.

(Civ. 6631.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 5, 1929.

1. Bail $\S$ 55—Penal Code sections applicable and in force when bail bond was executed formed part thereof; amendments thereto affecting substantive rights and effective after bond was executed being inapplicable (Pen. Code, $\S\S$ 1287, 1305, 1306, as amended by St. 1927, pp. 1385, 1386, 1388).

Where bail bond was executed on May 6, 1927, before amendments to Pen. Code, $\S\S$ 1287, 1305, 1306, passed April 29, 1927 (St. 1927, pp. 1385, 1386, 1388), became effective, and amendment to section 1287, incorporating by express reference sections 1305, 1306, provided that undertaking should contain agreement for consent judgment, which was amendment as to substantive rights and was not concerned merely with procedure, Code sections, as they stood prior to amendment and in force when undertaking was executed, entered into and formed part of bond; amendments being inapplicable.

2. Contracts $\S$ 167—Laws applicable and in existence when contract was made, form part thereof.

All laws applicable and in existence when contract was made form part of it.

3. Bail $\S$ 77(2)—Bondsman on bail bond held entitled to have action commenced against it before judgment could be entered on bond (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1305).

Under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1305, in force when bail bond was delivered, and providing that action should be commenced against bail before judgment could be entered on bond, bondsman was entitled to be served with summons and complaint, to have an opportunity to appear and answer and to have trial at which bondsman could interpose any defenses it might have, and it was error to enter judgment against bondsman before it had its day in court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James G. Conlan, Judge.

Proceeding by the People against the National Surety Company, to forfeit bail bond of Frank Page. From a judgment forfeiting bond, the bondsman appeals. Reversed.

Joseph L. Taaffe and John J. Taaffe, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., and M. L. Choynski and August L. Fourtner, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of San Francisco, for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. On a complaint charging that the defendant had committed a felony, the police court made an order holding him to answer before the superior court. An order was made admitting him to bail "in the sum of one thousand dollars by bond or by the deposit of five hundred dollars in coin." On May 5, 1927, the defendant furnished a bond executed by the National Surety Company in words and figures as follows: "An order holding to answer having been filed in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, on the 6th day of May, A. D. 1927, by the judge of the Police Court of said City and County, charging Frank Page with the crime of felony, to-wit, violation of Sec. 112 State Vehicle Act and he the said Frank Page having been duly admitted to bail in the sum of one thousand dollars ($1000), we National Surety Company, a New York corporation, having its principal place of business at New York, New York, authorized under the provisions of Act of Congress approved August 13, 1894, as amended by the Act of Congress, approved March 23, 1910, to become sole surety upon recognizances, stipulations, bonds or undertakings, and licensed by the State of California, and by occupation a surety corporation, hereby undertake that the above named Frank Page will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted and will at all times render himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, and if convicted will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof; or if he fails to perform either of these conditions that we will pay to the People of the State of California the sum of one thousand dollars ($1000)." An information was filed, and the defendant was arraigned and pleaded not guilty. His case was set for trial on October 22, 1927. On that date the case was called, but the defendant did not appear. On that date the trial court directed the said fact to be entered in its minutes, declared defendant's bail forfeited, and directed that a bench warrant should issue for the arrest of the defendant. Thereafter the forfeiture was not discharged, but the district attorney did not proceed by action against the bail upon its undertaking. Nevertheless, on June 18, 1928, the trial court (when no action except the criminal case was pending before it) entered a judgment against National Surety Company, the bondsman, for the sum of $1,000. From that judgment the National Surety Company has appealed and has brought up a bill of exceptions.

The appellant claims that the trial court erred in entering a judgment against it without allowing it to have its day in court. The respondent replies that the judgment was not entered until more than 90 days elapsed after the date the forfeiture was ordered and that the appellant could have appeared and could have made any motion it was entitled to make before the judgment was entered, and the respondent cites Penal Code, § 1305, as amended April 29, 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1386), and People v. Hodges (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 897. The amendment to section 1305, Penal Code, had not taken effect when the appellant delivered its bond. The Hodges Case speaks of a set of facts which occurred after the amendments to the Penal Code took effect. Neither authority is in point.

[1] April 29, 1927, amendments to sections 1287, 1305, and 1306 of the Penal Code were passed. Stats. 1927, pp. 1385, 1386, 1388, cc. 734, 735, and 739. All of the amendments took effect on July 29, 1927. The undertaking in suit was executed May 6, 1927. The amendment to section 1287 incorporated by express reference sections 1305 and 1306, and it provided that the undertaking should contain a new sentence which, in effect, is a stipulation for a consent judgment. People v. Hodges (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 897. The amendment last mentioned is clearly an amendment as to substantive rights and is not concerned merely with procedure, and there is nothing showing that it was intended to be applicable to contracts theretofore made. Montecito County Water Dist. v. Doulton, 193 Cal. 398, 403, 224 P. 747.

[2] It is settled law that all laws applicable, in existence when a contract is made, form a part of it. Marshall v. Wentz, 28 Cal. App. 540, 542, 153 P. 244; 13 C. J. 560, § 523. Hence the Code sections as they stood May 6, 1927 (the day the undertaking was executed), entered into and formed a part of the bond delivered by the appellant.

[3] The law in effect at the time appellant delivered its bond provided that an action should be commenced against the bail before a judgment could be entered on the bond. Pen. Code, § 1305. The corollaries flowing from that proposition are that the appellant should have been served with summons and complaint, that it should have had an opportunity to appear and answer, and should have had a trial. To enter a judgment against the sureties before they had had their day in court was error. Robinson v. Gordon, 85 Ga. 559, 11 S. E. 844; Pinckard v. People, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 187; Johnstons v. State, 3 Ark. 524; Wright v. State, 51 Ga. 524; State v. Robb, 16 Ind. 413; State v. Dunbar, 10 La. 99; Wash v. State, 3 Cold. (43 Tenn.) 91; Waughop v. State, 6 Tex. 337. It is settled law that the sureties in such an action may interpose certain defenses, some of which are stated in the following authorities: 6 C. J. 1059; People v. Hunter, 10 Cal. 502; People v. Love, 19 Cal. 676; People v. Cabannes, 20 Cal. 525; People v. Ebner, 23 Cal. 158; Mendocino County v. Lamar, 30 Cal. 627; People v. Budd, 57 Cal.

349; San Luis Obispo v. Kyal, 175 Cal. 34, 163 P. 1; San Francisco v. Hartnett, 1 Cal. App. 652, 82 P. 1064; County of Merced v. Shaffer, 40 Cal. App. 163, 180 P. 342. It is not necessary nor appropriate for us to surmise what defense or defenses the appellant may interpose, but, from the record before us, it is patent that we are unable to say that the appellant has no defense.

The judgment is reversed.

Charles H. Sherrick and Rembert M. Trezevant, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Samuel De Groot, of Los Angeles, for intervenor.

YORK, J. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff against the appellant corporation for certain sums found to be due for services rendered under an oral contract, and certain sums as damages through loss of employment; the total judgment being the sum of $1,688.

There was evidence which showed that at the time such agreement was made the general manager of said corporation, who was also the majority stockholder and president thereof, made the agreement with the plaintiff, upon which the court predicated its judgment. There was evidence that no stock was owned by any one excepting the man who made this agreement, except certain qualifying shares. It was somewhat uncertain as to how many shares were really issued, but M. Leland Stanford, the man who was so acting as general manager, really held 5,520 shares, and various other persons held some 400 shares; it being shown that approximately 5,900 shares had been issued.

There was sufficient evidence to support the findings of the trial court in spite of the contradictory evidence introduced by the appellant, and this court cannot, therefore, disturb the judgment herein, which is drawn in accordance with said findings.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

HOUSER, J. I concur in the judgment.

CONREY, P. J. I concur in the judgment. As there is no bill of exceptions and only a "reporter's transcript" of the proceedings at the trial, we are obliged to look to appellant's brief in our search for a specification of errors relied upon as grounds for reversal of the judgment. There is no direct specification of errors, and no pointing out of any particular finding not sustained by the evidence.

My search through appellant's brief leads me to think that the errors complained of are the following: That the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings, in this, that the plaintiff sued upon a written contract, whereas the evidence shows that no writing was executed by the parties; and in that the board of directors of defendant never passed upon the contract sued upon, and there was no resolution authorizing the execution of such contract; and in that there is no evidence showing that Stanford, the president, had authority to act for the corporation in making the alleged contract; and in that there is no evidence tending to prove the monthly amounts of sales deliveries upon which the compensation of the plaintiff as sales agent was computed and allowed by the court. Also that the court erred in sustaining objections to questions propounded to the plaintiff on his cross-examination, in reference to the compensation he received prior to the alleged making of the contract. Also that the court erred in permitting the introduction in evidence of the memorandum Exhibit one.

The contract does not appear to have been one which the law requires to be in writing. Stanford was not only president of the corporation, but, with full knowledge and at least implied consent of the directors, was acting as general manager, and as such apparently had authority to make a contract of the character of that in question here. There is some evidence covering the amounts of sales deliveries upon which the amount of compensation was computed. The two alleged errors in rulings upon evidence were not of sufficient importance to have had any appreciable effect upon the result of the action.

(Civ. 6819.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 5, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 4, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1075—Question of insufficiency of evidence, waived on motion for new trial and appeal, and not assigned in bill of exception, cannot be reviewed.

Where plaintiffs, on motion for new trial and on appeal, waived claim that evidence was insufficient to support verdict for defendants, and failed to incorporate in bill of exceptions any assignment of insufficiency, question could not be discussed on appeal.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 928(5)—Appellate court must presume that error in instructions was cured by other instructions or was not prejudicial, record omitting other instructions.

Where appellant complained simply of giving of listed instructions, and other instructions were omitted from record, District Court of Appeal must presume that, if error arose, it was cured by other instructions, or at least that claimed error was not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Anthony Podesta and another against Eugene Delucchi and others, copartners doing business under the name and style of the Stockton City Realty Company, and W. L. Wolf and another, copartners doing business under the name and style of Wolf & Nelson. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 277 P. 364.

A. D. Schaffer and Anthony Podesta, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Edward F. Sullivan, George Harry Sullivan, and Sullivan & Sullivan, all of San Francisco, for respondents Wolf and Nelson.

Gumpert & Mazzera, of Stockton, and Frederick M. Shipper, of San Francisco, for respondents Delucchi and Pierano.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued in two causes of action, charging conspiracy and fraud in the sale and exchange of real property. The action was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict for defendants. Plaintiffs have appealed on a bill of exceptions.

[1] The theory of the complaint is that the plaintiffs employed the three first-named defendants, doing business under the name of Stockton City Realty Company, to effect the exchange of plaintiffs' ranch property situated near the city of Stockton for hotel property situated in the city and county of San Francisco; that their agents, in turn, employed the firm of Wolf & Nelson as their agents to carry on the negotiations with the owner of the hotel property; and that Wolf & Nelson secretly connived to defraud plaintiffs, by purchasing the hotel property themselves for $64,000 and turning it over to plaintiffs in exchange for the ranch property at a valuation of $85,000. The prayer of the complaint was for $21,000, which was alleged to be the secret profits thus obtained, and for general relief. Evidence was offered supporting the allegations of the complaint concerning the activities of Wolf & Nelson, and on their behalf it was shown that the value of the ranch land was far less than they had assumed it to be, and that they had profited but $274 out of the entire transaction. On the motion for new trial, and on this appeal, the plaintiffs have waived the claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and have failed to incorporate in the bill of exceptions any assignment of insufficiency. This question is, therefore, not open to discussion on this appeal. Schultz v. City of Venice, 200 Cal. 50, 54, 251 P. 913.

This leaves nothing but the various attacks upon certain instructions given by the trial judge. Here, too, the record is not in a condition for an examination of the points raised. The appellants have included in the bill of exceptions certain instructions which they claim to be error, but the parties have stipulated that, in addition to the instructions incorporated in the bill, "many other instructions were offered on behalf of the plaintiffs in said action, a portion of which were given by the court and a portion of which were refused by the court."

[2] Appellants complain simply of the giving of these listed instructions, but it is apparent that we cannot determine whether the claimed error was prejudicial, without having before us the other instructions, which have been omitted from the record. If we could ascertain by an examination of the record, or through stipulation of counsel, that the included instructions were all that were given in respect to the propositions covered by the instructions complained of, we might consider the propositions of law involved in these instructions, but we are unable to do this.

With this state of the record, we must presume that, if error arose, it was cured by other instructions, or at least that the claimed error was not prejudicial. Goldman v. Dahlberg, 79 Cal. App. 380, 249 P. 536, where cases are cited; Barrington v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 83 Cal. App. 100, 103, 256 P. 567.

For these reasons the judgment is affirmed.

MURPHY et al. v. ZWIEG. (Civ. 6956.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 6, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨933(4)—Appellate court must assume, where no reference was made to insufficiency of evidence in order granting new trial, that court found evidence sufficient (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

Where motion for new trial was made on all grounds on which a new trial could be granted under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, but order granting it made no reference to insufficiency of evidence to support verdict, appellate court must assume trial court found evidence sufficient to support verdict.

2. Appeal and error ⇨301—Failure to assign improper argument as misconduct in motion for new trial is deemed waiver, and forecloses question on appeal (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where argument of counsel is not assigned as misconduct in motion for new trial, failure to do so is waiver thereof, and forecloses question on appeal, especially in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, emphasizing necessity of showing prejudicial error on motion for new trial as well as on appeal.

3. Appeal and error ⇨301—Counsel's misconduct of prejudicial nature, or so persistent that instruction will not cure error, is not waived by failure to assign misconduct in motion for new trial.

Rule that failure to assign as misconduct improper argument of counsel on motion for new trial is deemed waiver of misconduct and forecloses question on appeal is inapplicable, where misconduct is of such prejudicial nature or is so persistent that instruction covering it would be deemed insufficient to cure error.

4. Appeal and error — 882(16)—Argument of defendant's counsel regarding collection of insurance and that insurance company was real party held not ground for complaint by plaintiff.

In action to recover damages for death resulting from automobile collision, plaintiff held not entitled to complain of argument of defendant's counsel referring to fact that plaintiff had already collected insurance under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), as amended, and that real party in interest was insurance company, where matter of payments of insurance was in record through evidence offered and received without objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action by Adele Murphy and another against Walter Zwieg. From an order granting a new trial after verdict for defendant, defendant appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James F. Brennan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued to recover damages for the death of William Murphy, the husband and father of plaintiffs, resulting from an automobile collision. The cause was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict for defendant. Plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was granted, and the defendant appeals from that order upon a typewritten record.

[1] Though the motion for a new trial was made upon all legal grounds, the order granting it made no reference to insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, and we must therefore assume that the trial court found the evidence sufficient. See section 657, Code Civ. Proc. It is apparent from the record that the only ground upon which the motion was granted was the asserted misconduct of the attorney for defendant during his argument to the jury, and to determine whether this was sufficient to sustain the order it will be necessary to refer but briefly to the facts of the case.

The collision occurred at about 4:30 p. m. of the 6th day of April, 1926, at the intersection of Cabrillo street and the Park-Presidio drive, in San Francisco. Murphy was proceeding west on Cabrillo street, driving a Ford coupé; the defendant was proceeding north on the drive, operating an Oldsmobile. Another car passed the intersection immediately ahead of Murphy, also going west, and traveling at a high rate of speed. Murphy was following this car on its right, and was also traveling beyond the legal rate of speed. The defendant had first approached the intersection and was crossing at a legal rate, slowing up to let the first car pass him. When he was in the middle of the intersection, "at the button," he saw Murphy's car coming on at about 30 miles per hour, and the defendant turned his car sharply to the left to avoid the collision. Murphy continued without slackening his speed or swerving from a direct course, and hit the right front fender of defendant's car with such force that the Murphy car turned over twice, causing injuries to him which resulted in his death. As evidence of the reckless speed at which the Murphy car was driven at the time, it was shown that his car, after turning over twice, was brought to a standstill on the extreme northwestern sidewalk of the intersection, badly wrecked, while the defendant's car was stopped at the point of impact, with no damage other than a slight dent in the right front fender. The foregoing evidence, upon which the defendant relied to negative the charge of negligence on his part, and to prove his defense of contributory negligence on the part of Murphy, was contradicted in some particulars by evidence introduced by the plaintiffs; but, from the jury's verdict and the order of the trial judge, we must assume that these are the facts which were proved.

The asserted error lies in the statement of counsel for the defendant in his argument to the jury, referring to the fact that Mrs. Murphy had already received $5,000 from the Royal Indemnity Company by way of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), and that the real party in interest in this case was the insurance company, which was prosecuting the case to recover the indemnity it had paid her. Assuming that the statement was improper, the single question before us on this appeal is whether it justifies the order granting a new trial.

The appellant advances several reasons why the order cannot be sustained. No objection was taken at the time of the statement to the jury, and no assignment of error or request that the jury be instructed to disregard it was made; it was based upon evidence which was received without objection, and a portion of which was brought out by questions put by plaintiffs' counsel; and it related to an issue which the plaintiffs raised, and upon which the trial judge, at the instance of the plaintiffs, instructed the jury.

[2] The rule is uniform that the failure of counsel to assign as misconduct an improper statement made to the jury by his adversary is deemed a waiver, and forecloses the question on appeal. The appellant cites Grossetti v. Sweasey, 176 Cal. 783, 800, 169 P. 687; Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 181 Cal. 345, 368, 184 P. 672, 12 A. L. R. 1007; Mohn v. Tingley, 191 Cal. 470, 490, 217 P. 733; Miller v. Murphy, 88 Cal. App. 601, 263 P. 1031, to the general rule. Many more could be cited to the same effect. We find no California cases holding that the same rule applies on motions for a new trial, but the great weight of authority from other jurisdictions is all that way. See Birmingham Ry. Co. v. Gonzalez, 183 Ala. 273, 61 So. 80, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 543, and annotation on page 555. Upon our review of these authorities, we would hold that the same rule applies on a motion for new trial, and particularly because of the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of our Constitution, which emphasizes the necessity of showing prejudicial error upon a motion for new trial as well as on appeal. If no assignment of error was made, and no request for an instruction, how could the trial court say that an error of law occurred which was prejudicial? The Idaho court stated the principle in Hurt v. Monumental Merc. M. Co., 35 Idaho, 295, 302, 206 P. 184, 186: "Counsel cannot sit quietly by, knowing that error has been committed, and await the verdict of the jury, and then upon motion for new trial urge such error as a ground for new trial."

[3, 4] There is a well-accepted qualification of this general rule in cases where the misconduct of counsel is of such a prejudicial nature, or is so persistent, that an instruction covering it will be deemed insufficient to cure the error (People v. George, 72 Cal. App. 124, 130, 236 P. 934, and cases cited); but this is not the case here. The matter of payments of compensation by the insurance company was all in the record through evidence offered and received without objection. Conceding that this evidence was inadmissible, and should have been excluded if an objection had been made, the record discloses that plaintiffs were responsible for it, and actually made an issue of it. Thus we have a case where they not only failed to object to the alleged misconduct, but actually invited it.

The order is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of defendant on the verdict.

BARNABY v. BARNABY. (Civ. 5363.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 1, 1929.

1. Divorce §331—Pleadings in wife's action for unpaid alimony based on foreign decree, held to raise issue of fact concerning law of foreign state.

Where wife, in action to recover unpaid alimony, alleged that court of foreign state rendering decree was one of general jurisdiction, and that order made had force and effect of judgment for payment of money, and husband adopted language of wife as sufficiently putting in issue fact concerning law of foreign state and denied allegation, court should have treated allegation and its specific denial as raising issue of fact concerning law of state granting decree.

2. Pleading §121(3)—Defendant cannot deny, for insufficient information, averments presumptively within knowledge, or where he can ascertain truth.

A defendant has no right to deny, for lack of information sufficient to form belief, those averments which are positively within his knowledge, or where he has means of ascertaining their truth.

3. Divorce §331—Defendant might deny on information and belief jurisdiction of court of foreign state to render decree for alimony.

It was sufficient for defendant to deny, in wife's action for unpaid alimony, for lack of information sufficient to form belief on subject, general jurisdiction of court of foreign state rendering decree, which wife alleged was of general jurisdiction.

4. Appeal and error §1107—Amendment to statute allowing courts to take judicial notice of laws of sister state could not affect appeal perfected prior thereto (Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, as amended by St. 1927, p. 110).

Where after judgment was rendered and months after appeal was perfected therefrom, Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, was amended by St. 1927, p. 110, allowing courts of California to take judicial notice of laws of sister state, amendment could not affect such appeal.

5. Appeal and error §925(2)—Appellate court cannot assume trial court considered counsel's affidavit that defendant had information and belief, as contradicting or overcoming answer's sufficient denial.

District Court of Appeal cannot assume that trial court considered affidavit of counsel that defendant had information and belief of facts alleged by plaintiff as contradicting or overcoming any sufficient denial of answer of defendant.

6. Appeal and error §916(1)—Appellate court must presume trial judge considered denials insufficient, where rendering judgment on pleadings.

Where court ordered motion to strike portion of answer, and granted motion for judgment on pleadings, District Court of Appeal must presume that trial judge considered that denials as they stood were insufficient in form and substance.

7. Divorce §331—That agreement for alimony was contra bonos mores could not be raised in wife's action on decree for unpaid alimony.

That agreement forming basis of decree for divorce and alimony by court of foreign state was contra bonos mores could not be raised in action on decree by wife for unpaid alimony.

8. Judgment §822(1)—Judgment of court of sister state with jurisdiction is final and conclusive.

Judgment of court of sister state is final and conclusive, provided only that court had jurisdiction of cause and of the parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Lindner Barnaby against William Ernest Barnaby. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Earl S. Patterson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. M. Holman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment on the pleadings. The plaintiff filed a complaint alleging that she had, prior to March 31, 1920, maintained an action for divorce against the defendant in Minnesota; that the plaintiff and defendant signed a stipulation that, if the court should award a decree, it should incorporate therein an order for the defendant to pay plaintiff the sum of $75 per month as alimony so long as she should remain unmarried; that the court granted the decree and made the order for the payment of the monthly allowance; that the order was by stipulation of the parties modified temporarily, but that, giving the defendant credit for payments made by him and the sums remitted by the temporary modification, there yet remained unpaid $1,680, which the plaintiff sought to recover. There was the further allegation that the court which rendered the decree and in which the defendant personally appeared after service of process was a court of general jurisdiction, and that the order made has the force and effect of a judgment for the payment of money.

The defendant responded to the complaint by an answer, in which he denied for lack of information and belief the general jurisdiction of the court, his personal appearance therein, the rendition of a decree of divorce, that the plaintiff has not remarried, or that the copy of the stipulation modifying the allowance was correct. He admitted the making of the stipulation for the payment of alimony, to become effective only upon a decree being rendered, but alleged that the agreement, as well as the subsequent one founded upon it, was contra bonos mores. He denied that the decree or judgment of the court has, under the laws of Minnesota, the force or effect of a judgment at law for the payment of money, and denied that there was due or owing the sum of $1,680, or any other sum.

The plaintiff interposed a demurrer, a motion to strike portions of the answer, and a motion for a judgment on the pleadings; the last motion being based upon the ground that the answer was sham, false, and a dilatory and evasive plea. The motions were accompanied by an affidavit of counsel setting forth that he had discussed the subject-matter of the action with the defendant, and that the latter had knowledge of the things denied by him in his answer for lack of information and belief. The court, as already indicated, granted this motion and rendered a judgment for the plaintiff.

The appellant assigns four reasons for a reversal of the judgment. They are as follows: (1) The decree of the Minnesota court was not final, and therefore could not support an action in California; (2) issues of fact were raised by the answer of the defendant; (3) the court failed to assume the truth of the allegations of the answer, but considered the affidavit of counsel as sufficient to overcome the allegations of the answer; (4) that the basis of the decree of the Minnesota court was an agreement which was contra bonos mores.

[1] Turning to appellant's first contention, we have now to determine whether an action will lie upon a decree for alimony which is not final and also whether the defendant put in issue the question of fact concerning the state of the law in Minnesota. A very succinct and yet comprehensive statement of the law upon the first branch of this question is found in Sistare v. Sistare, 218 U. S. 1, 30 S. Ct. 682, 686, 54 L. Ed. 905, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068, 20 Ann. Cas. 1061, as follows: "First, that, generally speaking, where a decree is rendered for alimony and is made payable in future instalments, the right to such instalments becomes absolute and vested upon becoming due, and is therefore protected by the full faith and credit clause, provided no modification of the decree has been made prior to the maturity of the instalments, since, as declared in the Barber Case [21 How. 582, 16 L. Ed. 226], 'alimony decreed to a wife in a divorce of separation from bed and board is as much a debt of record, until the decree has been recalled, as any other judgment for money is.' Second, that this general rule, however, does not obtain where, by the law of the state in which a judgment for future alimony is rendered, the right to demand and receive such future alimony is discretionary with the court which rendered the decree, to such an extent that no absolute or vested right attaches to receive the instalments ordered by the decree to be paid, even although no application to annual or modify the decree in respect to alimony had been made prior to the instalments becoming due."

It is patent from the quotation just made that, had the defendant alleged that the law of Minnesota was such as to fall within the exception to the general rule, such allegations would have raised an issue of fact under the law as it stood when the pleadings were filed, which it would have been necessary for the court to try. Ryan v. North Alaska Salmon Co., 153 Cal. 438, 95 P. 862. It is equally obvious that the plaintiff in the instant cause anticipated the defense which it was possible to interpose, and sought to avoid it by alleging the final character of the decree under the laws of Minnesota. Under the pleadings thus drawn, started by the plaintiff and answered by the defendant in kind, had a trial been had and judgment rendered upon a finding that the laws of Minnesota were such as to give to a decree for alimony the force and effect of a money judgment, the defendant could not have successfully attacked the allegation of the complaint and the finding, without having first interposed a demurrer directed to the point.

Even though we assume that the allegation is a conclusion of law, and even though it is lacking in precision and clarity, nevertheless it is clear that the plaintiff intended to allege the fact that the law of Minnesota was such as to render the decree for alimony of a character giving the plaintiff the absolute right to demand and receive the payments named therein. In Ryan v. Jacques, 103 Cal. 280, 37 P. 186, 187, it is said: "There are in the complaint several matters stated which are purely conclusions of law, and some of the facts are not stated with the clearness and precision which good pleading requires. Whether a demurrer for ambiguity would have been sustained, it is not necessary to consider, as no such objection was taken. If, however, facts are stated showing the liability of the defendants, the complaint must be sustained, notwithstanding they are imperfectly stated. Brown v. Weldon, 71 Cal. 393, 12 P. 280; Tehama Co. v. Bryan, 68 Cal. 57, 8 P. 673; Harnish v. Bramer, 71 Cal. 155, 11 P. 888." And in Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage, 182 Cal. 450, 188 P. 982, 983, a similar enunciation reads: "It is true that, where the objection is not made good until after judgment, the complaint will be liberally construed, and if the necessary facts appear by implication only, or as a conclusion of law, the complaint will be upheld."

The defendant adopted the language of plaintiff as sufficiently putting in issue the fact concerning the state of the law in Minnesota and denied the allegation. It would be a strange situation if the plaintiff might rely upon his imperfect pleading, and yet take advantage of the defendant's acceptance thereof. We think that the plaintiff cannot profit by putting the defendant in such position. The trial court should have treated the allegation and its specific denial as raising an issue of fact concerning the law of Minnesota.

[2, 3] The next assertion may be very briefly answered by the observations that a defendant has not the right to deny for lack of information sufficient to form a belief those averments which are presumptively within his knowledge, or where he has the means of ascertaining their truth. Crosby v. Fresno Fruit Growers' Co., 30 Cal. App. 308, 158 P. 1070. However, this does not apply to public records of sister states, and it has been held to be sufficient to deny, as was done in the present instance, the general jurisdiction of a court of a sister state for lack of information sufficient to form a belief upon the subject. Donian v. Danielian (Cal. App.) 266 P. 817.

[4] We have not overlooked the fact that since this judgment was rendered, and months after the appeal was perfected, section 1875 of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended (St. 1927, p. 110), allowing the courts of this state to take judicial notice of the laws of a sister state, but that cannot affect the present appeal.

[5, 6] We cannot assume that the court considered the affidavit of counsel as contradicting or overcoming any sufficient denial of the answer. The affidavit was properly presented to the court for its consideration in connection with the motion to strike. The court having ordered the motion to strike off the calendar and granted the motion for judgment on the pleadings, we must presume that the trial judge considered that the denials as they stood were insufficient in form and substance.

[7, 8] The last assertion of appellant's counsel, that the agreement forming the basis the decree was contra bonos mores, can hardly be raised in an action upon the decree. It is too well settled to require extended notice that the judgment of a court of a sister state is final and conclusive, provided only that the court had jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties. Estate of Hancock, 156 Cal. 804, 106 P. 58, 134 Am. St. Rep. 177. A somewhat similar contention was involved in McCormack v. McCormack, 175 Cal. 292, 165 P. 930, 931, and the court there said: "With this, however, we are not concerned, since, whether erroneous or not, the final judgment of the superior court of Washington declaring the marriage null and void—there being nothing to show want of jurisdiction—is, under section 1, article 4, of the federal Constitution, entitled to the same consideration and weight as though rendered by a court of this state."

Judgment reversed.

PEOPLE v. DE HOOG. (Cr. 1850.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Burglary $\S$ 41(6)—Evidence in prosecution for burglary held sufficient to identify defendant, especially in view of instruction leaving identity to jury.

In prosecution for burglary, evidence held to sufficiently identify defendant, especially in view of instructions leaving entirely to jury question whether identity was proved beyond reasonable doubt.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1166½(12)—In burglary prosecution, court's cross-examination regarding witness' acquaintance with defendant's sister-in-law and wearing of fur coat taken held not prejudicial error.

In prosecution for burglary, questions propounded on cross-examination by court, regarding witness' acquaintance with defendant's sister-in-law and wearing of sealskin coat which was stolen, held not misconduct nor prejudicial to defendant's case, where answers to questions were stricken and court instructed jury to disregard evidence and remarks which had been stricken.

3. Indictment and information $\S$ 129(2)—Burglary and theft occurring in same house within 30 minutes constituted two offenses, and were properly charged and proven separately.

Where burglary and theft occurred in same house within about 30 minutes, they constituted two offenses, and were properly charged and proven separately.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 825(4)—Failure to more fully instruct on identity in burglary prosecution was not error, where court had given instruction and no further instruction was requested.

In prosecution for burglary, where court orally instructed jury upon law as to proof of identity and no further instruction on issue of identity was requested, failure to instruct more fully on such issue was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Roy De Hoog was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Josiah Coombs, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant and one Walter Dayly were charged by information, consisting of three counts, filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county, with having, on or about January 23, 1929, feloniously and burglariously entered the house of Abram Zacharonsky, with intent to commit theft, with having robbed said Zacharonsky, and also with having robbed Elizabeth Zacharonsky. Dayly testified for the people, admitting that he and another man committed all three offenses, but exonerating De Hoog from any participation therein. Both defendants were convicted, and the last-named defendant appealed.

It appears that on the date mentioned, at about 6:45 p. m., two men drove in an automobile to the residence in question, went upon the porch, cut the front screen door, and rang the bell, to which Zacharonsky responded. As the door opened, each of them thrust a revolver in the proprietor's face, and said, "Throw up your hands; turn around; shut your eyes," and the door was quickly closed. Mrs. Zacharonsky entered the front room, and, as she did so, the intruders compelled her and her husband to proceed to a room adjoining, sat them on a bed, and, tearing a sheet into strips, placed gags in their mouths, tied their feet, and bound their hands behind them. Dayly demanded their rings, to which they replied that they had none. Zacharonsky testified that Dayly stated: "We know what you have got; we came for them and we are going to get them." Being threatened with torture unless she should reveal the whereabouts of her valuables, Mrs. Zacharonsky accompanied Dayly's companion to a dresser in another room, where she had left her jewelry and $110 in money in her purse, all of which he took; he then returned her to the bed, where he menaced her and her husband with a revolver, while Dayly demanded of Mr. Zacharonsky a diamond ring which he pretended to know all about, and, when told there was none, stated that he would proceed to torture them. He removed one of Zacharonsky's shoes, and began cutting the latter's sock with a large knife about 6 inches in length, in search of the ring. His victim was ill, in a weakened condition, and badly frightened, and, in spite of Dayly's threats of violence if he did not "shut up," he repeatedly fell back on the bed, and continued to groan. Mrs. Zacharonsky, facing the pistol held by the other man, and fearing for her husband's safety, advised him that he had "better tell." The latter then indicated that he had thrown the ring under the bed, whereupon Dayly, upon his hands and knees, recovered and took possession of this piece of jewelry, which contained a diamond valued at about $3,200. As the strangers were about to depart, Dayly indicated a lady's coat hanging by the door, and asked, "Is that the $1,500 coat?" to which his companion replied, "Yes, that is sealskin." A young man by the name of Patrick Oslo, returning home from a store, had noticed the men in a parked automobile as he passed, saw them approach the Zacharonsky home, and walk upon the porch. He heard a noise which he characterized as a "zoom" when they cut the screen, and, as they rang the bell and the door opened, he saw each of them thrust his hand forward, and enter. Becoming suspicious, he noted the license number of the machine, with which police officers thereafter located Dayly's room, where they found Dayly, De Hoog, one John Golden, and two others, all of whom were arrested. On the next day following the robberies, the victims visited the jail and viewed the prisoners, spoke to them, and heard them talk, in a shadowbox.

[1] Although Osio testified that the defendants were of about the same build, and one somewhat taller than the other, and the Zacharonskys swore that they were the men who entered their home and robbed them, appellant strenuously insists that the identification of himself wholly failed. It is truthfully said in his briefs that Osio admitted his inability to identify them, because he had not seen their faces. Zacharonsky testified that each wore a handkerchief covering his features below the eyes, that he saw only their foreheads and eyes, except upon one occasion when Dayly's mask dropped down; that he observed about one-third of the area of their hair, and noticed that Dayly's confederate spoke with a slight Swedish accent, and had quite a heavy bass voice. Attention is further called to the fact that Mrs. Zacharonsky remembered this man's voice as "not very strong, rather weak," and that she noticed no foreign accent. Her husband also testified that he was sure neither of the men had lost a finger, whereas during his cross-examination it was shown that Dayly had lost a portion of one finger. These, and other minor discrepancies in the testimony of the complaining witnesses are assigned as "a bundle of contradictions from the first to the last."

* * * A case of guessing on the part of Zacharonsky when he swore positively that the defendant De Hoog resembled in a general way the person who helped Dayly rob him." However, in view of all the circumstances, and in conjunction with the very positive testimony to the contrary, we are unable to say as a matter of law that the jury were more unjustly impelled toward conviction than were appellant's counsel in his favor by the fact, as it is asserted, that "these people were menaced by guns in the hands of the persons committing the robbery; and it is reasonable to suppose, reading the testimony of Zacharonsky, that he was excitable, nervous and felt in danger." Notwithstanding a most exhaustive and technical cross-examination of the witnesses Zacharonsky, they were unwavering. During persistent efforts to draw from Zacharonsky an admission of doubt as to whether Dayly's companion in crime on the night in question was De Hoog or Golden, he was positive that it was the appellant, and swore that he eliminated Golden at once when he saw them both. He testified repeatedly in no uncertain terms that when he saw De Hoog at the jail he "pointed him out immediately," that he was "very positive" it was De Hoog, and that he had never intimated that it might have been Golden. His testimony in this respect was: "I was positive right from the start that it was Dayly and De Hoog." A police officer, who questioned Dayly within De Hoog's hearing, testified that Dayly offered to restore the stolen property if De Hoog could be permitted to "go back on parole"; and, further: "I asked Dayly why he should take such an interest in De Hoog, when De Hoog claims he did not know him. He says, 'Maybe De Hoog thinks he can beat the case.' That was in that same conversation. I asked him where he met De Hoog, and he said he met him in Folsom." Again: "Lieutenant McCaleb said, 'De Hoog, you heard what Dayly had to say?' De Hoog says, 'yes.' He said, 'He would do well if he would take care of his own business and not be messing in mine.' That is all that the defendant De Hoog said. I also said, 'You heard what Dayly said in there?' He said, 'Yes.'" Mrs. Zacharonsky, when asked upon the stand as to the identity of Dayly and De Hoog, replied: "I am very positive." Defendant Dayly in his testimony stated that Osio had told practically the true story as to occurrences outside the house. He denied, with the same degree of positiveness, that De Hoog participated in the transaction, or that he had known him, although he admitted having seen him in Folsom prison. Dayly acknowledged under oath, and recognized the fact that officials from other jurisdictions were present to prove by their records that he had previously been convicted of felonies in the states of Oregon, Idaho, Montana, and California. Though denying the purpose assigned by the prosecution therefor, he admitted having attempted to bargain with the police officers for De Hoog's release.

The jury were instructed as to the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony, as to the presumption of innocence, and reasonable doubt. They were charged that "In this case the matter of the identity of any defendant here on trial with any person who may have taken part in the commission of the offense charged against him is a matter which is left entirely to the jury, and in this connection I charge you that the jury are the sole judges of the weight to be given to any evidence bearing upon the question of the identification of such defendant, as to whether same has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt." With all of the evidence before them, the jury, under the admonitions of the trial judge, may well have disbelieved all of Dayly's testimony except that which was corroborated by an abundance of other evidence. We think appellant's identity was sufficiently established in spite of Dayly's denials, and we are not disposed to devote extended consideration to conflict in this respect.

[2] Certain questions propounded by the trial court to Mrs. Zacharonsky, during her cross-examination, are assigned as misconduct and prejudicial, as suggestive of new evidence not disclosed by either counsel. In response to questions of appellant's attorney, she testified that she was acquainted with, and had for some time known, his sister-in-law, Mrs. Marie De Hoog; that the latter called her upon the telephone two or three days after the robbery, but she denied that she had called Mrs. De Hoog, or that they had more than one conversation. The witness said that Mrs. De Hoog felt very badly about the occurrence, and "wanted to know why I didn't phone her about it, and I said: 'I didn't want to, Marie.' I knew she wasn't to blame for it in any way." Objections to further questions as to hearsay and immaterial matters were sustained, whereupon the following occurred:

"The Court: Had Mrs. De Hoog been a visitor at your home? A. Well, she and her mother visited me, oh, some about three years ago.

"Q. You had not seen her for some time? A. I visited her mother's place. I have seen her there two or three times.

"The Court. All right. Go ahead. Had you worn this sealskin sack out there? A. Yes.

"Mr. Eddie: I object to the question of the court on the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Very well, strike it out. The jury is instructed to disregard it.

"Mr. Eddie: Ask that the jury be instructed to disregard it.

"The Court: You may disregard it, ladies and gentlemen of the jury."

It is contended that, without provocation and in order to "supply the groping minds of the jurors" with an unfounded insinuation that De Hoog's sister-in-law furnished him with information as to the Zacharonsky's wealth, the trial judge went outside his province; that, upon learning that the witness had not seen Mrs. De Hoog for a period of three years, he persisted in following up the inquiry about a sealskin coat. It is characterized as inexcusable, and prompted by "a zeal incompatible with the dignity of the court to supply a connecting link between the defendant and Mrs. De Hoog." As heretofore observed, Mr. Zacharonsky had testified regarding the sealskin coat, which the men apparently recognized. His testimony in this respect was as follows: "But my wife's sealskin coat was hanging in her dressing room, and Dayly walked up to it, and felt of it, and he says, 'Is that that $1,500 coat?' My wife shook her head then this way [indicating]. De Hoog says, 'Yes, that is sealskin.' * * * Hanging in my wife's dressing room, right on the edge—well, just on the edge of the door." These questions by the court appear to have emanated from an effort to eliminate immaterial matters and to expedite the examination, rather than from injudicious zeal or caprice. They followed a somewhat persistent endeavor to elicit telephonic conversations to which objections by the district attorney were sustained, after the witness had so testified as to intimate that there might have been visits at the De Hoog residence within the three-year period. The answer of Mrs. Zacharonsky regarding the wearing of her coat was stricken out, and the jury were twice admonished to disregard it; and, in the charge, they were instructed to disregard evidence and remarks which had been stricken out. Mrs. De Hoog was absolved by this witness from any blame, and, as to whether the questions by the court or by counsel in this regard contemplated disproof of the defendant's guilty knowledge, or proof of his observations during visits between appellant and his sister-in-law, that might appear was suggested by his own counsel, and is not properly attributable to ulterior motives of the court; whose object is not apparent. We find no error in this behalf.

[3] It is also urged that burglary and theft occurring, as here, in the same house within about 30 minutes, they constituted but one offense. The rule has been otherwise announced in former decisions, and they were properly charged and proven separately. People v. Snyder, 74 Cal. App. 138, 239 P. 705; People v. Sharp, 58 Cal. App. 637, 209 P. 266.

[4] Appellant complains that the jury should have been more fully instructed upon the law as to proof of identity where such question is in issue. As already observed, the trial court did instruct them upon this subject. It was stipulated that the court should orally instruct the jury, and no further instruction in this respect was requested. We find no error in this regard. People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 P. 671.

Other assignments of alleged error consist of questions by the district attorney to which no objection was interposed, or upon matters already opened up by the defense, and similar points which do not require further discussion.

The judgments are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

PEOPLE v. SEITZ. (Cr. 1763.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. July 25, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 9, 1929. Hearing
Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 22,
1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1116—Contention that district attorney had no authority to include in information offense not covered by commitment held unavailable, in view of incomplete record.

Contention that district attorney had no authority to include in information an offense not covered by magistrate's commitment held not available on appeal, where record did not disclose for what offense or offenses defendant was bound over by committing magistrate, since, in absence of proper record, reviewing court must indulge all presumptions in favor of judgment.

2. Indictment and information $\S$ 159(1)—Judgment held not sustainable as to count in amended information, where it did not appear that district attorney was authorized to amend in any particular (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1009).

Judgment held not sustainable as to count in amended information, demurrer to which was sustained and to which defendant did not plead under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1009, where it did not appear that district attorney was authorized or permitted to amend in any particular.

3. Witnesses $\S$ 380(3)—Rejecting in entirety testimony to show that witness, deceased since preliminary examination, had claimed testimony given at preliminary was false, held not error (Pen. Code, $\S$ 686).

Where witness testified at preliminary examination that defendant had attempted to induce witness to commit a crime, and between time of preliminary examination and trial witness was murdered, and, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 686, testimony of such witness given at preliminary hearing was read in evidence, rejecting in its entirety testimony of defendant that such witness had said on many occasions that testimony given was utterly false, held not error.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 696(3)—Refusing to strike testimony of accomplice who would not name and describe person who aided in robbery, and would not state what his real name was, held not reversible error.

In robbery prosecution, refusal to strike testimony of accomplice that crime was instigated by defendant because accomplice refused to name and describe the person who aided in the robbery, or to state what his real name was, held not reversible error, in view of evidence and accomplice's testimony that he was serving a life sentence in the penitentiary.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 469—Permitting expert to state the numbers which had appeared on revolver held not error.

In prosecution for robbery, permitting witness who qualified as an expert to state the numbers which had appeared on barrel of revolver, and which had been scratched off, which pistol accomplice testified had been given him by defendant on ground that jurors with aid of a high-powered microscope could not discern the numerals on the revolver, held not error; objection going to weight of evidence rather than admissibility.

6. Criminal law $\S$ 511(1)—Evidence held to sufficiently corroborate accomplice's testimony and to sustain conviction for robbery.

Evidence held to sufficiently corroborate accomplice's testimony and to sustain conviction for robbery.

7. Criminal law $\S$ 427(5)—Evidence of conspiracy to commit robbery held sufficient for jury so as to warrant admission of statements of coconspirators.

Evidence of conspiracy to commit robbery held sufficient for jury so as to warrant admission in evidence of statements of coconspirators.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 427(5)—Conspiracy may be proven as any other fact or shown by circumstances.

Conspiracy may be proven as any other fact or it may be shown by circumstances sufficient to satisfy jury of its existence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Evan B. Seitz was convicted of robbery, attempt to commit robbery and burglary, and he appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

See, also, 277 P. 1069.

Paul W. Schenck, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The defendant was found guilty and sentenced on three charges of robbery, two counts of "attempt to commit robbery," and one of burglary. He appeals from the judgments pronounced upon the verdicts and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Inasmuch as it is one of appellant's contentions that error was committed by the court in permitting the district attorney to amend the information, we shall, before reciting any of the testimony, examine that question. The original information consisted of fifteen counts containing not only the charges upon which the appellant was convicted, but ten others, the nature of which ten it is unnecessary to state at this time. A demurrer and a motion to set aside the information as to each count except the first one, which accused the defendant of robbery, were interposed, the latter on the ground that the defendant had not been committed by a magistrate for any offense except that alleged in count 1. The motion was denied. The demurrer was sustained as to counts 6, 12, 13, 14, and 15; the only one in which we are interested being the sixth, which contained the charge of burglary upon which the appellant was convicted. The defendant entered his plea of "not guilty" to all the counts remaining. This was on February 9, 1928. On February 21, 1928, an amended information was filed containing count 6, in the same words as in the original information. A new demurrer and motion to strike based on the same grounds as before were interposed, and on September 11, 1928, the demurrer was overruled and the motion to strike denied. At the same time the defendant's motion for a separate trial from his codefendant was granted. The defendant was not required nor did he plead to the amended information.

[1, 2] The appellant assigns two reasons why the action of the trial court was erroneous: First, as already suggested, the district attorney had no authority to include in the information an offense not covered by the magistrate's commitment; second, that the district attorney had no authority to amend after demurrer sustained without an order of court therefor. The record does not disclose for what offense or offenses the appellant was bound over by the committing magistrate. Appellant asserts that the opinion of the trial judge, delivered when denying the motion to strike, evidences the fact that the magistrate only held him to answer for the offense of robbery contained in count one. Even though we were entitled to consider the opinion, we would not find the support which is claimed for it. Therein it appears that it is conceded that the information contains charges for which the defendant was not committed, although it "embraces charges for which the" defendant was committed. It is to be noted that the word "charges" is in the plural, and we have no way of ascertaining which were embraced in the order and which were not. If it were desired to raise the objection on appeal, the record should have been made to reflect the situation. Without such record we must indulge all the presumptions in favor of the judgment. It should be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the charges not covered by the order are the remaining nine counts with which we are not here concerned. The same reasoning, however, does not apply to the second point presented. We do not need to concern ourselves with the first five counts which were identical with the first five counts of the original information, the demurrer to which was overruled, and to which the appellant pleaded, but only with count 6, the demurrer to which was sustained and to which he did not plead. The order sustaining the demurrer appears in the record, and, from it, it does not appear that the district attorney was authorized or permitted to amend in any particular. Section 1009 of the Penal Code in the chapter on demurrers reads: "If the court does not permit the information to be amended, nor direct that an information be filed, or that the case be resubmitted, as provided in the preceding section, the defendant, if in custody, must be discharged, or if admitted to bail, his bail is exonerated, or if he has deposited money instead of bail, the money must be refunded to him." It is apparent that, had the demurrer to the entire information been sustained without permission to amend, the defendant would have stood discharged. It must likewise follow as to the single count. The entire situation as respects count 6, inclusive of appellant's failure to plead thereto, is such that the judgment responsive thereto cannot be allowed to stand.

[3] We have concluded that the opinion will advance more logically if we consider certain other claims of error before proceeding to test the sufficiency of the evidence. Accordingly, the next argument to which we will turn is that relating to the impeachment of a witness named Rosen. This witness testified at the preliminary examination to the fact that in several conversations with the appellant the latter had attempted to induce him to undertake "something safe" at a "tea party," where "there were some women" who "wore a lot of diamonds, no holler to it, all covered by insurance and everything fixed." Between the time of the preliminary examination and the trial Rosen had been murdered. Pursuant to the provisions of section 686 of the Penal Code, the district attorney read in evidence the testimony of this witness given at the preliminary hearing. The appellant then attempted to show by at least two witnesses that both before the preliminary examination, and while outside the courtroom and afterwards, Rosen had said on many occasions that his testimony would be, was, and had been, wholly and utterly false and a "frame-up" between himself and the person to whom we shall hereafter refer as the "Iron Duke," an accomplice. The trial court rejected the testimony in its entirety, i. e., that which purported to have occurred prior, as well as subsequent, to the examination.

In People v. Garnett, 9 Cal. App. 194, 98 P. 247, a witness was absent from the state, and her deposition given at the preliminary hearing was introduced by the district attorney. In passing upon a similar contention there, it is said: "The court sustained the objection of the district attorney to questions put to the witness George N. Martin for the purpose of showing that Mrs. Coit had made statements to him inconsistent with the evidence read from her deposition. There was no error in this. No foundation had been laid for the impeachment of Mrs. Coit as required by section 2052, Code Civ. Proc. The fact that her testimony was read from her deposition taken at the preliminary examination does not alter the rule. People v. Compton, 132 Cal. 484, 64 P. 849; People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 72 P. 177; People v. Pembroke, 6 Cal. App. Rep. 588, 92 P. 668."

The quoted portion of the opinion would seem to leave no doubt of the correctness of the ruling in so far at least as concerns statements made prior to the giving of the deposition, for the obvious reason that in such cases the opportunity was afforded counsel to lay the necessary foundation for the impeachment. In People v. Compton, supra, the statements inconsistent with the testimony which were sought to be introduced were made subsequent to the preliminary examination, and the court dismissed the appellant's contention with the observation: "We know of no rule of law justifying the impeachment of the witness under these circumstances." This brief statement is unsatisfactory to the inquiring mind not enslaved by the force of precedent. However, we do find a logical and just reason for the exclusionary rule in the words of Chief Justice Brinkerhoff in the case of Runyan v. Price, 15 Ohio St. 1, 14, 86 Am. Dec. 459, as follows: "If we look at the principal question decided in this case simply as one of judicial policy, without reference to the authority of adjudged cases, it seems to me that a reason, in addition to any that I have yet heard stated, may be found in favor of our conclusion in the following considerations:

"Dead men tell no tales;" and if the rule be once established that the testimony of a deceased witness may be impeached by giving in evidence declarations alleged to have been made by him out of court differing from those contained in his testimony, and when he has had no opportunity for explanation—when all opportunity for explanation by him has passed away—when few will have the motive, and none the power to vindicate his integrity and truthfulness such as he would have if living, it seems to me that temptations to perjury and subornation would be not a little increased by the comparative impunity with which those crimes might be committed. Such declarations, at best, are the lowest kind of evidence; and the administration of justice will suffer little in any case by their exclusion; while, if admitted, and they are falsely alleged against a dead witness, it would be hardly possible ever to disprove them." The conclusion is irresistible that the trial court was not in error.

[4] The next attack of appellant upon the judgments is based upon the refusal of the court to strike the testimony of the accomplice, the "Iron Duke." This witness had testified on his direct examination to the effect that he and an assistant had actually taken the jewels from the women attending the party at the solicitation and instigation of the appellant. At the time he testified he was serving a life sentence in Folsom. On cross-examination he was asked to name and describe the person who aided him in the robbery. He refused to do either. He also refused to say what his own real name was. Counsel then made the motion to strike his entire testimony, calling the attention of the trial court to the authority of People v. Mc-

Gowan, 80 Cal. App. 293, 251 P. 643, wherein it was determined that the trial court has the authority to strike out the testimony of a witness who declines to answer proper questions on cross-examination on the principle that before testimony is permitted to go to the jury the adversary shall have the opportunity of subjecting it to "such tests as the experience of ages has shown are necessary to render reliance on it safe. * * *" We may rely upon the announced principle as correctly stating a rule of evidence. But, for reasons now to be stated, we think the court did not commit reversible error. Regardless of whether there was a conspiracy, the evidence sufficiently establishes that the associate of the "Iron Duke" in the actual robbery was a man called Eugene Ferris. The testimony of the appellant discloses that he had met Ferris and could identify his picture by a scar on the face; and that he accompanied the officers to Oxnard for the purpose of finding and identifying the missing participant in the affair. It can hardly be said, therefore, that the failure of the witness to answer the questions was so material or vital as to seriously impair the defendant's right or impel the court to strike the testimony. The similar refusal on the part of the witness to give his own real name cannot be said to have prejudiced the appellant. The witness gave his name when sworn, and on cross-examination testified to at least five aliases. As already observed, he was an inmate of Folsom. It is difficult to imagine how his credibility might have been more seriously attacked, or of what advantage it would have been to appellant to have had the question answered.

[5] Appellant also complains because the court permitted the witness W. R. Belknap to state the numbers which had appeared upon the barrel of a revolver and had been scratched off, which pistol the "Iron Duke" testified had been given to him by the appellant, and which, according to the evidence, had been purchased by the appellant four days previous to the robbery. This witness testified that he had had five years' experience, as special agent for the Pacific Coast Auto Theft Bureau and as inspector with the Motor Vehicle Department, in raising numbers obliterated on metal surfaces; that without the aid of his process he could make out on the gun the outlines of the second and the fourth numbers, and that they were each 5, and that he could make out portions of other figures; that, by applying a secret process, the compressed portions of the metal forming the numbers could be made visible; that sometimes the process took hours to react, and sometimes only a short time; that he had used his process on this revolver, and been able to decipher its number; and that he thought he could again make it visible to the jury. The witness was then asked to apply the process and display the gun to the jury, which he did. Counsel asserts that with the aid of a high-powered microscope the jurors could not discern the numerals, and that therefore the witness should not have been allowed to state the numbers which he says he was able to raise. We are of the opinion that appellant's argument is addressed to the weight of the evidence rather than to its admissibility. The witness qualified as an expert; the jury had full opportunity through the adroitness of counsel to determine the reliability of the opinion of the witness; and for that reason appellant has no legitimate complaint.

[6] We have yet to consider the sufficiency of the evidence as an entirety; the sufficiency of the corroborating testimony; and the claim of appellant that the court admitted hearsay statements, together with the final claim that the trial judge erroneously refused to give requested instructions. The first two of the problems just stated may be considered together. We have already recited the purport of the testimony of Rosen. The testimony of the "Iron Duke" discloses that, after the appellant had failed to interest Rosen in the nefarious enterprise, he approached the witness on April 7, 1927, saying that he knew of three ladies who were desirous of being relieved of their jewelry in order that they might collect the insurance, who would shortly attend a party; that he, the appellant, wished the "Iron Duke" to stage the holdup, returning to him 25 per cent. of the proceeds from the sale of the loot, it being agreed that one-fifth thereof was to be paid by appellant to his codefendant, Ollie Lowe, who was arranging the party; that appellant gave him a list of the jewelry the women were supposed to have with them; that he and the appellant went by the place several times; that appellant took him to the place on the day the robbery was committed, gave him the gun from which he had chiseled off the numbers; that he and his assistant went in, and one by one took from the ladies present their jewelry; and that subsequently he and the appellant were making efforts to dispose of their ill-gotten gains when he was arrested.

It was the theory of the prosecution that the appellant, the "Iron Duke," and Ollie Lowe entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of defrauding an insurance company in so far as the jewels belonging to Mrs. Lowe was concerned, and that the representation of the appellant to the "Iron Duke" that the other ladies were willing to have their articles of personal adornment taken was a misrepresentation. In view of the statement just made, the testimony of Rosen becomes of extreme importance, not only as corroborating the testimony of the "Iron Duke," an admitted accomplice, but also as possibly furnishing the foundation necessary to admit the acts and declarations of coconspirators. This is particularly true when, in addition to what has already been said, attention is directed to the fact that Rosen also testified that Mrs. Lowe accompanied the appellant on one of his trips to persuade the witness to undertake the job; that appellant told him that, if the witness did not enter into the conspiracy, he would get some one else, and that the lady wanted 5 per cent. as her split. Considering the testimony wholly, for the time being, from the standpoint of its sufficiency to corroborate the "Iron Duke," we must disagree with appellant's contention. When we consider it in connection with the pistol which appellant purchased, found in the possession of "Iron Duke," and identified as to number by the witness Belknap, and in conjunction with the testimony of Officer "Kynett" that on April 25, 1927, or on the thirteenth day after the crime was committed, he heard the appellant over the dictograph say to his wife that it would be the best move and the best plan to get some certain thing out of town, followed by a conversation regarding the value of certain jewelry, that on the next day he heard the appellant put through a telephone call to a man named Morris, to whom the appellant said, "Get the stuff so we can get out of town with it and get reservations on a certain train," that he also heard the appellant call and make reservations, that on the same day he heard appellant say to his wife that "the Duke had called and that the police had 'pert' near got him, and he was unable to meet him there and stated they would have to leave, to be very careful, and leave very quietly in order to get out of town, and that they were going to Glendale to catch the train there; that they would leave on the train that left Glendale at 6:10 and were going to Canada"—when these things are considered, as well as the undenied fact that the "Iron Duke" and appellant did board the train at Glendale on April 26, that a portion of the jewelry was found on the train, and that the evidence establishes beyond question the taking of the jewelry and money from the women named in the information, there can be no doubt that the testimony was sufficient to warrant the jury in returning the verdicts of guilty, and that the corroborating testimony tended quite strongly to connect the appellant with the commission of the offenses. It must be confessed that the record as we read it, in print, strongly indicates the possibility that appellant may have been the innocent victim of a designing mind of the underworld. Nevertheless, the record furnishes ample basis for the verdicts of the jury. The degree of credence to be attached to the testimony of convicts is for the jury to determine, and the responsibility is theirs.

[7] In the discussion of the sufficiency of the evidence up to this point, we have not specifically considered whether the conspiracy was sufficiently proven to warrant the admission in evidence of the statements of cocon-spirators. Prefacing our discussion of that subject, we here note that the women who are named as the persons the appellant attempted to rob, and one woman that he did rob, were admittedly unexpected by Mrs. Lowe or the appellant. It happened that on the afternoon of the robbery they called Mrs. Cummings and asked if they might come over and see her new home. Another lady whom appellant is alleged to have robbed was induced by Mrs. Lowe to cancel a previous engagement by the statement that she, Mrs. Lowe, had already made the appointment. There is no evidence that Mrs. Cummings had any knowledge of the plan in the mind of appellant and possibly Mrs. Lowe. The allegation is that Mrs. Cummings was robbed. This covers all the counts upon which appellant was convicted. Undoubtedly under the testimony which we have already recited, if a conspiracy existed, it would have had its culmination in the sale of the loot and realization by the parties of the following percentages: 75 per cent. to the "Iron Duke," 20 per cent. to appellant and 5 per cent. to Mrs. Lowe. But it would not have been ended here, because of the further understanding of the parties, and one of the considerations of the illicit concord was that Mrs. Lowe was to recover on the insurance policies by which her jewelry was admittedly protected. See People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 P. 351.

[8] It cannot be doubted, at least so far as the instant cause is concerned, that there was sufficient testimony of the formation of a conspiracy to go to the jury. Under such circumstances, declarations of a conspirator outside the presence of the defendant are admissible; the proper practice being to instruct the jury to disregard the declarations if they do not find a conspiracy. People v. Dixon, 94 Cal. 255, 29 P. 504. The conspiracy may be proven as any other fact, and, if a conspirator testifies to what was said and done, the evidence is competent for that purpose (People v. Zimmerman, 3 Cal. App. 84, 84 P. 446), or it may be shown by circumstances sufficient to satisfy the jury of its existence (People v. Schmidt, 33 Cal. App. 426, 165 P. 555). We have already recited ample testimony to authorize the deduction that there was a conspiracy between the "Iron Duke" and the appellant. We have also noted the presence of Mrs. Lowe on an occasion when appellant attempted to secure the services of Rosen, and that she induced Mrs. Brown to change her engagement because she (Mrs. Lowe) had made an appointment with Mrs. Cummings. We now observe testimony to the effect that it was Mrs. Lowe who took the gin to the party; that, when the "Iron Duke" and his companion rang the doorbell, Mrs. Lowe, although in the kitchen mixing drinks, said she would go to the door; that, when the maid pressed the button to open the door, she could feel Mrs.

Lowe right close to her; that, when the two men said they were officers, and that a booze party was going on, Mrs. Lowe said, "Let them in"; that Mrs. Lowe, when given the opportunity to identify the "Iron Duke" and the appellant at police headquarters, could not do so, and told her friend Mrs. Cummings that she would not identify any one, although, according to her own admission, the appellant had roomed at her apartment "for a few days," and although she signed his application for a bail bond; that she did very shortly after the robbery file her claim for payment of the insurance. From the testimony we think the trial court was justified in admitting the declarations of either the "Iron Duke," the appellant, or Mrs. Lowe under the rule above announced.

We deem it unnecessary to detail the reasons why the failure of the court to give the instructions requested did not constitute error. We have carefully examined them, and have concluded that the court was right in its ruling.

Judgment and order as to count VI reversed, and affirmed as to counts 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

BUDD v. HOUGH et al. (Civ. 6625.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 24, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 876—Only facts in findings can be considered on appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment and enter different one.

Where no appeal was taken from judgment, none of facts except those facts embraced in findings can be considered on appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment and enter different one, on ground that conclusions of law were incorrect, erroneous, and not consistent with nor supported by findings of fact.

2. Account stated $\S$ 8—Account stated does not operate as estoppel, but may be impeached for fraud or mistake.

An account stated does not operate as an estoppel, but may be impeached for fraud or mistake.

3. Account stated $\S$ 8—If evidence proves mistake, fraud or undue advantage, vitiating account stated, account is not conclusive on parties.

If fraud or mistake is pleaded in connection with an account stated, and evidence adduced in support of pleading proves that there has been any mistake, fraud, or undue advantage, by which account is in truth vitiated, and balance incorrectly fixed, account is not conclusive on parties thereto.

4. Alteration of instruments ☞18—Broker's unauthorized alteration of agreements for commission by inserting considerations justified denial of any relief, and impeached integrity of account stated (Civ. Code, § 1700).

Where broker without authority altered written agreements for commission, by inserting in blank spaces certain considerations without consent or authority of principals, alteration was not only legally sufficient to impeach integrity of account stated, but under Civ. Code, § 1700, would have been sufficient to justify denial of any relief whatever, founded on altered agreements.

5. Appeal and error ☞935(1)—On appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment, any uncertainty in finding must be resolved against appellant.

On appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment and enter different one, any uncertainty in finding must be resolved against appellant, and be most strongly construed in favor of respondent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by C. A. Budd against Wm. H. Hough and another. Judgment adverse to plaintiff, and from an order denying his motion to vacate the judgment, and enter a different judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. Rodgers, A. F. Bray, and John McKean, all of Martinez, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. [1] This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order denying his motion to vacate the judgment and enter a different one, upon the ground that the conclusions of law were incorrect, erroneous, and not consistent with nor supported by the findings of fact. No appeal was taken from the judgment, and consequently in that state of the record none of the facts of the case can be considered on this appeal, except those embraced in the findings. Westervelt v. McCullough, 68 Cal. App. 198, 228 P. 734.

The action was one by plaintiff, as assignee of C. A. Ricks, to recover $1,875 claimed to be due as real estate commissions. The complaint contained three causes of action. The first was based on a quantum meruit, the second on an express contract to pay the sum above mentioned, and the third on an account stated. The trial court found that defendants were indebted to Ricks in the sum of $875, less the sum of $500, which it found was due from Ricks to defendants, and judgment was entered in plaintiff's favor for the net sum of $375. With reference to the first and second causes of action, the court found that defendants became indebted to Ricks for work, labor, and services performed, which was of the reasonable value of $875, and that defendants agreed to pay him that amount; and with reference to the third cause of action it found that there was no account stated, "whereby it was ascertained and agreed that defendants were indebted to said C. A. Ricks in the sum of $1,875; but it is true that on each March 31, 1927, and on May 1, 1927, C. A. Ricks sent to defendants, regularly, through the United States mails, a statement setting forth that there was due him for services rendered from the defendants the sum of $1,875; it is true that the defendants received each of said statements, and that they at no time communicated with said C. A. Ricks to the effect that said statements were inaccurate or not correct."

Plaintiff contends that the specific facts found in the latter part of the foregoing findings nullified the preceding negative finding that there was no account stated, and were sufficient in themselves to establish an account stated, and that consequently he was entitled to judgment for the full amount stated in said account. However, it appears from other facts found by the court that Ricks' claim for commissions was based upon two written agreements, in printed form, entered into by defendants with a firm named Alder & Clark for the exchange of defendants' property, and that in each agreement the space for the insertion of the sums to be paid as commissions was left blank; and with respect thereto it was alleged in the answer and found by the court that, after said agreements had been signed, Ricks, "without any authority and against the wish and consent of defendants, inserted the figures '$1,000' in said blank" in one agreement, and the figures "$875" in the blank space in the other agreement.

[2, 3] As uniformly held, an account stated does not operate as an estoppel, but may be impeached for fraud or mistake; and if either of those elements are pleaded, and the evidence adduced in support of the pleading proves that there has been any mistake, fraud, or undue advantage, by which the account is in truth vitiated, and the balance incorrectly fixed, the account is not conclusive upon the parties. Union Lumber Co. v. J. W. Schouten & Co., 25 Cal. App. 80, 142 P. 910; Vaughan v. County of Tulare, 56 Cal. App. 261, 205 P. 21; Gardner v. Watson, 170 Cal. 570, 150 P. 994; 1 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law (2d Ed.) 463. Moreover, section 1700 of the Civil Code provides that the material alteration of a written contract by a party entitled to any benefit under it extinguishes all executory obligations of the contract in his favor against the parties who do not consent to the act.

[4, 5] Even assuming, therefore, as plaintiff contends, that the specific facts found as to defendants' failure to object to the account received by them through the mail would be sufficient, in the absence of any qualifying facts, to establish an account stated, it is evident that, when the findings as a whole are considered in the light of the authorities above cited, the additional facts found as to the unauthorized alteration of the written agreements were not only legally sufficient to impeach the integrity of the account stated, but under the provisions of section 1700 of the Civil Code would have been sufficient, also, to justify the denial of any relief whatever founded on said altered agreements. And it must be assumed that the foregoing was the view taken by the trial court, for, upon an appeal from an order denying a motion of this kind, any uncertainty in the findings must be resolved against the appellant, and they are to be most strongly construed in favor of respondent. Spotton v. Dyer, 42 Cal. App. 585, 184 P. 23.

The order is therefore affirmed.

JONE3-McLAUGHLIN, Inc., v. KELLY et al.
(Civ. 6230.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 8, 1929.

1. Contracts ⌘24—Proposal to accept or acceptance of offer on terms varying from those proposed is rejection of offer (Civ. Code, § 1585).

Under Civ. Code, § 1585, providing that acceptance of offer must be absolute and unqualified, and that qualified acceptance is a new proposal, acceptance or proposal to accept an offer on terms varying from those proposed is a rejection of offer, and puts an end to it, and party submitting counter proposition cannot abandon substitute and accept original offer without other party's consent.

2. Sales ⌘22(4)—Conditions in original offer to sell machinery which was rejected by submission of counter proposition accepted by seller formed no part of contract.

Where written offer to sell and install electric motor and compressor at oil well was not accepted according to its terms, but buyer submitted counter proposition on different terms and conditions, which seller accepted, conditions incorporated in original offer formed no part of contract.

3. Contracts ⌘282—Promisor cannot arbitrarily, unreasonably, and capriciously claim dissatisfaction under contract requiring one party to do something satisfactory to other.

Provision of contract requiring one party to do something which is satisfactory to other does not justify promisor in arbitrarily, unreasonably, and capriciously claiming that he is not satisfied, in order to evade liability.

4. Contracts ⌘282—In doubtful cases, courts will construe stipulation to furnish something satisfactory to buyer as requiring such thing as ought reasonably to satisfy.

In doubtful cases, and especially where thing furnished and stipulated to be to satisfaction of buyer is so attached to real property that its value would be lost to seller either wholly or in great part, unless paid for, courts are inclined to construe stipulation as one to furnish such a thing as ought reasonably to satisfy buyer.

5. Sales ⌘54—Meaning of ambiguous term used but not defined in contract may be ascertained from surrounding circumstances.

Where contract to sell and install electric motor and compressor at oil well was ambiguous as to meaning of terms used, but not defined in contract, court can go outside of contract and consider circumstances surrounding transaction at time it was made, in order to ascertain meaning of special terms.

6. Sales ⌘72(1)—Contract for purchase of oil well machinery, when construed with surrounding circumstances, held to show agreement that satisfactory result on which payment of price depended was increase in production of 50 barrels per day.

Contract to sell and install electric motor and compressor at oil well providing for payment of first installment of purchase price, if production of well has been sufficiently increased, and the balance to be paid 60 days after installation, if machinery in buyer's opinion proved entirely satisfactory, and obligating seller to remove machinery if it did not produce satisfactory results, when construed in connection with surrounding circumstances, held to show intention that buyer would accept equipment as satisfactory, if compressor produced satisfactory results, and that by satisfactory result parties meant an adequate increase in production of well, and that an increase in production to extent of an average of 50 barrels per day during period allowed for testing machinery would be accepted as a sufficient increase.

7. Evidence ⌘458—Admitting testimony, in action on contract for price of oil well machinery, showing oral agreement that buyers would be satisfied with specified increase in production, and relating to installment of compressor, held not error.

In action on contract to recover price of electric motor and compressor installed at oil well, allowing testimony regarding oral agreement that buyer would be satisfied with compressor, if production of well would be increased from 350 to 400 barrels per day, and testimony as to amount of production and sum expended by seller in installing compressor, held not error, where meaning of terms used was ambiguous, and parol evidence was necessary to show meaning.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by Jones-McLaughlin, Inc., against Thomas Kelly and others, copartners doing business under the fictitious name and style of Donley-Barteaux Syndicate, sued respectively as John First and others, copartners doing business under the fictitious name and style of Donley-Barteaux Syndicate. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Claud B. Andrews and John C. Gillham, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem. Defendants appeal from a judgment awarded to plaintiff for the contract price of certain machinery, sold and installed by the latter at a certain oil well.

It is conceded that the parties entered into a contract whereby the respondent was to sell and install a certain electric motor and compressor on the appellants' well; that the parties intended that there should be a 30-day test on this compressor following the installation; that on May 31, 1926, respondent completed the installation of said machinery, the same being attached to a concrete foundation imbedded in the ground adjoining said well; that the period for making said test was extended until July 26, 1926; that on the last-mentioned date appellants notified the respondent to remove the machinery; and that the same was used by appellants continuously from May 31 to August 6, 1926, on which date they disconnected the compressor from the well. The amount of the judgment, likewise, is not in dispute.

Appellants contend that the agreement made between the parties granted to them the option to reject the machinery if the same should not prove satisfactory to them, and that, having rejected the same in good faith, they cannot be held liable for the purchase price.

Although five separate grounds are assigned upon which it is claimed the judgment should be reversed, all of the points presented arise out of one and the same issue, namely: Did the contract in question entitle appellants to reject the machinery merely if they were dissatisfied with it, or were they obligated to pay for the same if the machinery proved to be such as would be satisfactory to a reasonable person?

It becomes necessary, therefore, to determine what was the contract which these parties made.

Under date of May 1, 1926, respondent submitted to appellants a written offer to install said machinery, said offer containing, among other provisions, the following: "Thirty days' time will be allowed in which you can satisfy yourself whether or not you wish to keep the machinery. At the end of the thirty days you will have the option of buying the machinery at the above price, or rejecting it, under which option we are to remove it without any expense to you. * * * We are making the foregoing offer to install machinery upon trial and at our own expense with the understanding that we are to be granted at least ten days if we desire to make such tests as may be necessary to demonstrate the workability of the system at the well. Furthermore, in the event that the well proves to be incapable of yielding oil in satisfactory amounts under this process, we want the right to make a test on your Casa Blanca Well No. 1 before removing the machinery, for the purpose of determining whether that well is capable of satisfactorily producing under the process. * * * In the event that we make a substantial and satisfactory showing at the Donley-Barteaux Well we shall expect to make an arrangement with you under similar terms to the above for the purpose of installing machinery and producing oil from the Casa Blanca Well No. 1 and such other wells which you have in the immediate vicinity."

Under date of May 3, 1926, the appellants sent to respondent a communication which, omitting nonessential portions, read as follows:

"In reply to your letter of May 1st regarding the installation of your electric motor and compressor on the Donley-Barteaux well * * * please enter our order to install the above equipment on the following conditions:

"Thirty (30) days after the installation, we agree to pay your company Three Thousand Two Hundred Twenty-two Dollars ($3,222.00) for your electric motor, compressor and appliances, providing the production of the well has been sufficiently increased.

"If we decide to keep the compressor, and it is, in our opinion, entirely satisfactory, we further agree, at the end of sixty (60) days, to pay you an additional Twenty-five Hundred Dollars ($2500.00) for your patents on this machinery covered by patent No. 1,102,-152.

"Should this compressor not produce satisfactory results, you are to remove the same and we are to be put to no expense whatsoever."

At the bottom of the last-mentioned communication the respondent wrote the following:

"Accepted: Jones-McLaughlin, Inc., by R. P. McLaughlin, May 3, 1926."

Thereafter, under date of June 24, 1926, appellant wrote to respondent requesting an extension of the period within which they might test the machinery. In the opening sentence of that communication they wrote: "According to the terms of our agreement with you, bearing date of May 3, 1926, etc. (Italics, in the foregoing quotations are ours.)

It is the contention of appellants that the letter of May 1, 1926, constituted a part of the contract entered into by the parties; that, by virtue of the provisions of that letter, they merely took an option to purchase the machinery, with permission to test the same; and that, having rejected it, they could not be held liable for the purchase price thereof.

Admittedly the letter of May 1, 1926, constituted respondent's original offer to sell and install the machinery in question. However, unless such offer was accepted, the conditions specified in that letter did not become part of any contract.

[1, 2] In Niles v. Hancock, 140 Cal. 157, 73 P. 840, 841, the court declared: "It is well settled that a proposal to accept, or acceptance of, an offer, on terms varying from those proposed, is a rejection of the offer, and puts an end to it. See Wristen v. Bowles, 82 Cal. 87, 22 P. 1136; Meux v. Hogue, 91 Cal. 448, 27 P. 744; 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 853, and cases there cited. A qualified acceptance is a new proposal. Civ. Code, § 1585. A party who submits a counter proposition instead of accepting an offer cannot abandon the substitute and accept the original offer without the other party's consent"—citing cases.

In their proposal of May 1st, the respondent specified the conditions under which its offer was made, and among these were the following:

First. Respondent was to be granted at least ten days, if desired, to make such tests as might be necessary to demonstrate the workability of its system at the well.

Second. If that well proved incapable of yielding oil in satisfactory amounts under respondent's process, the latter was to have the right to make a test on appellants' Casa Blanca Well No. 1, before removing its machinery, in order to determine whether the latter well was capable of satisfactorily producing under the equipment in question.

Third. If a substantial and satisfactory showing should be made at the first well, respondent was to be given a contract under similar terms to install its machinery on said Casa Blanca well, and also all other wells belonging to appellants in the immediate vicinity.

On the other hand, while appellants' reply of May 3d declared their willingness to order the installation of the equipment in question in conformity to most of the conditions enumerated in respondent's offer, it is clear that all three of the above-mentioned conditions were omitted from their so-called acceptance.

Appellants' reply, therefore, was not an unqualified acceptance of respondent's proposal, and hence itself became a new offer.

Furthermore, the parties themselves construed the letter of May 3d, coupled with respondent's acceptance thereof, as being the contract which fixed their respective rights and obligations. This is established, not only by the circumstance that the respondent wrote its acceptance at the bottom of that letter, but by the further fact that in their request for an extension of time within which to test the equipment appellants designated the contract as being "our agreement with you, bearing date of May 3, 1926." In addition, the answer of the defendants similarly described the contract, and in pleading the substance thereof omitted all reference to the above-mentioned three conditions incorporated in the offer of May 1st. It follows, therefore, that the provisions contained in the offer of May 1st formed no part of the contract made by the parties herein.

[3, 4] It is next urged that, even under the terms of the agreement of May 3, 1926, appellants had the absolute right to accept or reject the machinery. The principle upon which this argument is advanced, appellants assert, was defined by the Supreme Court in the case of Tiffany v. Pacific Sewer Pipe Co., 180 Cal. 700, 182 P. 428, 6 A. L. R. 1493. The court there said (pages 702, 703 of 180 Cal. [182 P. 429]): "The law governing the rights of the parties under a contract which requires one party to do something which is satisfactory to the other party is thus stated in 13 Corpus Juris, at page 675: 'Contracts in which one party agrees to perform to the satisfaction of the other are ordinarily divided into two classes: (1) Where fancy, taste, sensibility, or judgment are involved; and (2) where the question is merely one of operative fitness or mechanical utility. In contracts involving matters of fancy, taste, or judgment, when one party agrees to perform to the satisfaction of the other, he renders the other party the sole judge of his satisfaction without regard to the justice or reasonableness of his decision, and a court or jury cannot say that such party should have been satisfied where he asserts that he is not.' Section 768."

The Tiffany Case, however, was one involving a contract for personal services, the agreement there providing that the employee would not hold his employer liable, if for any reason the latter should be unable to turn out enameled and glazed brick satisfactory to it.

On the other hand, as pointed out by the court in that decision, Elliot states the rule to be with respect to the second class of contracts that such an agreement "does not justify the promisor in arbitrarily, unreasonably and capriciously claiming that he is not satisfied, in order to evade liability, and the courts in doubtful cases, especially when the thing furnished is so attached to the real property of the buyer that its value would be lost to the seller, either wholly or in great part, unless paid for, are inclined to construe such a stipulation as one to furnish such a thing as ought reasonably to satisfy the buyer."

A case analogous to the present suit was that of Thomas Haverty Co. v. Jones, 185

Cal. 285, 197 P. 105. In that action, the contractor recovered judgment upon an agreement to install the plumbing, steamheating, and ventilation plant in a four-story building, to the satisfaction of the owner, although the latter claimed that the plant was not satisfactory. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court, at page 296 of 18 Cal. (197 P. 110) declared: "The finding of the court that the contract was performed in such a manner as should be satisfactory to a reasonable person is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover in the action, so far as that point is concerned. As was stated by the District Court of Appeal: 'A stipulation in the contract to perform to the satisfaction of one of the parties only calls for such performance as should be satisfactory to a reasonable person.' [Citing cases.] This rule does not apply where the performance involves matters dependent on fancy, taste, sensibility or judgment of the other party, but it does apply where the question is merely one of operative fitness or mechanical utility, and especially to contracts for the erection of buildings. Tiffany v. Pacific Sewer Pipe Co., 180 Cal. 702, 182 P. 428, 6 A. L. R. 1493."

The recent decision of Petrotta v. Gerson (Cal. App.) 277 P. 167, 168, is very much in point. That case arose out of an agreement to install a pump on a water well. The contract was prepared upon a printed form, which described the pump and specified its capacity. In addition, the agreement contained a stipulation, written in longhand, and reading: "The company agrees, in event pumping plant does not pump to capacity or is otherwise not acceptable to customer, they will refund initial payment of $630.80 and take back equipment."

In affirming a judgment awarded to the vendor, the court there said (277 P. 168): "The contract is to be construed as a whole, so as to give effect to every clause and portion, if reasonably possible. * * * Nor does the clause in the written portion of the guarantee, to the effect that the contract may be avoided if the 'pumping plant does not pump to capacity, or is otherwise not acceptable to customer,' authorize the vendee to reject the pump or repudiate the contract upon mere whim or caprice. This clause should be construed in connection with the entire contract, with a view of ascertaining the extent and nature of the guarantee intended by the parties. The subject under consideration, which led to the use of the clause pursuant to which the appellant claims the right to reject the pump for no other reason than that it was 'not acceptable' to him, was the guarantee of the mechanical operation of a machine to pump water from a well. This would not justify the rejecting of the plant merely because the buyer disliked its appearance, or because it was not painted to suit him, or for any other trivial reason. Under certain circumstances, such language may authorize an arbitrary option to reject a purchased article. But in the absence of language clearly indicating such arbitrary authority, and where the mechanical operation of a machine is involved, there must be reasonable cause for rejecting it. [Citing 6 Ruling Case Law, 954.] * * * The case of Tiffany v. Pacific S. P. Co., 180 Cal. 700, 182 P. 428, 6 A. L. R. 1493, which is relied upon by the appellant, clearly belongs to the class of cases which confers arbitrary power to act."

[5, 6] In the present action, no agreement for personal services is involved. Here appellant promised to pay the first installment of the purchase price 30 days after installation of the machinery, "providing the production of the well has been sufficiently increased." The balance of the purchase price was to be paid 60 days after installation, "if we decide to keep the compressor and it is, in our opinion, entirely satisfactory." Finally, the respondent was obligated to remove it, "should this compressor not produce satisfactory results."

What did the parties mean by the expression, "providing the production of the well has been sufficiently increased?"

What was intended by the remaining stipulations above quoted?

It is clear that the contract itself supplies no definition of these terms. The agreement is therefore incomplete, if not ambiguous in this respect. Hence we must go outside of the contract, and look to the circumstances surrounding the transaction at the time it was made, in order to ascertain the meaning of these terms.

In Morse v. Tochtermann, 21 Cal. App. 726, 132 P. 1055, 1057, the court declared: "It is very manifest that the words 'ready for occupancy, which are used in the lease as descriptive of the condition in which it was intended and understood that the premises should be placed before the lessees were required to accept or take possession thereof, are general, vague, and indefinite as to their exact meaning and scope, and that, to secure a full explanation of the precise meaning they were intended to bear, it was requisite to examine testimony extrinsic to the instrument itself. * * * The rule is well settled that, where 'the writing does not show upon its face that it was intended to express the whole agreement between the parties, parol evidence is admissible to show other conditions, or explain latent ambiguities.' Williams v. Ashhurst, etc., Oil Co., 144 Cal. 619, 624, 78 P. 28, and other cases."

In the action at bar, the evidence showed, and the trial court found, that at the time of the making of said contract the parties orally agreed that defendants' satisfaction was to depend and be based solely upon the production of oil and gasoline at the well during the test period, and that defendants would be satisfied if the oil and gasoline produced at said well during said test period would be increased by an average of 50 barrels per day.

Likewise, it is not disuted that, as a direct result of the operation and use of the machinery installed by respondent, the oil and gasoline produced at said well was increased by an average of 50 barrels per day throughout said test period.

Finally the lower court found upon adequate evidence that the increase thus produced was such as would have been satisfactory to a reasonable person, and that in rejecting said machinery the defendants were arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable.

It is clear that the contract in the present suit was one involving the operative fitness or mechanical utility of certain equipment attached to a concrete foundation imbedded in the ground adjoining an oil well belonging to the purchaser. Likewise it cannot be seriously questioned that the equipment here furnished was so attached to the real property that, unless paid for, its value would be lost in great part to the seller.

Construing the agreement as a whole, so as to harmonize its various provisions and thus give effect to every portion thereof, and considering further the nature of the contract, we are of the opinion that the appellants agreed that the equipment would be accepted as satisfactory, if the compressor produced satisfactory results, and that by satisfactory results they meant an adequate increase in the production of the well. Thus construed, we hold, in view of the evidence introduced in the court below, that under the contract here made the appellants agreed to pay for the equipment, providing the production of the well should be sufficiently increased, and that an increase in the production to the extent of an average of 50 barrels per day, during the period allowed for testing the machinery, would be accepted as a sufficient increase.

Since the lower court found, and the evidence abundantly proved, that the machinery installed by respondent met all of the foregoing requirements, it follows that the appellants are liable for the purchase price.

[7] The three remaining points presented by appellants relate to rulings of the lower court admitting, over their objections, testimony to the effect that they orally agreed they would be satisfied with the compressor, if the production of the well would be increased from 350 to 400 barrels per day, also testimony as to the amount of the production of the well, and also testimony respecting the sum expended by respondent to install the compressor. In view of the conclusion heretofore announced respecting the construction of the contract made between the parties, we hold that no error was committed in admitting said evidence.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

MOGAN v. BOARD OF POLICE COM'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 6200.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 6, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 5, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 3, 1929.

Municipal corporations *§*187—Finding on sufficient evidence of police commissioners that widow of policeman was not entitled to pension was conclusive, absent abuse of discretion (St. 1917, p. 1708; Code Civ. Proc. § 1085).

Under St. 1917, p. 1708, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, finding on conflicting, but sufficient, evidence of board of police commissioners, on petition of widow of policeman for pension from police pension fund, that policeman did not meet death while engaged in performance of his duties, was conclusive, in absence of showing of abuse of discretion on part of commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Mandamus by Mary E. Mogan against the Board of Police Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Leon Samuels, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued in mandamus to require the defendants to award her a pension from the police relief and pension fund, maintained under the provisions of the municipal charter of the city and county of San Francisco. Plaintiff had judgment in the superior court, and the defendants have appealed on typewritten transcripts.

Plaintiff is the widow of Austin J. Mogan, deceased, a former member of the San Francisco police department. On September 23, 1924, Officer Mogan was ordered by his superior officer to report to the Central Emergency Hospital in San Francisco to interview a patient who was reported to have made an attempt to commit suicide. It is claimed on the part of plaintiff that this patient suddenly became violent, and that, in attempting to restrain him, Officer Mogan was injured, and that such injury caused his death, which occurred soon thereafter. On the part of the defendants it is claimed that no struggle took place at the hospital, and that no injury to the officer resulted, but that he died of natural causes. A full hearing was had before the commission under the terms of the charter, and evidence was received tending to prove that the officer was injured in the struggle, as claimed by the plaintiff, and evidence was also received which was directly contradictory. Beside the direct testimony of the physician and of the nurse in charge that no struggle took place, it was shown that no mention of a struggle was made by Officer Mogan in his report to his superior officer immediately following his return from the hospital; that no mention of a struggle appeared in the report of the nurse in attendance upon the patient; that the physician attending the officer certified that the cause of his death was lobar pneumonia, and that the contributory cause was cerebral infarct; that two physicians appearing before the commission on behalf of this plaintiff testified that Officer Mogan died from a clot on the brain as a result of the attack of pneumonia; and that one of these physicians testified that the officer also appeared to be suffering from angina pectoris.

Upon this evidence the commission reached the determination that the officer's death did not result from injuries received while in the performance of his duties as a police officer, and denied the application for a pension. The petitioner then went to the superior court, asking that court to set aside the finding and determination of the commission on this question of fact, and to determine in its own judgment that the officer's death was the result of injuries received in the performance of his duties. On this appeal the sole question is whether the provisions of the San Francisco charter authorize the commission to hear and finally determine these disputed questions of fact, or whether the court may substitute its judgment for that of the commission without a showing of an abuse of discretion on the part of the commission.

The right of the widow of a member of the police department to a pension, when the officer has died from the result of injuries received in the performance of his duty, arises out of section 4 of chapter 10 of article 8 of the charter. Subdivision 4 of this section, as amended (Stats. 1917, p. 1708), reads as follows: "Any member or members of the family of the deceased claiming to be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this section, shall file a verified petition therefor with said commission, which petition shall thereafter be heard by said board, upon such reasonable notice to the petitioner or petitioners of the time and place of such hearing, as said board may by rule or order prescribe. Said petitioner or petitioners shall be entitled, upon such hearing, to appear personally and by counsel. Upon such hearing any interested person shall have the right to introduce testimony relative to the matters set forth in said petition. The judgment of said commissioners respecting said application shall be final, unless in determining said application said commissioners commit a clear abuse of discretion."

This amendment was adopted immediately following the decision of the Supreme Court in French v. Cook, 173 Cal. 126, 160 P. 411, 412. That decision, which was filed July 25, 1916, was an action in mandamus on the part of a widow to require the same board to grant her a pension under the same section of the San Francisco charter before subdivision 4 was added. In affirming the judgment ordering a writ to issue the Supreme Court emphasized the fact that there was then no provision in the charter as to any hearing or finding by the board, saying: "We are unable to see in the charter provisions bearing on the matter anything which can fairly be held to make the board in relation to such an application as this a tribunal possessing judicial powers whose decision on questions of fact is at all binding;" that "there is absolutely nothing in the charter purporting to confide to the board the power to finally determine any question of fact in connection with such a pension;" and "as we read the charter, it gives no judicial function whatever to the board in such a matter as this, confers upon it no authority to hear and determine a controversy in a judicial sense. It is not a board or tribunal by law vested with authority to decide a question, and herein lies the distinction between this case and the cases cited." (Emphasis was by the court.)

The cases cited were People v. Los Angeles, 133 Cal. 338, 65 P. 749; People v. Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 P. 205, and others, to the general principle stated in Freeman on Judgments, § 531: "As a general rule, whenever any person or persons have authority to hear and determine any question, their determination is, in effect, a judgment having all the incidents and properties attached to a similar judgment pronounced in any regularly created court of limited jurisdiction acting within the bounds of its authority. Hence, whenever any board, tribunal or person is by law vested with authority to decide a question, such decision, when made, is res judicata, and as conclusive of issues involved in the decision as though the adjudication had been made by a court of general jurisdiction."

Respondent insists that the judgment must be affirmed on the authority of Sheehan v. Board of Police Comm'rs, 197 Cal. 70, 239 P. 844, and the history of this litigation demands consideration. Sheehan, a police officer, had been retired on a pension under the provisions of the San Francisco charter upon the ground that he had suffered an injury in the performance of police duties resulting in an impairment of his hearing. Soon thereafter he was found to be practicing law in the courts of the city and county, and the commission, believing that his defective hearing was feigned, cited him to appear before it to show cause why he should not be restored to some active duty in the department, under the section of the charter which provides that when the disability ceases the pension shall cease. He refused to appear, claiming that the commission was without jurisdiction to hear the matter. The police commission then, acting under the section which provides that those retired on a pension are nevertheless subject to call for police duty, and hence subject to discipline, cited him to appear upon a charge of insubordination. He again refused to appear, attacking the jurisdiction of the commission to try him on that charge. The police commission then dismissed him from the department, and the pension fund commission refused to pay the pension which had been allotted him. He commenced proceedings in mandamus to require the payment of this pension, and the District Court of Appeal of the First Division held that the fund commission was without jurisdiction to determine when the disability ceases and affirmed the order requiring the payment of the pension. Sheehan v. Board of Police Comm'rs, 47 Cal. App. 29, 190 P. 51.

A petition for a transfer in that case was denied by a vote of four to three of the justices of the Supreme Court. The remittitur went down and, on July 6, 1920, the commissioners were served with the peremptory writ of mandate. Relying on the statement in the opinion that their former action had been arbitrary, the commissioners again cited the officer for examination as to whether his disability had ceased. He again denied the jurisdiction of the commission to take any proceedings in the matter, and obtained from the superior court writs of mandate and prohibition from which appeals were taken to the same division of the District Court of Appeal. On February 24, 1925, that court, upon the authority of its earlier decision, held that, as the commission had no power to hear and judicially determine the fact of physical disability, it could not even cite the officer to appear for a preliminary investigation of the matter, and hence could not charge him with insubordination upon his refusal to appear. 46 Cal. App. Dec. 563. A transfer was granted to the Supreme Court, and that court, in its judgment of September 19, 1925, adopted the opinion of the District Court of Appeal. 197 Cal. 70, 239 P. 844.

In the meantime, however, the electors of San Francisco adopted an amendment by adding section 14 to chapter 10 of article 8 of the charter, which reads as follows: "The judgment of said board of police commissioners in passing upon or determining the question when the disability upon which a pension has been granted has ceased shall be final, unless in passing upon or determining said question said board commit a clear abuse of discretion." Stats. 1923, p. 1267. This amendment was adopted November 7, 1922, and was approved by the Legislature on January 19, 1923, but was not considered or referred to in the cases mentioned because it was not in effect at the time the rights of the parties arose, the acts of the board there under review having been taken on November 15, 1920. There is, therefore, no opinion of any court of this state interpreting either charter amendment, and, as both were manifestly passed for the express purpose of avoiding the rule of the cases cited, these cases cannot be taken as authoritative interpretations of the charter as amended. We must look, therefore, to analogous cases involving the general question whether an administrative board clothed with the power to hear and finally determine a question of fact can be controlled in that determination by the courts, in the absence of a showing of fraud, abuse of discretion, or similar grounds.

We had occasion to consider this question in Fraser v. Cummings, 48 Cal. App. 504, 192 P. 100, 101, a case involving the duty of the city clerk in the examination and certification of petitions filed with him. The Oakland charter, under which the case arose, provided that when petitions for a recall election were filed with the clerk he must "finally determine" whether or not they conform to certain requirements. In holding that his determination was conclusive upon the courts we said:

"In a similar case our supreme court has said that the power conferred upon the registrar of voters by the San Francisco charter to finally determine whether the petition is signed by the requisite number of voters means that he 'must complete his investigations as to the conformity of the petition to legal requirements, and as to the number of lawful signatures, and thereupon * * * finally determine both propositions, and that his decision is final.' Baines v. Zemansky, 176 Cal. 369, 378, 168 P. 565, 569. And again in the same case (176 Cal. 379, 168 P. 570) the court say: 'But that the registrar's decision upon such evidence as he may take is to be final upon both propositions, that is, whether the petition conforms to all legal requirements, and whether it contains sufficient genuine signatures, is evident.' To the same effect is Watts v. Superior Court, 36 Cal. App. 692, 697, 173 P. 183. * * * Where the city clerk refuses to act as required by the charter, or where there is a showing of such an abuse of discretion as would indicate that no discretion was exercised, the courts may by mandamus compel the clerk to perform his duty under the charter. But here the showing is that the clerk did perform his duty and if, in the exercise of that duty, he reached a different conclusion from what this court might reach on the question of the necessity of showing the cross-streets, this court has no jurisdiction to substitute its judgment for his." (Emphasis added.)

This principle is recognized in Dufton v. Daniels, 190 Cal. 577, 581, 213 P. 949, where many cases are cited and the converse of the rule is stated, that where the facts are all admitted, and are susceptible to but one construction, the determination of the board contrary to the admitted facts is merely an erroneous conclusion upon a question of law which may be controlled by mandamus.

Applying these principles to the case here, we find a duty imposed upon the pension board to grant a pension to the surviving widow, if, after a fair and impartial hearing before the board, it finds that the deceased husband met his death while in the performance of duty, and the same duty is imposed upon the board to deny the pension if it finds that such facts do not exist. When, therefore, the board has conducted such a hearing, and there is no charge of fraud, breach of faith, or of discretion, the finding of the board, for or against the petitioner, is final and conclusive. Thus, before the courts can entertain a proceeding to compel the board to act in a particular way, it must appear that the board has committed a breach of the duty thus imposed upon it—that it has failed to perform "an act which the law specially enjoins, as a duty resulting from an office." Code Civ. Proc. § 1085. Here the duty specially enjoined upon the board is the duty to hear and determine the facts, and to render its honest judgment based upon those facts. This duty has been performed in all respects in accordance with the demands of the statute.

There is no claim that the hearing before the board was not fully conducted with due regard for the rights of the petitioner, that the essential facts are admitted or that the evidence is susceptible to but one conclusion, that the board acted fraudulently, capriciously, or arbitrarily, or that there was any abuse of discretion in any course of the proceedings. The whole case of petitioner rests on the plea that the testimony of her witnesses should have been believed, and that the testimony of adverse witnesses should have been disbelieved, upon the vital issue of fact. The people of San Francisco have by their charter conferred upon the board the exclusive jurisdiction to determine these questions of fact—possibly because they believed that that board is best able to judge the credibility of the witnesses in matters of this kind—and the courts are without power to set aside the judgment of the board except in the cases noted. To restate the principle of law involved, when the conceded facts show that the board has performed the duty which the law "specially enjoins," and the evidence is conflicting, but sufficient to support the judgment, mandamus will not lie to compel a different form of judgment, but such relief can be had only upon a showing that there has been a "clear abuse of discretion."

Judgment reversed.

KETELHUT v. GUNTHER et al. (Civ. 6950.) *

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 17, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1001(1)—Verdict supported by evidence could not be disturbed.

Where verdict is supported by evidence, it cannot be disturbed by court of review, although evidence would have justified contrary verdict.

2. Sales ⇨38(1)—Buyers could not show that representations made by seller subsequent to execution of contract induced them to enter therein.

Where seller and buyers entered into a written contract on June 15, 1925, for sale of bakery, in action to recover balance of purchase price, buyers could not show that subsequent representations of seller induced them to enter into contract.

3. Pleading ⇨150—Where parties had treated answer to cross-complaint as sufficient, court properly refused instructions that allegations in cross-complaint should be treated as true.

Where plaintiff stated signature on answer to cross-complaint was not his, court properly refused instructions that allegations of cross-complaint should be considered as true, where parties had treated answer as sufficient.

4. Pleading ⇨345(1)—Where plaintiff denied signature to answer to cross-complaint, denying motion to enter judgment on cross-complaint for defendants was not error.

Court did not err in denying motion to set aside verdict and enter judgment on cross-complaint for defendants, where plaintiff had stated signature on answer thereto was not his, where both parties had treated answer as sufficient, since motion came too late.

5. Sales ⇨347(1)—Seller was entitled to affirmative judgment for money due on contract against buyer for, although seller had re-entered premises, contract had not been terminated.

In action for moneys due on contract for sale of a bakery, where buyers vacated property purchased and seller re-entered premises, contract not having been terminated, seller was entitled to affirmative judgment against buyers.

6. Sales Ⓒ38(7)—Buyers were entitled to rely on representations of seller that bakery business was over $6,000 monthly.

Where means of knowledge were not equally available to both parties, and seller kept no books, representing that bakery business was over $6,000 a month, buyers were entitled to rely upon word of seller, and were not required to make independent investigation.

7. Trial Ⓒ252(13)—Instruction that failure to ascertain truth was result of one's own negligence was erroneous as inapplicable to defense of fraud of seller keeping no books and allegedly misrepresenting amount of business of bakery sold.

In action for moneys due on contract for sale of bakery, where defense was fraud of seller in representing amount of monthly business, and seller kept no books, instruction that, where means of knowledge were equally available to both parties, failure of one to ascertain truth was result of his own negligence was erroneous as inapplicable to facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Frank Ketelhut against Louis Gunther and others. From a judgment for the plaintiff, defendants Louis Gunther and Brown Jackson appeal. Reversed.

George Allan Smith, of Monterey, for appellants.

John G. Robertson, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to recover moneys alleged to be due. The defendants appeared and filed an answer, a counterclaim, and a cross-complaint. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the defendants have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] In points 1, 2, 3, 6, and 7 the defendants cite portions of the record which they claim would have justified a verdict in their favor. Conceding this claim in its entirety, it must also be conceded that there was evidence which supported the verdict. Under these circumstances a court of review may not disturb the verdict.

[2] On the 15th day of June, 1925, the plaintiff as vendor and the defendants as vendees entered into a formal written contract by the terms of which the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendants agreed to buy a bakery in the city of Richmond, Contra Costa county. By the terms of that instrument the sales price was fixed at $12,500. That amount was payable $1,000 on the execution of the agreement, $4,000 not later than November 2, 1925, and promissory notes in the sum of $7,500, to be executed and delivered November 2, 1925. On the delivery of the second payment in cash and the aforesaid notes, the vendor was to surrender possession. The cash payments and notes were delivered as agreed, and the vendees went into possession on November 2, 1925. Between June 15, 1925, and November 2, 1925, the parties held certain conversations. On the trial of the case the defendants sought to show that in those conversations the vendor made certain representations which induced them to enter into the contract, but the trial court instructed the jury that representations made subsequent to June 15, 1925, could not be used for the purpose claimed. The court did not err in giving those instructions.

[3, 4] In their cross-complaint the defendants alleged that the vendor made several misrepresentations for the purpose of inducing them, and which did induce them, to enter into the contract. The plaintiff interposed an answer in which he denied specifically those allegations. On the trial of the action, both parties entered very fully upon the trial of each and every issue so made. However, the plaintiff was called as a witness in rebuttal, and, after being examined by his own counsel, was cross-examined. During that cross-examination the attorney for the defendants sought to impeach him by the allegations of his answer. On being shown the pleading and his attention called to the signature, he stated that it was not his signature. Thereafter the defendants requested and the trial court refused three proposed instructions, which were of the general import that the jury should consider the facts as stated in the cross-complaint as admitted. Both parties had treated the answer as sufficient and had fully introduced their evidence on the issues made by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto. The proposed instructions were properly refused. Henderson v. Northam, 176 Cal. 493, 168 P. 1044. Still making the same contention, at a later date, the defendants made a motion to set aside and vacate the verdict and judgment entered thereon and to enter the default of the plaintiff on the cross-complaint. The motion was denied. In making the order denying the motion, the trial court did not err. The attack came too late.

[5] After the defendants entered into possession November 2, 1925, they did not find business as good as they expected. One or more of them continued to operate the business until some time in January, 1926. At about that time each and all had withdrawn, and plaintiff again went into possession. Our attention has not been called to any fact which operated to terminate the contract. Nevertheless, the defendants now contend that the trial court erred in entering any affirmative judgment against the defendants because the plaintiff held $5,000 in cash and promissory notes in the sum of $7,500. There is no merit in the claim.

[6] The defendants requested, and the trial court refused, an instruction worded as follows: "You are instructed that if the plaintiff made the alleged false representations charged by the defendants and cross-complainants they were entitled to take the word of the plaintiff therefor, and were not required to make an independent investigation of their own to verify the same, or to ascertain the truth or falsity thereof." It was apparently a sound statement of the law, and should have been given.

[7] Acting upon the request of the plaintiff, the trial court gave an instruction which was worded as follows: "I instruct you that in general, parties must rely upon their own judgment and investigate before making contracts. Consequently, where there is no relation of especial trust or confidence, and where the means of knowledge are at hand and are equally available to both parties, and the subject matter is alike open to their inspection, if one of them does not avail himself of those means and opportunities when he might readily ascertain the truth by ordinary care and attention his failure to do so is the result of his own negligence and he will not be heard to say that he was deceived by the other's misrepresentations." The defendants contend that the instruction was an erroneous statement of the law applicable to the facts of this case. The plaintiff replies that the instruction is a correct statement of the law, and he cites Oppenheimer v. Clunie, 142 Cal. 313, 321, 75 P. 899; Board of Commissioners of Funded Debt of City of San Jose v. Younger, 29 Cal. 172, 176; 12 Cal. Jur. 756. The language relied on in the Oppenheimer Case was addressed to "the condition of the exits and stairways" of a theater. The language used in the Younger Case was used with reference to the quantity of land contained in a tract which either party could have had surveyed. The instruction, as given, is a verbatim copy of a portion of section 33 of the article "Fraud and Deceit," 12 Cal. Jur. In the instant case, if the instruction as given had been confined to the physical property which was the subject of the sale, it might not have been objectionable. However, the principal contention of the defendants was based on a written statement made by the plaintiff, in which he stated that the business of the bakery was "over $6,000 monthly." Furthermore, the contradicted evidence was that the plaintiff kept no books. As to the past accounts of the vendor, it may not be said "the means of knowledge are at hand and are equally available to both parties." The errors in giving and refusing instructions which we have just noticed struck at the very roots of the case which the defendants were attempting to present on their cross-complaint, and were highly prejudicial to them.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. NUICH. (Cr. 1831.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Aug. 21, 1929.

1. Witnesses $\Rightarrow$ 393(3)—Refusing to permit reading of testimony from document offered as transcript of testimony in preliminary examination held not error.

In prosecution for unlawful possession of a still, where no proof was offered to show that document was transcript of testimony in preliminary examination of defendant, refusing to permit counsel to read testimony from such document offered for purpose of impeachment was not error.

2. Intoxicating liquors $\Rightarrow$ 223(2)—Evidence showing possession of still did not vary from charge of possession of still worm, still cap, and still condenser.

Charge of possession of still worm, still rap, still condenser and distilling device was sufficient charge of possession of a still shown by evidence, especially in view of stipulation of defendant's counsel.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Tony Nuich was convicted of possession of a still, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John Hyland and B. M. Marble, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. By information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county the defendant, Tony Nuich, was charged with the "crime of Possession of Still, a Felony, committed as follows: That the said Tony Nuich on or about the 24th day of November, 1928, at and in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously own, operate and cause to be operated, and knowingly have in his possession and control, a certain Still Worm, Still Cap, Still Condenser and Distilling Device, designed, used and intended to be used in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes." The jury returned a verdict of guilty, as charged, and in due course the defendant was sentenced by the court to the penitentiary for the period prescribed by statute.

In his plea for a reversal of the judgment appellant urges that the court erred in rulings made in connection with the offer of certain testimony, and also urges that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence.

[1] It is urged by appellant that in two instances the court erred in sustaining objections of the district attorney to the reading of what purported to be the testimony of a witness given in the preliminary examination. This testimony was offered for the purpose of impeachment and objected to by the district attorney. The court refused to permit the reading of the testimony on the ground that it was not upon a material matter, and, furthermore, that there was no proper foundation laid. There was no error in these rulings. There was no proof offered even to show that the document from which counsel was reading was the transcript of the testimony in the preliminary examination of the defendant; nor was it proven or admitted that the witness had testified as it appeared from the transcript. It was stipulated by the district attorney that the defendant was a witness in the preliminary examination, but the necessary foundation was still lacking for the introduction of the alleged testimony.

[2] In support of the contention that the verdict is contrary to the law and contrary to the evidence, it is urged that the information charged the defendant with having "possession and control of a certain still-worm, still-cap, still-condenser and distilling device, designed, used and intended to be used in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes," while the evidence showed possession of a still. Defendant urges that these specific devices designated do not constitute a still. There is no merit in this contention, particularly in view of the fact that counsel for the defendant during the trial stipulated as follows: "We will stipulate the still is a complete still, fit for the production of alcoholic beverages containing more than one-half of one per cent. fit for beverage purposes." It was further stipulated by counsel for the defendant that the still had mash on the inside of it.

Several other points are raised as to the rulings of the court in connection with testimony offered. We have examined all of the alleged errors, and find that the court's rulings were proper, and not subject to legal criticism.

The judgment is affirmed.

WEBSTER MFG. CO. v. BYRNES et al.

BYRNES v. WEBSTER MFG. CO.★

(S. F. 12641.)

Supreme Court of California. July 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 15, 1929.

- 1. Warehousemen ⇨7—Warehouse in 1925, as public utility, might sell, lease, or incurber operative property without Railroad Commission's consent (Public Utilities Act, § 51(a)).

Where warehouses were not brought until 1927 under operation of Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386), § 51(a), providing that certain specific public utilities therein enumerated can neither sell, lease, nor incurber their property without consent of Railroad Commission, on March 21, 1925, warehouse, as public utility, might sell, lease, or incurber its operative property without consent of Railroad Commission.

- 2. Mortgages ⇨1—Deed of trust, though secondary evidence of indebtedness, is only ancillary to debt as security.

While deed of trust may be secondary evidence of indebtedness, it is not debt itself, but at most is but ancillary to it, as security for its payment.

- 3. Mortgages ⇨1, 51—Deed of trust need not contain covenant to pay, but, if it does, it is evidence of indebtedness.

It is not necessary that deed of trust or mortgage contain covenant to pay, and, if it does so contain such covenant to pay, it would then be both an evidence of indebtedness and deed of trust; note and mortgage or deed of trust to secure it being one debt and one transaction.

- 4. Public service commissions ⇨6—Act providing that public utility cannot refund note payable within year by notes or "other" evidence of indebtedness without commission's consent means other preceding evidences of indebtedness, as bonds, etc. (Public Utilities Act, § 52(b)).

In Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 52(b), by use of word "other" in portion providing that public utility may issue notes for proper purposes payable within year after issuance without consent of Railroad Commission, but that no note shall, in whole or in part, be refunded by any issue of stocks or stock certificates, or bonds, notes of any term or character, or any "other" evidence of indebtedness, without consent of commission, was meant, under doctrine of ejusdem generis, such evidences of indebtedness as had preceded it, as bonds, notes, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Other.]

5. Corporations ⚡449—Public Utilities Act, abridging right of contract, should receive reasonable interpretation.

Provisions of Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386), abridging to certain extent right of contract, should receive reasonable interpretation, in light of purposes sought to be accomplished by them.

6. Public service commissions ⚡6—Under act prohibiting certain public utilities from incumbering property without commission's consent, certain utilities enumerated may not under any circumstances so incumber property (Public Utilities Act, § 51(a)).

Under Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 51(a), providing that certain public utility corporations shall not sell, lease, assign, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of or incumber property necessary or useful in performance of their duties to public, without first securing consent of Railroad Commission, utilities enumerated may not under any circumstances incumber property without consent of commission.

7. Public service commissions ⚡6—Under statute, long-term indebtedness cannot be created by public utility including deed of trust without Railroad Commission's consent (Public Utilities Act, § 52(b)).

Under Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 52(b), providing public utility may issue evidences of indebtedness, payable within 12 months after date, to acquire property for construction, completion, extension, or improvement of facilities, or for improvement or maintenance of service, or to refund obligations, or for reimbursement of moneys actually expended from income or treasury, not secured by or obtained from such issues, except for maintenance of service and replacements, providing it secures from commission authorization for issue, long-term indebtedness may not be created without consent of commission, including deed of trust, if given to secure indebtedness.

8. Public service commissions ⚡6—Short-term notes of public utilities, for proper purposes and not refunding previous short-term notes, may be issued as security without commission's consent (Public Utilities Act, § 51(a)).

Under Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 51(a), providing that enumerated public utilities shall not sell, lease, assign, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of or incumber property necessary or useful in performance of duties to public, without first securing commission's authorization, short-term notes, if executed for proper purposes and not as refund of previous short-term notes, may be issued as security without consent of Railroad Commission; section 52(d), providing that all evidences of indebtedness of public utility issued without commission's authorization shall be void, being applicable only to evidences of indebtedness as law requires to have consent of railroad commission.

9. Corporations ⚡449—Warrant to abridge right of contract should be found in statute.

Plain warrant to abridge right of contract should be found in language of statute for so doing.

10. Warehousemen ⚡7—Note representing money borrowed for current expenses of warehouse held valid, under statute authorizing public utility to issue notes for "proper purposes" (Public Utilities Act, § 52(b)).

In absence of plain declaration to contrary, phrase "proper purposes," in Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 52(b), providing that public utility may issue notes for proper purposes payable within year after issuance without consent of Railroad Commission, means any outlay necessary or proper to promote legitimate objects of public utility, such as a warehouse concern, and note may properly be issued for current expenses, so that note held by one as representing money borrowed by warehouse for current expenses is valid.

11. Warehousemen ⚡7—Notes secured by former mortgages, and sums paid for taxes, insurance, and equipment, held not short-term notes which might be refunded by other notes issued without commission's consent (Public Utilities Act, § 52(b)).

Former notes secured by former mortgages and deeds of trust on real property of warehouse, that had been placed thereon by predecessors in title and assumed by purchasers as part of purchase price of warehouse concern, and sums paid for taxes and insurance authorized under deeds of trust, and amount paid for completion of title to machinery and equipment purchased under conditional sales contract, to place full title in utility, though "previous indebtedness," held not short-term notes, which might be refunded by other notes issued by warehouse concern, under Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 52(b), without consent of Railroad Commission.

12. Warehousemen ⚡7—Where material portion of note claimed issued in violation of statute is valid and severable, illegal portion would not avail defendants in action to determine adverse claims to utility (Public Utility Act, § 52(b)).

As regards validity of note issued by warehouse concern in claimed violation of Public Utility Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 52(b), so long as any material portion of note payable within year given to refund indebtedness of warehouse concern is valid and severable, any illegal portion thereof would not avail defendants in action to determine adverse claims to property formerly used as a warehouse, as note would be pro tanto valid, and deed of trust to secure same would likewise be valid, and regular sale thereunder would pass title to property.

13. Corporations ⚡673—That foreign corporation purchased warehouse at trustee's sale was no proof of intention to operate public utility (Public Utilities Act, § 26).

Fact that foreign corporation purchased indumbered public utility warehouse at trustee's sale was no proof of its intention to operate public utility, as prohibited by Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 26, since it might transfer property to person qualified to engage in business, or might use property for some other legitimate business.

14. Corporations ⚡656—Objection that foreign corporation could not conduct warehouse purchased can be made only by state (Public Utilities Act, § 26).

Inasmuch as Public Utilities Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6386) § 26, prohibits foreign corporation, not previously engaged in public utility business within state, to carry on public utility business in California, and declares purchase by corporation void, contention that corporation buying warehouse could not carry on business lies alone with people of state, and is not question that defendants in action to determine adverse claims to property formerly used as a warehouse could avail themselves of.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Action by the Webster Manufacturing Company against Charles W. Byrnes and others, in which the named defendant cross-complained against plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 271 P. 771.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley (Harri-son S. Robinson, Harry L. Price, and R. W. Macdonald, all of Oakland, amici curiæ), for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Action to determine adverse claims to certain real property, formerly used as a warehouse, situated in Alameda county. Defendants answered by denial of the asserted claim of ownership by plaintiff. Defendant Charles W. Byrnes in addition cross-complained against plaintiff, alleging ownership of said property in himself. To this issue plaintiff interposed a denial. Plaintiff had judgment as prayed for. Defendants have appealed. The facts are undisputed.

On and prior to March 21, 1925, Western Milling Company, later named Oakland Terminal & Elevator Corporation, was admittedly a public utility, to wit, a warehouse, under Public Utilities Act of California (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 2683, Act 6386) § 2 (aa). Said concern being involved financially, three sets of its creditors sat down with it on said above-mentioned day and composed their several demands against it, settling between themselves the matter of priority of their respective claims and agreeing upon a system of providing security for them. As a result three promissory notes, each payable in less than 12 months, were executed by the corporation, the first to plaintiff for the sum of $210,000, the second in a similar amount, and the third and last one for $200,000, in favor of defendants Williams, Hawkins, and Wholey. To secure the payment of these several notes, three deeds of trust were executed by said public utility, covering the real property in dispute, and perhaps as well some personal property then in use as a part of the operating equipment of said concern. It was stipulated that the several notes and deeds of trust when completed should be deposited in escrow, and the deeds of trust recorded in the order above mentioned, and they were in fact so filed for record by the escrow party.

On or about February 24, 1926, the beneficiaries under said third deed of trust assigned their note, carrying said security therefor, to defendant Charles W. Byrnes, who on said date abandoned the security for said debt and filed an action at law against said public utility, causing a writ of attachment to be issued and levied upon the real property, the subject of this suit. On April 20, 1926, said Byrnes was awarded judgment, defendant having defaulted, and thereafter on May 25, 1926, the sheriff sold under execution the said real property, subject to redemption, and the said Charles W. Byrnes became the purchaser thereof. On May 11, 1926, however, after due notice given, the trustee named in the first deed of trust sold the real property, the subject of this action, pursuant to the terms of said security, and thereafter plaintiff in this action became the purchaser thereof. Under this situation the plaintiff here and said Byrnes became rival claimants to said property, plaintiff claiming under the sale under said trust deed and defendant Byrnes under said execution sale. Soon thereafter, and prior to October 6, 1926, the present action was instituted.

The proceeding under which plaintiff claims and the proceeding under which defendant claims are both regular on their face; hence, if the proceeding under the deed of trust is valid, it is prior in time and first in right. Defendants assert that the deed of trust is void, because made without the consent of the railroad commission. Secondly, they claim that the note is void in part, because a portion of the consideration was for operating expense, which is forbidden, it is said, and the remainder of the note is for a refund of previous indebtedness, and, being made without the consent of the commission, is likewise void. To these claims of invalid-ity is added the further contention that plaintiff, being a foreign corporation and therefore without ability to operate a public utility, was without power to lawfully purchase at said trustee's sale. These several contentions will now be considered.

The pertinent provisions of said Public Utilities Act, as they read on March 21, 1925, are as follows:

Section 51(a): "No railroad corporation, street railroad corporation, pipe line corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, telegraph corporation or water corporation, shall henceforth sell, lease, assign, mortgage or otherwise dispose of or encumber the whole or any part of its railroad, street railroad, line, plant or system, necessary or useful in the performance of its duties to the public * * * without having first secured from the commission an order authorizing it so to do. * * *"

Section 52(a): "The power of public utilities to issue stocks and stock certificates, and bonds, notes and other evidences of indebtedness and to create liens on their property situated within this state is a special privilege, the right of supervision, regulation, restriction and control of which is and shall continue to be vested in the state, and such power shall be exercised as provided by law and under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe."

Section 52(b): "A public utility may issue stocks and stock certificates, and bonds, notes and other evidences of indebtedness payable at periods of more than twelve months after the date thereof, for the following purposes and no others, namely, for the acquisition of property, or for the construction, completion, extension or improvement of its facilities, or for the improvement or maintenance of its service, or for the discharge or lawful refunding of its obligations, or for the reimbursement of moneys actually expended from income or from any other moneys in the treasury of the public utility not secured by or obtained from the issue of stocks or stock certificates, or bonds, notes or other evidences of indebtedness of such public utility, for any of the aforesaid purposes except maintenance of service and replacements, in cases where the applicant shall have kept its accounts and vouchers for such expenditures in such manner as to enable the commission to ascertain the amount of moneys so expended and the purposes for which such expenditure was made: * * * Provided, that such public utility, in addition to the other requirements of law, shall first have secured from the commission an order authorizing such issue and stating the amount thereof and the purpose or purposes to which the issue or the proceeds thereof are to be applied. * * * A public utility may issue notes, for proper purposes and not in violation of any provision of this act or any other act, payable at periods of not more than twelve months after the date of issuance of the same, without the consent of the commission, but no such note shall, in whole or in part, be refunded by any issue of stocks or stock certificates, or bonds, notes of any term or character or any other evidence of indebtedness, without the consent of the commission."

Section 52(d): "All stock and every stock certificate, and every bond, note or other evidence of indebtedness, of a public utility, issued without an order of the commission authorizing the same then in effect, shall be void. * * *"

[1] Under section 51(a) certain specific public utilities therein enumerated can neither sell, lease, nor incumber their property without the consent of the Railroad Commission. While warehouses have always been classified as public utilities, they were not until the legislation of 1927 brought under the operation of this section; hence we have reached the conclusion that on March 21, 1925, certain public utilities, of which the Western Milling Company was one, unless by other provisions of said act prohibited, might sell, lease, or incumber their operative property without the consent of the Railroad Commission.

Under section 52(a) we find a declaration of the fundamental policy behind this character of legislation, and from this announcement we gather that the power of the Legislature over the issuance of indebtedness and over the creation of liens is plenary, if asserted, and we even find authority for the promulgation of regulations upon this subject by the commission itself.

Under section 52(b) we find no limitation upon sales or leases of a public utility, but we do find a limitation upon the authority of any public utility to issue long-term bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness without the consent of the commission, and we further find that such indebtedness may be incurred only for certain specified purposes. In the same section, however, we find a provision allowing temporary financing by the execution of short-term notes, to wit, notes payable in not more than 12 months, the language in this behalf being: "A public utility may issue notes, for proper purposes and not in violation of any provision of this act or any other act, payable at periods of not more than twelve months after the date of issuance of the same, without the consent of the commission, but no such note shall, in whole or in part, be refunded by any * * * notes of any term or character or any other evidence of indebtedness, without the consent of the commission."

Coupling this last provision with the above-quoted provision of section 52(d), which is to the effect that every note or other evidence of indebtedness, issued without order of the commission, is void, we have the question squarely presented; Is a deed of trust given without the consent of the Railroad Commission, to secure a valid short term note of a public utility, of a class other than those mentioned in section 51(a), void because forbidden by section 52(d), or any other provision of said Public Utilities Act?

[2, 3] We find nothing at any place in said act to compel, or even make logical, any such conclusion. While a deed of trust may truly be secondary evidence of indebtedness, it is not the debt itself, but at most is but ancillary to it, to wit, security for its payment. It could not be said that, if a note was secured by a deed of trust or mortgage, there had thereby been created two debts. The expression "other evidence of indebtedness," found in section 52(b), means such evidence of indebtedness as is "payable" at periods in the future. Is a deed of trust, divorced from the debt secured by it, payable at any period? Certainly not. It is not necessary that a deed of trust or mortgage contain a covenant to pay, and, if it does so contain such covenant, it would then be both an evidence of indebtedness and a deed of trust. A note and the mortgage or deed of trust to secure it is one debt and one transaction.

Considerable light is shed upon this question by the provisions of section 52(a), where we find the issuing or creation of indebtedness separately segregated from the expression "and to create liens on their property," and thus we have a legislative recognition that the former does not include the latter. No reason exists for giving the same expression any broader or different meaning, when it is met in section 52(d). Indeed, the language of that section, if given its literal import, would clash with the above-considered portion of section 52(b) relating to short term notes, for said literal language is "* * * every * * * note * * * shall be void. * * *"

Much authority has been cited by counsel on both sides intended to throw light upon the question of whether a deed of trust or mortgage is included within the term "evidences of indebtedness." We doubt not that circumstances might exist where it would be proper to hold that a mortgage or a deed of trust was included in the said phrase, but in the act we are considering such is plainly not the case. We are pointed to the fact that, in several of the states of the Union having acts similar to our own, a distinction between the two expressions is maintained. In Barry v. Snowden (C. C.) 106 F. 571, a proper distinction, in harmony with our conclusion, is pointed out. The same is true of Wood v. Williams, 142 Ill. 269, 31 N. E. 681, 34 Am. St. Rep. 79, and Schifferstein v. Allison, 123 Ill. 662, 15 N. E. 275, 276.

[4] In fact, we reach the same conclusion by an application of the rule of ejusdem generis, from which it must be concluded that by the use of the word "other" was meant such "evidences of indebtedness" as had preceded it, to wit, bonds, notes, etc. People v. Chretien, 137 Cal. 450, 70 P. 305; In re Johnson, 167 Cal. 142, 145, 138 P. 740.

[5] The right of contract is by the statute abridged to a certain extent, and no reason exists for making an application of the statute not plainly warranted by the language employed in it. In fact, these provisions should receive a reasonable interpretation, in the light of the purposes sought to be accomplished by them. Southern Sierras Power Co. v. Railroad Commission (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 747.

[6-8] Our conclusion, therefore, is that under section 51(a) certain public utilities may not under any circumstances incur their property without proper consent of the commission; that under section 52(b) long-term indebtedness may not be created without consent of the commission, and this, of course, would mean that a deed of trust, if given to secure such indebtedness, would also require such consent, for in that case the security would be an incident to the issuance of the obligation; but as to short-term notes of a public utility, not mentioned in section 51(a), if executed for proper purposes, and not as a refund of previous short-term notes, neither the issuance thereof nor the giving of security as an incident thereto requires the consent of the Railroad Commission. This seems to be the plain legislative intent, and creates no friction between the various sections under consideration. The most that it does is to require that section 52(d) be held applicable only to such stock, stock certificate, bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness as the law requires to have the consent of the Railroad Commission.

This holding is also consonant with reason, for without the consent of the commission liens and incumbrances might be imposed upon the property of a public utility by attachment, execution, and perhaps other methods, and if this could be done without the consent of either the commission or the public utility, why could not the utility voluntarily pledge or incur its property as security for such debt? The ability to pledge or incur might be the only method by which a concern of this type could secure the credit necessary to survive. The very fact that defendant Byrnes, without the consent of the commission, could abandon his deed of trust and secure attachment and execution liens, argues strongly for the power in the debtor to voluntarily create such a lien in a case where the consent of the commission is not necessary to the creation of the indebtedness.

[9, 10] But our inquiry takes us to a consideration of the note in this case. The first contention is that the words "for proper purposes," found in section 52(b), when applied to short-term notes, must be construed to have the same meaning as is embraced in the specific purposes thereinabove pointed out respecting long-term notes, and no others, or, in other words, that this phrase excludes the issuance of short-term notes to defray operating or current expenses, and that a portion of the note in question was issued for this purpose. If such was the legislative intent, it could have been easily stated, and the matter not left in doubt. But here again we are asked to abridge the right of contract, and plain warrant should be found in the language of the statute for so doing. The object of long-term obligations is usually very different from the object of short-term obligations. The usual purpose of such obligations is to build up a permanent capital investment. The issuance of short-term notes is for emergency or temporary financing. The right, even to the extent of obtaining funds for current expenses, may be of vital importance to the corporation. We therefore conclude that, in the absence of a plain declaration to the contrary, "proper purposes" means any outlay necessary or proper to promote the legitimate objects of a public utility of the type concerned, and that such a note may properly be issued for current expenses; hence so much of the note held by plaintiff as represents money borrowed for current expenses is valid.

Next, it is claimed that the note is void because the other items therein contained are a mere refund of existing obligations, and hence the consent of the commission to its issuance was required. It is to be noted that the short-term obligation authorized by section 52(b) is a note. No other evidences of indebtedness are enumerated. It is also to be noted that, with respect to the matter of refunding, the refunding is of a note previously issued as a short-term note, and is not the mere recasting of every kind of a previous obligation. In the case before us the note in question was largely given for the following purposes: At the time it was executed the public utility was in a maze of financial entanglements. Plaintiff had judgments against it, aggregating some $130,000, upon which execution sales had resulted at which plaintiff had become the purchaser, and the time for redemption was fast expiring. In addition, the public utility was liable to plaintiff upon obligations of various types in the amount of this note, $210,000. To these were added the debts secured by the two junior deeds of trust. The utility was making one final effort to extricate itself. The deed of trust to plaintiff here in question was the result of a compromise and concessions on the part of plaintiff. It gave the utility res-pitate for a period of nine months. The consideration for this note, in addition to the items therein for operating expenses, was:

[11, 12] Former notes secured by former mortgages and deeds of trust upon said real property, that had been placed thereon by the predecessors in title and assumed by the public utility as a part of the purchase price of the property, and this before it ever became a part of the operative property of the utility. These obligations had fallen into the hands of plaintiff. In this connection, large sums were paid for taxes and insurance, and these were authorized under the mortgages and deeds of trust, and these sums in the same way became a part of this note. To this should be added a large amount for the completion of title to machinery and equipment purchased under conditional sale contracts, and upon the execution of the note and security full title was placed in the utility. While these several items are previous indebtedness, we cannot see that they are short-term notes of the utility, which were by the note in question refunded. The object of this provision of said act was evidently to forbid the circumvention by an endless chain process of the requirement as to consent for long-term notes, but we cannot see that the prohibition is leveled at the transaction here disclosed. Moreover, so long as any material portion of said note is valid and severable, any illegal portion thereof would not avail defendants in this action, as the note would be pro tanto valid, and the deed of trust to secure same would likewise be valid, and, of course, a regular sale thereunder would pass the title to the property. Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A. L. R. 725; Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 267; Innes v. Goldwater, 30 Cal. App. 101, 157 P. 18; Granger v. Original Empire Mill & Mining Co., 59 Cal. 678.

[13, 14] Lastly, we are to consider the contention that under section 26 of said Public Utilities Act a foreign corporation, not previously engaged in a public utility business, may not carry on any such business in California, and therefore could not purchase at the trustee's sale under said deed of trust. In the first place, as to the public utility here involved, a certificate of convenience and necessity was not at the time in question required to enter such business, nor was the consent of said commission required to discontinue said business. It is difficult, therefore, to come to the conclusion that a creditor may not purchase foreclosed property in order to secure payment of the indebtedness to him. The fact that this corporation purchased the incumbered property at the sale is no proof of its intention to operate the public utility. It might transfer the property to a person qualified to engage in that business, or it might use the property for some other legitimate business. Besides, inasmuch as the statute does declare a purchase by such a corporation void, an objection of this kind lies alone with the people of the state of California, and is not a question that defendants can avail themselves of. Spring Valley W. W. v. San Francisco, 22 Cal. 434, 439; Blochman Commercial Bank v. F. G. Investment Co., 177 Cal. 762, 171 P. 943; McCann v. Children's Home Soc., 176 Cal. 359, 168 P. 355.

It follows from the above that the action of the court below was proper, and its judgment is hereby affirmed.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff, a public utility, formerly called Western Milling Company, pleading its own infirmity and want of power, sued the defendants to enjoin proceedings under a deed of trust covering both real and personal property, executed by it, naming defendant Mercantile Trust Company as trustee and defendant Webster Manufacturing Company as beneficiary, and to have same removed as a cloud upon the title to its property. Defendants answered, denying invalidity in said deed of trust, and by cross-complaint set up the fact that a sale had been had thereunder, at which defendant Webster Manufacturing Company became the purchaser and received a deed to said property from the trustee. The prayer of the cross-complaint was that the title of said defendant under said sale be declared valid, and that a receiver be appointed to manage and control the property pending the termination of the litigation. Defendants had judgment as prayed for under their cross-complaint, which judgment this court, upon authority of case No. 12641, Webster Mfg. Co. v. Byrnes, this day decided, 280 P. 101, has this day affirmed. See case S. F. No. 12236, Oakland Terminal & Elevator Corporation v. Mercantile Trust Co. et al., 280 P. 107.

After said above-mentioned cause was at issue upon the amended and supplemental complaint and amended and supplemental answer and cross-complaint, cross-complainants moved the court for the appointment of a receiver, alleging title in themselves, the insolvency of plaintiff, the commission of waste by it in connection with the property, and neglect thereof. Upon these and other facts the court appointed a receiver to take charge of said property. The plaintiff appealed from this order.

Inasmuch as said deed of trust has been declared valid (Webster Mfg. Co. v. Byrnes, supra), and has been held sufficient to pass title to the purchaser, the receivership was impressed upon property not owned by plaintiff, but owned by the cross-complainant, Webster Mfg. Company. All questions, therefore, are now moot, and this order appointing said receiver is likewise hereby affirmed.

MILLER et al. v. CITY OF PALO ALTO.*
(S. F. 12612.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨739(2)—City held not liable for destruction of buildings outside city by fire negligently allowed to spread from burning garbage deposited on vacant property.

Where city, as part of governmental functions, removed garbage from incinerator and deposited it on vacant property outside city while certain materials were hot and burning, as result of which fire spread to adjoining property and completely destroyed buildings, city was not liable for negligence in failing to keep fire under control, since governmental function of disposing of garbage was not completed until ashes were disposed of, and city owed no duty to keep premises within quarter of a mile free or clear of debris or deposits.

2. Eminent domain ⇨15—Destruction of property by fire spreading from garbage deposited by city did not constitute taking of private property for "public use."

Where city, in exercise of governmental functions, removed and deposited outside city burning garbage collected within city, from which fire spread and destroyed buildings, destruction of buildings was not a taking of private property for public use, since "public use" is a use which concerns whole community, as distinguished from particular individuals; public usefulness, utility, or advantage, or what is productive of general benefit; a use by or for government, the general public, or some portion of it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by Stephen Miller and others against the City of Palo Alto. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Miller & Thornton, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Norman E. Malcolm and Leon Thomas David, both of Palo Alto, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This appeal is by the plaintiffs from a judgment against them, rendered after a demurrer to their complaint had been sustained, upon the ground that said complaint failed to state a cause of action, and plaintiffs had declined to amend.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs Stephen and Ida M. Miller are husband and wife, and at the times mentioned therein were the owners of certain described real property in the county of Santa Clara, California, upon which certain buildings were situated; that said buildings were insured against fire by the other plaintiffs; that on or about the 9th day of October, 1926, the defendant, city of Palo Alto, a municipal corporation, "in the carrying out and performing of its duties and powers as such municipal corporation, as aforesaid, caused to be taken from an incinerator constructed by it for the purpose of burning garbage collected within the bounds of said city, and to be removed to and deposited on vacant property about one-quarter of a mile southeasterly from the premises and property aforesaid of the said plaintiffs Stephen Miller and Ida M. Miller, certain materials that were hot and burning, and carelessly and negligently failed to take, or cause to be taken, any care or caution of any kind or character to keep the fire that was burning in said materials confined thereto, or to prevent the fire that was burning in said materials from spreading to adjoining or other property; that, by reason of such carelessness and negligence on the part of said defendant city of Palo Alto, the fire, which was burning as aforesaid in said materials at the time they were deposited as aforesaid on said vacant property, spread to, along and through dry grass, weeds, stubble and other inflammable materials on the ground between the place where said materials were so deposited and the premises and property aforesaid of the said plaintiffs Stephen Miller and Ida M. Miller, and burned and completely destroyed said property and all thereof."

[1] It is conceded by plaintiffs and appellants that a municipal corporation is not liable for damages caused by its negligence, or that of its employees in the exercise of governmental functions, unless it is expressly made liable by statute, and it is also conceded that in the collection and disposal of garbage a municipal corporation exercises governmental functions. Appellants insist, however, that the complaint is not based upon negligence of the corporation or its employees in the performance of governmental functions, but upon the negligence of defendant after its governmental functions had ceased. The controversy resolves itself into a determination of what is included in a disposition of garbage. The trial court held that, when incineration is the method of disposal used by a municipality, the process is not completed until the ashes are disposed of, and we see no escape from the logic of this conclusion.

Appellants rely upon the case of Savannah v. Jones, 149 Ga. 139, 99 S. E. 294. In that case, an employee of the city, in collecting garbage, left the lid of one of the receptacles from which the garbage was taken open and in a position where a pedestrian, walking along the sidewalk, collided with it and sustained injuries. The court held that at the time of the injury the city had ceased the exercise of its governmental functions, and was under the duty of keeping its streets and sidewalks free from obstruction, and liability was based upon this ground. In the instant case, the plaintiffs are without the corporate limits of Palo Alto, and the city owes no duty to them to keep the premises within a quarter of a mile from plaintiffs' premises free or clear from debris or deposits. The cases are differentiable upon this ground.

The case of Louisville v. Hehemann, 161 Ky. 523, 171 S. W. 165, L. R. A. 1915C, 747, also relied upon by appellants, involved a continuing nuisance, where the city deposited garbage in a street for a long period of time, which garbage became a putrefying mass, and injured the health and destroyed the lives of persons living in the vicinity. This case is also differentiable from the instant case, where no nuisance is alleged, although it is urged by appellants that the deposit of the burning rubbish constituted a nuisance, and upon this ground the city is liable. However, as held by the trial court, the complaint does not allege a nuisance within our statutory definition of such, nor does it allege facts from which a nuisance may be inferred. It alleges a single act of negligence on the part of the city.

[2] There is no merit in appellants' contention that the injury of which they complain constitutes a taking of private property for public use. A public use is "a use which concerns the whole community, as distinguished from a particular individual or a particular number of individuals; public usefulness, utility, or advantage, or what is productive of general benefit; a use by or for the government, the general public, or some portion of it." 32 Cyc. 1255, and cases there cited.

The judgment is affirmed.

LANE et al. v. SAN DIEGO ELECTRIC RY. CO. (L. A. 9533.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 24, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ☞671 (9)—Finding, that maintenance of street car tracks on sidewalk in front of plaintiff's property did not interfere with access to property, held not sustained by evidence.

In action to enjoin maintenance of street car tracks, finding, that plaintiffs were not prevented from having free ingress or egress over their property by reason of construction of tracks, held not sustained by evidence showing car tracks seriously interfered with access to plaintiffs' lot, and showing damage by running of street cars over sidewalk in front of plaintiffs' business house.

2. Highways ☞85—Abutting owner on highway has private rights arising from ownership of property, regardless whether he owns fee of highway.

Abutting owner on highway has public right enjoyed in common with other citizens, and private rights arising from ownership of property contiguous to highway not given to public generally, regardless whether fee of highway is in him or not.

3. Eminent domain ☞85—Abutting landowner on public highway has easement, which cannot be damaged or taken away without due compensation.

Abutting landowner on public highway has special right of easement and user in public road for access purposes, which is property right which cannot be damaged or taken away from him without due compensation.

4. Municipal corporations ☞669, 670—Abutting landowner on street can disturb street and sidewalks, if necessary and done in reasonable manner.

Abutting landowner on public highway in municipality has limited right to disturb highway and sidewalks by reason of business or household exigencies, but such use must be necessary and reasonable, and obstruction cannot exist for long periods each day.

5. Municipal corporations ☞669—Obstruction of abutting owner's access to public street constitutes "private and public nuisance" (Civ. Code, §§ 3479-3481).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3479-3481, obstruction of abutting owner's access to public street constitutes "private" as well as "public nuisance."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Private Nuisance; Public Nuisance.]

6. Municipal corporations $\S$ 671 (1, 5)—Abutting owner may sue in damages, or for injunction, for impairment of private easement in street in front of property (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 731).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 731, injury to use of street, which impairs abutting owner's private easement in street in front of, and adjacent to, his property, amounts to injury giving one right to maintain action for damages, or for injunction.

7. Eminent domain $\S$ 106—Street railroad held not justified in taking plaintiff's property without compensation, by constructing tracks over sidewalk, seriously affecting access to property.

Street railroad held not justified in taking plaintiff's property without compensation, by construction of loop tracks in front of plaintiff's property, resulting in running of street cars over sidewalk in front of property, seriously affecting access to property and causing damage thereto.

8. Municipal corporations $\S$ 671 (7)—That continued use of street car tracks, obstructing access to abutting property, would ripen into prescriptive right, entitled owner to injunction against maintaining tracks, regardless of present damage.

That continued use of street car tracks in front of abutting landowner's property, obstructing access to property, would eventually ripen into prescriptive right, held sufficient to entitle abutting owner to enjoin maintenance of tracks, regardless of present damage.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by John Beach Lane and another against the San Diego Electric Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 273 P. 833.

Luce & Swing, of San Diego, for appellants.

Morrison, Hohfeld, Foerster, Shuman & Clark, of San Francisco, V. F. Bennett, of San Diego, and Read G. Dilworth, of Coronado (C. Coolidge Kreis, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. When this cause was before the District Court of Appeal, an opinion was rendered by said court reversing the judgment herein and directing the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and appellants. This opinion was prepared by Presiding Justice Finch, and concurred in by Justice Plummer and Justice pro tem. Shields. We are in accord with the following portion of said opinion, which we hereby adopt as the decision of this court in said cause:

The plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment herein denying their application for a permanent injunction, restraining the defendant from maintaining its car tracks and operating its cars across the sidewalk and the street immediately adjacent thereto in front of their building.

The defendant owns lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, block 38, La Jolla Park, in the city of San Diego. The plaintiffs own the adjoining lots 7 and 8. All the lots face west on Fay street, with uniform frontage of 25 feet, except lot 1, which has a frontage of 24 feet. The defendant operates a single-track electric street railway along Fay street, but maintains a double track in front of block 38, the westerly track being "intended as a holding track * * * upon which cars could be spotted, or placed," the double track being at the northerly terminus of the line. Prior to any controversy between the parties, the defendant erected a substantial passenger depot on its said lots. In June, 1924, it commenced the construction of a loop consisting of an extension of the easterly track in a right-hand curve around the depot and back to the easterly track at the intersection thereof with the south line of lot 8 extended. The plaintiffs made seasonable objection to the construction of the loop in front of their property during the progress of the work, and they commenced this action prior to the completion thereof, but the defendant proceeded to complete the loop, and has thereafter used it for the purposes intended. Following the loop in the reverse order of that stated, it leaves the easterly track at the southerly line (extended) of lot 8, and, curving to the right, the right-hand rail intersects the curb in front of lot 7 at a point 5½ feet south of the north line (extended) of lot 7, and continues in such a course across the sidewalk that the side of a street car moving over the loop passes within 3½ feet of the corner of that lot, the overhang of the street car around the curve being about 3 feet to the right of the right-hand rail. The defendant constructed a culvert over the gutter at the curb in front of lots 6 and 7, the southerly end thereof extending to about the middle of the curb line in front of lot 7. The sidewalk is 14 feet in width, and the distance from the east rail of the main track to the curb is about 17 feet.

On the plaintiffs' lots, occupying the whole of the front thereof on Fay street, is a one-story brick and tile building used as a garage, the entrance thereof for vehicles being immediately south of the dividing line between lots 7 and 8. There is a door in the northwest corner of the building, opening on Fay street. The building was so planned that the front part thereof, on lot 7, "could be rented as a separate small store." It was constructed of sufficient strength "to carry two additional stories in the front part."

tion," demonstrates that an average automobile or truck cannot be parked in front of lot 7 while a street car is passing over the loop in front of that lot. Defendant's engineer of maintenance and construction testified that, even if the southerly end of the loop were connected with the west track directly west of the present connection, it would not be possible to park an automobile of greater length than 10 feet in front of lot 7 during the passage of a car over the loop. The defendant introduced evidence to the effect that, at the time of the trial, cars passed over the loop at half-hour intervals, but there appears to be nothing to prevent the use of a greater number of cars in the future. In so far as it lies within its power, the city of San Diego has authorized the maintenance of the loop in its present location. The court found: "It has not been established by the evidence that either plaintiffs, or any lessees, or patrons of plaintiffs, are prevented from having free ingress, egress or regress to, on or from the property or buildings upon the property of plaintiffs by reason of the construction of said electric street railway turn-out track or the operation of electric street cars thereover."

[1] It is clear from what has been stated that this finding is contrary to the uncontradicted evidence, which demonstrates that access to lot 7 is substantially and seriously interfered with by the operation of cars over the loop, and it appears, not only from the uncontradicted testimony of the witnesses, but also from the application of common knowledge to the physical facts shown by the map referred to, that the maintenance of the loop in its present location, and the operation of cars thereover, will substantially depreciate the market value of plaintiffs' property. It requires no proof beyond the bare statement of the situation to show that the regular running of street cars over the sidewalk in front of a business house will cause damage.

[2, 3] "An abutting owner has two kinds of rights in a highway, a public right which he enjoys in common with all other citizens, and certain private rights which arise from his ownership of property contiguous to the highway, and which are not common to the public generally; and this regardless of whether the fee of the highway is in him or not. * * * An abutting landowner on a public highway has a special right of easement and user in the public road for access purposes, and this is a property right which cannot be damaged or taken away from him without due compensation." 29 C. J. 547; Fairchild v. Oakland & Bay Shore Ry. Co., 176 Cal. 629, 169 P. 388; Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, 152 Cal. 123, 92 P. 70, 125 Am. St. Rep. 47; Smith v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 146 Cal. 164, 79 P. 868, 106 Am. St. Rep. 17; Eachus v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 P. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149; McLean v. Llewellyn Iron Works, 2 Cal. App. 346, 83 P. 1082, 1085.

[4] "An abutter has a limited right to obstruct the roadway and sidewalks in a municipality by reason of his business or household exigencies, as, for example, by teams and vehicles permitted to stand in front of his property for a reasonable time. * * * And an abutting owner may use the street as for the purpose of loading and unloading goods or merchandise, or transporting his goods or other portable articles to and from his property, but such uses must be necessary and reasonable and the abutting owner cannot obstruct the street for long periods each day." 44 C. J. 956.

"The owner of a lot abutting upon a public street has by reason of such ownership a special easement in such street for the purpose of ingress and egress which is property as fully as the lot itself." Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, supra.

[5, 6] "Anything which is * * * an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, * * * is a nuisance." Civ. Code, § 3479. "A public nuisance is one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons." Civ. Code, § 3480. "Every nuisance not included in the definition of the last section is private." Civ. Code, § 3481. The obstruction of an abutting owner's access to a public street constitutes a private as well as a public nuisance. Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, supra. "An action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected, or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by a nuisance, as the same is defined in section thirty-four hundred and seventy-nine of the Civil Code, and by the judgment in such action the nuisance may be enjoined or abated as well as damages recovered therefor." Code Civ. Proc. § 731. "Any injury to the use of the street which impairs plaintiff's private easements in the street in front of and adjacent to his lot amounts to an injury giving plaintiff, as an abutting owner, the right to maintain an action for damages or for an injunction." Strong v. Sullivan, 180 Cal. 331, 333, 181 P. 59, 60 (4 A. L. R. 343); Sala v. City of Pasadena, 162 Cal. 714, 717, 124 P. 539; Wilcox v. Engebretsen, 160 Cal. 288, 299, 116 P. 750; Danielson v. Sykes, 157 Cal. 686, 691, 109 P. 87, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024; Williams v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 592, 594, 89 P. 330. Respondent relies on a few decisions from other jurisdictions. It is deemed sufficient to say that such decisions are in conflict with the California cases cited herein, and that the latter appear to be in harmony with the great weight of authority. In Fairchild v. Oakland & Bay Shore Ry. Co., supra, it is said that an abutting property owner's right of action for any special or peculiar damage caused by obstruction in a street, not suffered by other property owners, "is precisely one of those rights of action for the damaging of property which, if it did not exist before, came into existence by virtue of our constitutional amendment granting a recovery for the damage as well as for the taking of property for public use."

[7, 8] In Frost v. City of Los Angeles, 181 Cal. 22, 31, 183 P. 342, 346 (6 A. L. R. 468), it is said, quoting 2 Beach, Injunctions, § 1067: "When an injunction to restrain a nuisance will produce great public or private mischief, a court of equity is not bound to grant it merely for the purpose of protecting a technical unsubstantial right." In this case the plaintiffs' right is neither technical nor unsubstantial, but a valuable property right. Neither will the issuance of an injunction "produce great public or private mischief." It does not appear that it would be at all difficult or would involve great expense to so locate an equally serviceable loop as to avoid damage to the plaintiffs' property. But, whatever its necessities were, it was not justified in taking the plaintiffs' property without compensation. Smith v. Southern Pacific R. Co., supra. No public mischief would be produced, even by the abandonment of the southerly connection of the loop, because such change would merely necessitate the switching of the trolley for the return trip, or once every half hour. The fact that the continued use of the southerly end of the loop will eventually ripen into a prescriptive right is a sufficient ground, regardless of any question of present damage, to entitle the plaintiffs to an injunction. Danielson v. Sykes, supra.

RITTER v. RITTER. (L. A. 11203.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 23, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 395, 430(1)—Failure to serve notice of appeal on adverse party and to file cost bond does not require dismissal of appeal.

Appeal will not be dismissed on motion for failure to serve notice of appeal on adverse party and to file a cost bond on the appeal.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 348(1)—Motion to dismiss appeal on ground transcript was not timely filed was denied, where respondent gave no notice of entry of judgment and orders appealed from (Code Civ. Proc. § 953d; Supreme Court Rule 1).

Where appeal was taken from judgment and second appeal was taken from subsequent orders, and both appeals were consolidated by order of Supreme Court within the 40 days allowed for filing of transcript and both transcripts were permitted to be filed together, and respondent failed to give written notice of entry of judgment and orders appealed from to appellant, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 953d, motion to dismiss appeal on ground that transcript was not filed within time prescribed by Supreme Court Rule 1 was denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price and Elias V. Rosencranz, Judges.

Action by Mabel A. Ritter against Clyde E. Ritter. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. On plaintiff's motion to dismiss appeal. Denied.

Le Roy Reames and James R. Jaffray, both of Los Angeles, and John T. Houser, for appellant.

William E. Fox and Brooks Gifford, both of Pasadena, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. In this cause the motion to dismiss is denied as to each appeal. Little time need be consumed in furnishing reasons for this action.

The cause is one for divorce, wherein plaintiff had an interlocutory judgment as well as various orders in her favor for suit money, alimony, and for support of the minor children. The interlocutory decree was granted June 30, 1928. Later a motion for a new trial was denied. On September 19, 1928, notice of appeal therefrom was filed, and on November 16, 1928, a bill of exceptions to support said appeal was settled and filed. On this date, also, a second notice of appeal was filed, directed to certain of the above-mentioned orders or judgments for the payment of money. On December 26, 1928, and within the 40-day period allowed by this court for the filing of a transcript, appellant applied for, and on December 31, 1928, obtained, permission of this court to present both of said appeals in one transcript, and the filing of the transcript upon the first appeal was postponed until the incoming of the record on the second appeal. An additional pertinent fact is that at no time herein involved did respondent give to appellant written notice of the granting of said orders as required by section 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] In this situation, respondent comes on December 27, 1928, with a notice of motion to dismiss both appeals upon the following grounds: (1) Failure to serve on the adverse party the notices of appeal; (2) failure to file a cost bond on said appeals; and (3) failure to file a transcript within the time prescribed by rule 1 of this court.

As to the first two grounds, we need but say that the omitted acts referred to were dispensed with almost a generation ago. The writer learned these facts to his sorrow as early as 1908. See Estate of McPhee, 154 Cal. 385, 97 P. 878.

[2] As to the third point, the transcript on the first appeal was by order of the court attached to the second appeal and as to the second appeal, as above noted, respondent has not complied with the above-mentioned provision of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring written notice of the granting of said order. See Griffin v. Kent (Cal. Sup.) 274 P. 56, and Attkisson v. Reynolds (Cal. App.) 270 P. 686. Hence, for aught that appears here, proceedings may now be instituted to settle a record on appeal. Further discussion is unnecessary.

In re WINNE. (S. F. 13262.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 26, 1929.

Attorney and client  37—Contention that investigation of attorney's unprofessional acts was not authorized under law not in force when acts were committed held without merit (Code Civ. Proc. § 287; State Bar Act).

Investigation into the conduct of an attorney not being criminal but in nature of special proceeding to determine whether or not he has exercised privilege of franchise to practice law in conformity with statutes and ethics of legal profession and Code Civ. Proc. § 287, defining causes for which attorney may be disbarred or suspended, being in effect at time alleged unprofessional acts were committed, contention that investigation of alleged unprofessional acts could not be made under State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), because act was not in force when alleged unprofessional acts were committed, was without merit.

In Bank.

Application for a review of an order of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California recommending disbarment of Douglas Thompson Winne. Respondent suspended for one year.

The State Bar, through its Local Administrative Committee for the County of Fresno, for petitioner.

D. T. Winne and Gallaher & Jertberg, all of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The State Bar, through its local administrative committee for the county of Fresno, gave notice to Douglas Thompson Winne in the form of an order to show cause, that it would on May 23, 1928, at a certain time and place in the city of Fresno, investigate certain conduct as shown in three separate specifications on the part of said Winne as an attorney at law and a member of the State Bar, alleged to be in violation of his oath and duty as an attorney and counselor at law, involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption. The investigation took place as noticed with said Winne present thereat. After consideration of the evidence before it, the committee determined that it was insufficient to warrant any disciplinary recommendation on its part as to the first two specifications, and they may be dismissed from further consideration. The third specification was as follows: "That in a certain matter in which you [said Winne] acted as attorney for Marabelle Bandy, as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, No. 9493, Department No. 1, in the Superior Court of the state of California in and for the county of Fresno; and in which matter it is alleged that you altered, without legal right or authority, the inventory and appraisement in said estate by increasing the amount thereof by the sum of $1,800.00; and in which matter it is alleged you collected attorney fees on such additional amount of $1,800.00, which sum, it is alleged, as a matter of law you well knew was no part of said estate, and on which amount you had no legal right to collect any statutory attorney fees in said estate; and that you attempted to deceive the court in this regard."

As to this specification the committee found as follows:

"That said accused was, and for many years last past has been, an attorney and counselor at law, admitted to practice such profession in the state of California, and has practiced the same, and is now practicing the same in the city of Fresno, county of Fresno, state of California, and that said accused now is an active member of The State Bar of California;

"That said accused was the attorney for one Marabelle Bandy, as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, Robert Hasckel Bandy, which said estate was probated in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Fresno, No. 9493, Department No. 1, in the year 1927;

"That said accused, on behalf of said administratrix, filed a petition for letters of administration in the matter of said estate;

"That letters were thereafter duly issued to the said Marabelle Bandy;

"That an inventory and appraisement was issued in said matters and the same was prepared by the accused;

"That Charles A. Hill, one of the inheritance tax appraisers of the state of California in and for the county of Fresno, was by the said superior court appointed sole appraiser of said estate;

"That said accused listed and set out in typewriting in said inventory certain properties belonging to said estate and delivered said inventory to said Charles A. Hill, as such appraiser, for appraisement of said property so listed therein;

"That said appraiser appraised the said items of property so listed and set out in said inventory and returned said inventory, with his appraisement thereon of said property, to the accused for the accused to file said inventory and appraisement with the county clerk of the county of Fresno, state of California, and said appraiser at the same time delivered to said accused a certificate that no inheritance tax was payable on said estate;

"That at the time said appraiser delivered said inventory and appraisement to said accused the same was completely typewritten;

"That thereafter said accused, in his own handwriting, in ink, added the following item to said inventory and appraisement:

" 'Life insurance.....$1800.00,' and said accused altered in his own handwriting, in ink, in one place on said inventory and appraisement the total value of said estate as found by said Charles A. Hill, appraiser, to correspond with said item above quoted inserted in said inventory and appraisement by the said accused;

"That the recapitulation of the value of said estate as found by said appraiser, and appearing on the last page of said inventory and appraisement however, was not changed, but remained the same as fixed by the said appraiser;

"That pursuant to the understanding with the said appraiser, the oath of the administratrix was made after said appraisement had been made by said appraiser, and after the said inventory and appraisement had been returned to the accused by said appraiser, and the said oath is written in the handwriting of the accused in ink, except the printed portions thereof; (The committee attaches no misconduct to this irregularity with regard to the filling in, and taking of the oath by said administratrix, in said inventory and appraisement, as above stated);

"That the accused, after the said inventory and appraisement was returned to him by the said appraiser filed the same with the county clerk of the county of Fresno, state of California;

"That said committee is unable to determine whether the said alterations appearing in ink in the handwriting of said accused in inventory and appraisement, to which the committee attaches importance, were made before or after the filing of the same with said county clerk;

"That thereafter the said accused mailed to the said administratrix of said estate and the said administratrix received the same, a petition for final account and distribution of said estate, together with a letter addressed to said administratrix, itemizing the various properties of said estate, and included therein life insurance money in the sum of $1800.00, and in said letter computed the attorney fees as owing to said accused based upon the statutory probate fees, and included, for the purpose of fixing the amount of said attorney fees in said computation the said sum of $1800.00, and requested that said administratrix send her check to the accused for the amount so found due as statutory attorney fees in the matter of said estate, including therein the amount of statutory attorney fees that would be allowed on said sum of $1800.00;

"That said life insurance money above mentioned represented the proceeds of a life insurance policy held by the decedent in the State Life Insurance Company of Indiana in the amount of $1000.00, with double indemnity in case of accidental death; that the sole beneficiary of said life insurance policy was Marabelle Bandy, wife of said decedent; that said decedent met with an accidental death, and said insurance company paid by check directly to the said Marabelle Bandy, said sole beneficiary under said policy, the double indemnity value of said insurance policy, less the sum of about $200.00, which had been borrowed on said policy by decedent in his lifetime; that the said accused did nothing whatsoever concerning the collection or payment of said life insurance money by said company to said Marabelle Bandy;

"That the collection of said money and the payment thereof to said Marabelle Bandy was handled entirely by J. Wesley Tilton, local agent of said insurance company in Fresno, California;

"That the accused knew prior to the filing of said petition for letters of administration, and at all times thereafter during the course of the administration of said estate, and at the time said written demand for attorney fees, including the statutory attorney fees on the said sum of $1800.00 was made to the said Marabelle Bandy, that said insurance policy was payable to the said Marabelle Bandy individually, and that the estate of said Robert Haskel Bandy, deceased, was in no manner interested or concerned with the same;

"That although accused prepared and mailed to the said Marabelle Bandy said petition for final account and distribution, including said $1800.00 life insurance money above referred to as part of the assets of said estate, for her signature and verification, the same never was executed by said administratrix, and thereafter the accused filed a petition in said matter in said superior court for the entire estate to be set aside to the administratrix as the widow of said decedent under the provisions of section 1469 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, without filing an amended inventory and appraisement or changing in any manner the original inventory and appraisement, including said item of life insurance—$1800.00—theretofore filed in said estate;

"That thereafter said accused appeared in court at the time of the hearing of said petition and obtained an order of court setting aside to said administratrix under said section 1469 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, as the widow of said decendent, all of the property of said estate, without calling the attention of said court to said inventory and appraisal on file in the matter of said estate, which inventory and appraisal (including said item of life insurance—$1800.00) totaled $4082.00."

Said committee, as a conclusion from the above findings, determined that the accused was guilty of unprofessional conduct involving moral turpitude and recommended:

"That said accused, Douglas Thompson Winne, be disciplined by being suspended from the practice of law in the state of California and from practicing his profession in any of the courts of the state of California and from holding himself out to the public as an attorney and counselor licensed to practice law in the state of California, for the period of one year."

On September 14, 1928, the Board of Governors of the State Bar passed the following resolution:

"The respondent Douglas Thompson Winne having personally appeared before the Board of Governors and presented his oral argument in opposition to the committee's recommendation, be it

"Resolved, that the findings of the Local Administrative Committee for the county of Fresno be adopted as the findings of the Board of Governors and that the respondent Douglas Thompson Winne be and he is hereby suspended from the practice of the law in the state of California for the period of one year."

The record having been fully filed in this court by the Board of Governors on September 28, 1928, said Winne filed an unverified application for a review of the proceedings. Besides being unverified, it is also redundant in its reference to matters foreign to the particular matter under investigation by the local committee as shown by its findings, and contains no citation of evidence to support applicant's principal contention of a want of evidence to support the findings and determination of the local administrative committee. The applicant has filed no brief, but has offered for filing an "Argument" which may be characterized rather as a plea in extenuation or for leniency. The application suggests certain legal questions, the principal one being as to the constitutionality of the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), recently passed upon adversely to applicant's contention in State Bar, etc., v. Superior Court, etc. (Cal. Sup. L. A. No. 11141) 278 P. 432, decided May 31, 1929.

It is further contended, as the State Bar Act was not in effect at the time the alleged unprofessional acts were committed, that an investigation of them under the authority of the act is ex post facto. The investigation not being criminal, but in the nature of a special proceeding to determine whether or not the applicant has exercised the privilege or franchise to practice law in conformity with the statutes and ethics of the legal profession, and section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, defining the causes for which an attorney may be disbarred or suspended, being in effect at the time of the alleged unprofessional acts, the contention is without merit. See Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 293; In re Vaughan, 189 Cal. 496, 209 P. 353, 24 A. L. R. 858; Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 23 S. Ct. 390, 47 L. Ed. 563; Foster v. Police Com., 102 Cal. 483, 37 P. 763, 41 Am. St. Rep. 194; Hawker v. State of New York, 170 U. S. 189, 18 S. Ct. 573, 42 L. Ed. 1002.

Certain acts of the Board of Governors with relation to procedural matters are also complained of, but are without merit. The principal reliance of applicant is, and must be, upon his contention of insufficiency of evidence to warrant or justify the determination of the Board of Governors. Applicant has not complied with the rule which requires that his application "must fairly state all the material evidence relative to the point as to which such want of evidence is claimed to exist." The record has been carefully read and considered, and we think it amply supports the recommendations of the Board of Governors.

It is ordered, therefore, that Douglas Thompson Winne be suspended from all the rights and privileges of an attorney at law for the period of one year from and after the date of the filing of this order.

In re GRAVES. (L. A. 11319.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1929.

Attorney and client ⇄ 53(2)—Evidence in proceeding to disbar attorney held sufficient to justify recommendation for suspension from practice for six months for unprofessional conduct (State Bar Act).

In proceeding under State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38) to disbar attorney, evidence showing attorney attempted to collect attorney's fees from estate wherein he was one of duly appointed and qualified acting executors, and that attorney knowingly and willfully presented to court incorrect and false account for purpose of inducing court to approve same and attempting to mislead and deceive court, held sufficient to support recommendation that attorney be suspended from practice of law for six months.

Application for a review of an order of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California recommending suspension of M. O. Graves from the practice of law. Respondent suspended for six months.

M. O. Graves, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

A. W. Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This proceeding was instituted to review the order of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California recommending to this court the suspension of petitioner for a period of six months from the practice of law in this state. A hearing in due form and upon legal notice of the charges preferred against petitioner was held before a local administrative committee of the State Bar, as provided by the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38). This committee forwarded to the Bar Governors the evidence taken before it upon said hearing together with the recommendation that the petitioner be disbarred from the practice of law and that his name be stricken from the roll of attorneys of this state. At a regular meeting of said Board of Governors held on the 23d day of November, 1928, upon the evidence submitted by said committee, and upon said recommendation, said Board of Governors made its order recommending the suspension of petitioner from the practice of law in this state for the period of six months.

The charges preferred against petitioner were as follows:

"That you caused to be filed an account as co-executor in an estate matter in which account, you, said M. O. Graves, claimed full executor's fees for yourself and your co-executor, and also full fees allowed by law on account of the estate administrator to yourself, as attorney. The estate proceedings was entitled The Estate of Stetson, No. 78,805, on the records of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County.

"That you prepared the different accounts, and you knew at all times that an attorney could not charge a double fee as executor and attorney. That, after the account had been disallowed by the Court as attorney's fees, you nevertheless retained the item of $743.45 which Judge Reeve had disallowed, and you never advised your co-executor—from whom you had received the money—that said item had been disallowed, nor did you advise the residuary legatee of such fact.

"That you deliberately and knowingly collected such fee as an attorney prior to the time when the account was settled and the item disallowed, and that you nevertheless failed to heed the Order of the Court, and wilfully and deliberately retained the money which you knew did not belong to you, and made no effort to return said money to either the co-executor or the residuary legatee who is entitled to it.

"All of the above acts took place in the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, State of California."

A brief statement of the evidence in support of said charges shows that during the time mentioned herein the petitioner, M. O.

Graves, was an attorney at law duly admitted to practice in all the courts of this state; that he prepared the last will and testament of Rebecca J. Stetson in which he and one Thomas McClement were named as executors thereof; that on the death of said testatrix petitioner acted as the attorney for the executors named in said will and as such filed said will for probate together with a petition for the appointment of himself and said McClement as executors; upon the admission of said will to probate and the granting of said petition, both petitioner and said McClement qualified as executors of said will, and as one of said executors petitioner signed with his coexecutor the notice to creditors and the inventory in said estate; the final account in said estate was signed by both petitioner and McClement as executors of said will, each of whom verified said account. Said account and the petition for distribution purported to be and were the account and petition of both of said executors, and, as we have said before, it was prepared by petitioner acting as the attorney of said executors; in this account the executors charged said estate with the full executors' fees, $743.45, and also for full attorney's fees, in a like amount; said attorney's fees were designated in said account as having been paid to petitioner for his services as attorney in said estate. When this account and petition came on for hearing before Judge Sidney N. Reeve in the probate court of the county of Los Angeles, petitioner was sworn as a witness for the purpose of giving evidence in support of said account and petition. He testified that his coexecutor, Mr. McClement, was unable to be present at said hearing, and that he (petitioner) was familiar with all the facts set forth in the matter before the court. He then testified to the receipts and expenditures set forth in the account and that the same were correct. Judge Reeve called petitioner's attention to the two charges of $743.45 each, one for executors' and the other for attorney's fees. Petitioner then stated that Mr. McClement only had qualified as executor of said will, and that he (McClement) had attended to all the executor's duties while he (petitioner) had acted as attorney for said executor; that he had simply signed the account and had never qualified as executor. Judge Reeve then examined the papers in the estate and found that these statements of petitioner were false. He informed petitioner of the result of his investigation of said papers, whereupon petitioner stated that he had forgotten that he had ever qualified as executor of said will. Judge Reeve thereupon disallowed the item of $743.45, attorney's fees, and ordered distribution of the residue of the estate, including said sum of $743.45, to the residuary legatee under the will of said testatrix. The testimony of Mr. McClement showed that he paid to Mr. Graves said sum of $743.45 as his attorney's fees in the settlement of said estate.

It is not clear from the evidence whether this payment was made before or after the settlement of the final account and the entry of the decree of distribution. This sum of $743.45 paid petitioner as attorney's fees was never repaid by him to his coexecutor, nor has it ever been paid to said residuary legatee. It appears from the evidence practically without conflict that through petitioner's direction, if not by him personally, a copy of the final account was sent to said residuary legatee, and a settlement and final payment made upon the statements and allegations contained therein, and that no decree of distribution was ever sent to said residuary legatee, nor was any settlement made with said residuary legatee upon the basis of any decree of distribution. It further appears from the evidence that Mr. McClement, petitioner's coexecutor, never knew of the disallowance by Judge Reeve of the item of attorney's fees until the time of the hearing before the committee appointed to take the evidence upon this proceeding against the petitioner. Mr. McClement further testified that petitioner had never paid back to him, nor had he paid to the residuary legatee, the amount received by petitioner as attorney's fees, and that, "He (petitioner) kept it so far as I know."

Petitioner offers certain evidence in explanation of the facts as set forth herein and in extenuation of his conduct in accepting and retaining said attorney's fees. He testified that immediately after the hearing before Judge Reeve, at which the attorney's fees were disallowed, he endeavored to see Judge Reeve and explain the matter to him personally, but that Judge Reeve was at the time a very sick man, and died a short time thereafter. Just what was to be the nature of his interview with Judge Reeve does not clearly appear from the evidence. It does appear, however, that Judge Reeve considered the matter to be exceedingly grave and serious, and that, on the day of the hearing, or soon thereafter, he wrote a lengthy communication to the Bar Association of Los Angeles County, in which he characterized petitioner's conduct on the hearing before him as most reprehensible, and calling upon the Bar Association to take action against petitioner. We are unable to perceive how an interview with Judge Reeve would have helped petitioner's situation, even if we assume the petitioner endeavored in good faith to secure such an interview.

The residuary legatee was the Monmouth College of Monmouth, Ill. There appears a reference in the briefs to a letter received by petitioner from the president of said college in which the latter expressed a willingness on the part of said institution, in view of the fact that both petitioner and Mr. McClement did the work necessary in the administration of the estate and that they had been advisers of Mrs. Stetson in matters for which they had not been compensated, to waive any right the college had to money paid petitioner as attorney's fees in said estate. This letter was dated April 23, 1928, some months after the hearing before the committee of the Los Angeles Bar Association, at which practically all the facts herein were brought to light. It was written to petitioner evidently in answer to a letter written by petitioner to said college. Just what representations were made to the college that brought forth said letter from the president of said college we are not informed. The letter refers to the matter as "a technical error." Undoubtedly the information as to the nature of this "error" must have come from the petitioner himself. In view of the fact that the president of the college considered the matter as merely "a technical error," we can well understand his willingness to waive any right the college had to the money paid petitioner. We have grave doubts whether the college would have been so lenient with petitioner had it known the true facts of the case as recited herein. But even if, with a knowledge of all the facts, the officers of the college were willing to waive any rights the college had in the premises, that fact could not to any great extent militate in petitioner's favor. The failure to turn the money over to the college, the rightful owner thereof, is only one of the offenses of which the evidence shows the petitioner to be guilty. Before dismissing the subject of said letter, we wish to say that the committee of the California Bar recommended the disbarment of petitioner, but the Board of Bar Governors, in consideration of all the evidence, including said letter no doubt, mitigated the penalty to be meted out to petitioner by recommending his suspension only. In our opinion the petitioner has been given all the benefit to which he may be entitled by reason of the willingness of the Monmouth College to waive its rights to the money illegally paid petitioner as attorney's fees.

The evidence upon the whole, in our opinion, amply justifies the recommendation of the Bar Governors that petitioner be suspended from practice as an attorney at law for the period of six months. The evidence plainly shows that petitioner, both by his direct admissions before the committee and his conduct, while acting as a witness before Judge Reeve, was familiar with the law which would not permit him to receive attorney's fees in an estate wherein he was one of the duly appointed, qualified and acting executors. With this knowledge of the law, he included in the final account of said estate a charge both for full executors' fees and full attorney's fees for himself. This account he then caused his coexecutor to swear to and also swore to it himself, declaring under oath that it was true and correct. Upon his attention being called by Judge Reeve to this double charge, he evidently attempted to mislead the court by representing that he had never qualified as executor. Judge Reeve confronted him with the papers in the case, prepared by himself, many of them signed and sworn to by him, and all of them bearing unmistakable evidence that he had qualified and acted as one of the executors from the inception of settlement of said estate to the final papers filed therein. He then made the lame excuse that he had forgotten the fact that he had qualified as one of the executors, or that that fact had slipped his mind. It is difficult for us to perceive how this excuse could have been offered in good faith when the evidence shows that the very document he was then testifying in support of, the final account, only a few days before had been prepared, signed, and sworn to by the petitioner. The above facts, we think, establish without any serious doubt that petitioner knowingly and willfully presented to the court an incorrect and false account and that for the purpose of inducing the court to approve the same, attempted to mislead and deceive the court by statements and representations which he must have known at the time he made them did not state the truth. In addition to the foregoing, it appears without contradiction that the only settlement which the petitioner, as an executor of the will of said decedent, has ever made with the residuary legatee of said estate, was made upon the false and untrue final account and not upon the final decree in said estate, with the result that petitioner had retained, and up to the time when this matter was heard before the committee of the State Bar still retained, the sum of $743.45 which, according to said final decree, legally belonged to said residuary legatee. We are satisfied that the evidence in this proceeding against petitioner before the Board of Bar Governors was ample to justify the conclusion reached by said board and fully warranted their recommendation as to the penalty which should be meted out to the petitioner by reason of the offenses committed by him.

We therefore approve said recommendation, and hereby order that the petitioner herein, the said M. O. Graves, be and he is hereby suspended from the practice of law in this state for the period of six months from the date of the filing of this order.

RAFFERTY v. CITY OF MARYSVILLE.
(Sac. 4209.)

Supreme Court of California. July 23, 1929.

1. Negligence $\S$ 1—Negligence is relative to time, place, and circumstances involved.

Negligence is relative to the time, place, and circumstances which bear on particular acts under investigation, and each case must depend on its own state of facts.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1002—Testimony respecting street lights at place of injury being in substantial conflict, testimony on behalf of plaintiff, not being inherently improbable, cannot be discredited on defendant's appeal.

Testimony as to light conditions at street intersection, where pedestrian fell and was injured because of alleged defective condition of sidewalk, being in substantial conflict, and there being nothing in the number, kind, and arrangement of lights having tendency to render inherently improbable testimony of witnesses who testified to insufficiency of light, their testimony could not be discredited by Supreme Court, on appeal from judgment for pedestrian.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 818(9)—Evidence that others had previously fallen because of alleged defective sidewalk held admissible in action against city for injury.

In action against city for injury to pedestrian, as result of fall caused by alleged defective condition of sidewalk, testimony showing that others had previously sustained similar accident at that place held admissible.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 819(6)—Evidence held to show city had notice of insufficiency of light and unusual drop from sidewalk to street level at place where pedestrian fell.

In action against city for injury to pedestrian, as result of fall caused by alleged defective condition of sidewalk, evidence, including city's acceptance of work from paving contractor, held to show that city had notice, actual and constructive, as to condition at place of injury, both as to insufficiency of light and the unusual distance from sidewalk to street level at curb.

5. Evidence $\S$ 14—Court notices that steps seldom, if ever, exceed 7 or 8 inches, and that public has become accustomed to approximately such distance.

Court may take notice of fact that steps or treads, whether in public places, or stairways in private residences, or on public sidewalks or other places built for pedestrian purposes, seldom, if ever, exceed 7 or 8 inches, and that the public has become accustomed to approximately such a distance.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 169—Except in rare cases, Supreme Court will not consider points made by appellant for first time in that court.

Supreme Court will not, except in rare cases, consider points made by appellant for first time on appeal in that court.

7. Municipal corporations $\S$ 756—Statute making municipalities liable for injuries from defective streets held applicable to chartered city (St. 1923, c. 328, p. 675, § 2).

St. 1923, c. 328, p. 675, § 2, providing that counties, municipalities, and school districts shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, and other property, where governing board had knowledge or notice thereof, and failed or neglected for reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice to remedy such condition, applies to a chartered city, where municipal affairs are concerned.

8. Statutes $\S$ 107(5)—Statute making municipalities liable for injuries from defective streets held not invalid, as containing two subjects (St. 1923, c. 328, p. 675, $\S$ 2; Const. art. 4, $\S$ 24).

St. 1923, c. 328, p. 675, $\S$ 2, providing that counties, municipalities, and school districts shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, and other property, where governing board had knowledge or notice thereof, and failed or neglected for reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice to remedy such condition, held not invalid, as containing two subjects, contrary to Const. art. 4, $\S$ 24.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County;
J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Anna Rafferty against the City of Marysville. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. P. Rich and F. E. Carlin, both of Marysville, for appellant.

Wm. J. Locke, City Atty., of Alameda, Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., of Los Angeles, John J. O'Toole, City Atty., of San Francisco, Preston Higgins, City Atty., of Oakland, Hugh B. Bradford, City Atty., and Jos. L. Knowles, Asst. City Atty., both of Sacramento, Earl J. Sinclair, City Atty., of Berkeley, Archer Bowden, City Atty., of San Jose, J. LeRoy Johnson, City Atty., of Stockton, and Loren A. Butts, City Atty., of Fresno, amici curiæ.

Charles A. Wetmore, Jr., of San Francisco, and Ray Manwell, of Marysville, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Respondent was awarded by the court, sitting without a jury, a judgment against appellant, city of Marysville, in the sum of $7,744 and costs of suit on account of personal injuries sustained by her as the result of a fall caused by a dangerous and defective condition of a sidewalk, which appellant caused to be constructed and maintained at the southwest corner of the intersection of Tenth and I streets. Said injuries were inflicted on the 1st day of May, 1926, and consisted of a fracture of the left ankle above the joint and in the joint, and also a fracture of the olecranon process of the left elbow. As a result of said fall, respondent was confined to her bed for a period of two months and suffered great pain. For several months immediately following the infliction of said injuries she was compelled to use two crutches, and has since been unable to walk, except with the aid of a crutch. Her injuries are permanent, and she will continue to suffer pain. The appeal which is taken from said judgment is supported by city attorneys representing nine municipalities of this state, who appear as amici curiæ.

The section of the city in which the cause of action has its situs was a thinly settled outlying district, embracing the intersection of Tenth and I streets. I street, which extends in a northerly and southerly direction, is intersected by Tenth street, which extends in an easterly and westerly course. This intersection and contiguous territory was unimproved prior to October, 1924, at which time the city of Marysville entered into a contract with the Warren Construction Company for the paving of I street, from the north line of Ninth street to Fourteenth street. The contract provided that, whenever aprons or approaches from sidewalks were damaged in the construction of curbs, the contractor would be required to repair the same in a neat and workmanlike manner corresponding with the original apron or approach. The contract called for the construction of curbs and gutters along all of the streets to be improved, but did not provide for the construction of aprons or approaches extending from the top of curbs to the street at any of the intersections to be paved. Prior to said improvement the surface of the sidewalk and street at said intersection was composed of the natural soil, but an apron formed by pipes and other material covered over with dirt raised the street crossing to a level with the sidewalk. In other words, there was no step-down in crossing from the curb of the sidewalk to the street. The work, which was completed and accepted by the city in July, 1925, was left, as claimed by respondent, in a defective and dangerous condition, in that the level of the sidewalk at the southwesterly corner of said intersection sharply terminated, leaving a distance from the surface of the curb to the street level of 15 inches.

Respondent at the time of injury was a woman past 58 years of age and had resided in the city of Marysville for a number of years. She resided several blocks distant from said intersection, and was not especially familiar with that section. It has been and is the policy and practice of said city in its street improvement plans to construct aprons at street intersections in such manner as to bring the surface of sidewalks on a level with the surface of the streets, thus bridging gutters and eliminating step-downs. This system uniformly obtains in the thickly settled parts of the city, and the comparatively few intersections which are not aproned are found only in the remote and sparsely settled sections, where the improvements are not as complete and pretentious as in the business and important resident districts. No step-off, where the gutter is left open at the intersection, equals one-half the distance of the Tenth and I street intersection, the highest being but 6 inches in height. It must be held upon the case presented that the general plan of street construction, adopted and approved by long usage of said city, is the apron plan, and where an exception is made, as in the instant case, the step-down is 6 inches, and not 15 inches, without an intervening step as the means of descent from an approach to the sidewalk.

The citizens had become accustomed to said plan of construction. The Legislature has removed from the consideration of the case all common-law and archaic obstacles that formerly stood in the way of a citizen recovering from a municipality damages for personal injuries suffered from dangerous and defective conditions of public streets, by adopting, in 1923, chapter 328, p. 675, Statutes and Amendments 1923, the following act from which we quote: "Section 2. Counties, municipalities and school districts shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, buildings, grounds, works and property, in all cases where the governing or managing board of such county, municipality, school district, or other board, officer or person having authority to remedy such condition, had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition of any such street, highway, building, grounds, works or property and failed or neglected, for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice, to remedy such condition or failed and neglected for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice to take such action as may be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such dangerous or defective condition."

[1] Negligence is relative to the time, place, and circumstances which bear upon the particular acts under investigation. Each case must depend upon its own state of facts, and so varying are the factors which contribute to produce a result that no hard and fast rule may find practical application in the great majority of cases.

The respondent, who resided 9 or 10 blocks from the intersection, and her niece, left the former's residence at about the hour of 7:30 p. m., May 1, 1926, to visit a carnival which was being held under license privilege of the city of Marysville on the northwest corner of Tenth and I streets. Her course was northerly upon reaching I street. She crossed a number of street intersections in her course, and in every case the sidewalk was level with the street surface until she reached the southwesterly intersection of said Tenth and I streets. At this point the curb or edge of the sidewalk drops abruptly 15 inches to the street level. The carnival proper was located on the lot situate at the northwesterly corner of said intersection. A Ferris wheel and a merry-go-round were in operation on said lot, and these were lighted by electric lights. The corner was occupied by a "hot dog" stand, which used for illuminating purposes either a gasoline or coal oil torch or flare. On the northeasterly corner a 100-candle power electric light globe was suspended from an arm of a pole at an elevation of 20 feet and 7 inches from the ground. The southeasterly corner was also occupied by a "hot dog" stand, and was similarly lighted as the other stand above described. There was no light on the southwesterly corner, nor upon the lot proper, except so much as may have been diffused from the lights above described. The 100-candle power electric light (6.6 amperage) was situated diagonally across the intersection at a distance of 97 feet from the point where the injury occurred, there being no light in the center of said intersection. The electrician called by appellant testified that such a light should light up an area of between 90 and 100 feet, and that the direct light would be directly under the lamp embracing a circle 20 feet in diameter, and the diffused light proportionately dimmed as the circle grew in circumference. This estimate would place the limit of the direct rays of the lamp quite a distance from the situs of the defective or dangerous spot in the sidewalk.

[2] The light that was diffused from the Ferris wheel, merry-go-round, and "hot dog" stands may, from ordinary experience in such matters, be set down as negligible. The testimony, however, as to the light conditions, is in sharp conflict. A number of witnesses called for the respondent—especially those who, like her, fell from the curb to the gutter in attempting to cross from the southwesterly corner to the northwesterly corner, where the Ferris wheel and merry-go-round were located—testified that the section was absolutely insufficiently lighted, while others testified that the light was sufficient to enable a person to see the step-off, and that the light was generally sufficient for all reasonable purposes. The conflict is substantial. There being nothing in the number, kind, and arrangement of the lights which has a tendency to render inherently improbable the testimony of the witnesses who testified to the insufficiency of light, their testimony cannot be discredited by us.

The respondent, who was familiar with the apron system which prevailed in the city of her residence, and had walked many blocks with her niece across streets on which the street and curb were uniformly on a level, arrived at the place of amusement about 8 o'clock p. m. Her niece, who preceded her in attempting to cross over to the carnival corner, almost fell as she stepped from the sidewalk. She attempted to forewarn respondent of the step-off, but before she was able to do so respondent, in attempting to go forward, presuming on the continuation of the sidewalk level, was thrown precipitously to the gutter, and sustained the injuries herein described.

[3] During the carnival week three or four other persons, residents of the city, were thrown from their feet in attempting to cross at the point in question. Joseph N. Whyler, collector for the Appeal-Democrat, was walking arm in arm with his wife, and, as he describes the circumstances, "all of a sudden we stepped off" and his wife fell to her knees. He stated, further, that the corner was dark. Mrs. May Prindiville also suffered a similar experience. She also testified that the lights did not illuminate said corner. Clarence Dempsey, clerk of the court that tried the action, testified: "I was walking along, and saw the carnival across on the lot, * * * and as I came to the sidewalk end to go into the street I stepped down there, and it was deeper than I expected and I—well, I fell, is what I did; didn't sustain any injuries." His testimony as to the condition of lights at the corner was that it was "shadowy." The step-off could be seen, but "you couldn't see to tell it was as deep as it was." The authorities justifying the admission of this class of evidence are collated in 10 Cal. Jur. 827. See, also, the recent case of Gorman v. County of Sacramento (Cal. App.) 268 P. 1083.

[4] There can be no doubt as to the city having had notice, actual and constructive, as to the condition of the locus in quo, both as to the insufficiency of light and the unusual distance from the sidewalk to the gutter level. It may be stated here that this is not a case, such as is considered in many of the cases cited by appellant, where the improvements, being proper in the first instance, became dangerous from use or decay. It is a case rather where the work was improperly constructed in the first instance, and was rendered more dangerous by the lack of street illumination. It is the admitted fact that the mayor of the city, who was also chairman of the committee on streets and roads, was personally notified by Mrs. Edith Thorsen, who resided on I street, very near the point in question, at the time the work was completed in 1925, that the street was, in her opinion, left in a dangerous condition to pedestrians. Her protest was not heeded. For the second time, just as soon as she learned that the carnival was to be located at the northwesterly corner of Tenth and I streets, she visited the mayor and the chief of police, and again notified both that she regarded the situation as dangerous to pedestrians. This question, however, is further conclusively put to rest by the fact that the city accepted the work, and, of course, it will be held to have had notice of the existing condition.

[5] No case has been cited where the distance of the tread from sidewalk to street or from tread to tread in any kind of traffic lane was as great as 15 inches. No one would expect that a step-off of such a distance would be placed at the end of a paved sidewalk or public place without a sign or warning, or without being given the chance of observing it by the use of the sense of sight. That she exercised the care that was exercised by four or five other persons, presumed to be normal, there is no room for doubt. Her testimony as to the manner of her approach is in accord with the conduct of the average person under similar circumstances, and does not in any wise depart from what should be expected of the average, reasonable, prudent person. Had the electric globe been suspended from a point at the center of the street, instead of the furthestmost corner, it may have shed sufficient light to have enabled persons to have better seen the step-off, or at least judged of its depth. We think we may well take notice of the fact that steps or treads, whether in public places, or stairways in private residences, or upon public sidewalks or other places built for pedestrian purposes, seldom, if ever, exceed 7 or 8 inches, and the public has become accustomed to approximately such a distance. A misjudgment by the fraction of an inch is sufficient to disturb the physical equilibrium.

The trial court found that a dangerous and defective condition continuously existed at said intersection, by reason of the construction as herein described, since its completion and acceptance by the city July 28, 1925, and that the said city had timely notice thereof; that all street intersections between the said intersection and respondent's residence were provided with aprons extending from the end of the sidewalk to the level of the pavement of the street for the protection of pedestrians; that the street light was insufficient to light up said crossing, and thereby apprise respondent of the abrupt step-off, nor was there any sign or warning calculated to apprise her of the fact that said abrupt and precipitous step-off existed at said street crossing. The allegations of appellant's answer as to contributory negligence on the part of respondent are fully disposed of by the findings.

The fundamental principles that a municipality reserves the right to change its street improvement system or program when it is reasonably wise to do so, and that it may ordinarily exercise the powers claimed for it by the appellant and amici curiæ under the constitutional, statutory, or inherent powers which are given it, free from the risk of being mulcted in damages for so doing, may, as a general proposition, be admitted. We are not here dealing with those fundamental principles of law, but have considered the case in the light of the facts upon which it is presented.

[6, 7] Amicus curiæ the city of Sacramento has raised two questions in its brief that were not raised by the appellant at the trial or upon its brief on appeal. While it is the rule that this court will not, except in rare cases, consider points made by an appellant for the first time upon appeal in this court, we will, nevertheless, state said points, which are as follows: (1) The statute of 1923 does not apply to a chartered city where municipal affairs are concerned; (2) that the act of 1923 is unconstitutional. If the first point is good, the application of the statute would be indeed limited, as most, if not all, of the important cities of the state in which such damages are sought to be compensated occur in chartered cities. As a foreword, not intended to bind ourselves, should the point be regularly raised in the future, we are of the view that it would be an anomalous situation, which would bring about a legal embarrassment, should we be compelled to hold that a city may avoid the force of a general statute by placing the conclusion upon the doctrine that a city is independent of general laws upon municipal affairs. The question of the safety of public works seems, so far as we are presently advised to be a matter of state concern, and the obligation of a city to make its highways reasonably safe for general use cannot be chartered away, even though a municipality should attempt to do so. Said act of 1923 is inconsistent with such a conclusion.

[8] The further objection is that the act of 1923 is invalid, for the reason that it contains two subjects, contrary to the provisions of article 4, § 24, state Constitution. We have considered both objections, but have not been convinced that either ground of objection should prevail, even had they been urged at the proper time. The act has been before the District Court of Appeal in Gorman v. County of Sacramento (Cal. App.) 268 P. 1083; Huff v. School District (Cal. App.) 267 P. 918; Dawson v. School District (Cal. App.) 276 P. 424, and in none of those cases was the constitutionality of the act questioned. It is not necessary to pursue the subject further.

Judgment affirmed.

GRIVEL v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY et al.

(L. A. 11340.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨509(4)—Disqualification of judge, because previously appearing as counsel for party, held sufficient ground for proceeding to annul order approving administrator's account (Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 3; § 473).

Disqualification of superior judge, under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 3, disqualifying judge who had previously appeared as attorney or counsel for either party, held sufficient ground for proceeding under section 473 to vacate and annul order settling and approving administrator's account, on ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨509(9)—Order annulling order approving administrator's account, where motion was lodged within six months and matter was specifically brought to court's attention, held valid.

Where motion to annul order settling and approving administrator's account was lodged with clerk before expiration of six-months period, and matter was specifically brought to attention of judge, who appointed a day for hearing subsequent to expiration of six-months period, and nothing appeared showing motion was not brought directly to attention of court, order of annulment held valid, since, unless it appears from face of proceeding that application for relief was not made within six months, order of annulment cannot be declared void.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨509(6)—Mere filing with clerk, within six months, of intention after expiration of prescribed period to move to annul order approving administrator's account, is not sufficient.

Mere filing with clerk, within six-months period, of notice of intention to make motion to set aside order approving administrator's account on day subsequent to expiration of six-months period, is not sufficient, since, to constitute application, action of court must be invoked in some appropriate manner before expiration of prescribed period.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨509(5)—Application to annul order approving administrator's account, made within prescribed period, though filed on last day, is sufficient.

Where application to set aside order settling and approving administrator's account is made before expiration of prescribed six-months period, even though it be made on last day of period and before notice to adverse party is or could be given, motion is nevertheless sufficient.

Application for certiorari by Leon R. Grivel, administrator of the estate of Rene Grivel, deceased, to review an order of the Superior Court in and for the County of Imperial, and by Vaughn N. Thompson, Judge presiding in Department thereof, annulling order annulling previous order settling and approving administrator's account. Order annulled.

Edgar T. Fee and Franklin J. Cole, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Muhleman, Anderson & Palmer, of Los Angeles, and Jas. W. Glassford, of El Centro, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. In the above-entitled cause the order of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Imperial, given and made on the 24th day of January, 1929, purporting to annul the order of said court given and made on the 28th day of November, 1927, is itself hereby annulled. A consideration of the following will reveal the basis for this holding:

In the above-mentioned estate, Charles T. Wardlaw, administrator with the will annexed, pursuant to an order to show cause made therein, presented to the court his account and report as such officer, and issues were made thereon by the written objections of Thirza Bass, guardian of the minor heirs of said decedent. In said cause, said account, together with the objections thereto, was heard by Hon. M. W. Conkling, judge sitting in department 1 of said court. The account was approved by an order given and made by him on December 31, 1926.

It appears that said Judge Conkling, prior to his elevation to the bench, had been the attorney for one Barnes, a partner of decedent, in suit No. 4677 on the records of said court, wherein decedent was plaintiff and said Barnes was defendant; that, upon the death of said Rene Grivel, the said Charles T. Wardlaw, as administrator of his estate, was substituted as plaintiff in said action, which was at all times herein pending and related to and involved property claimed as assets of said estate; and that the proceedings in said cause were introduced in evidence and considered by the court in the making of the said order of December 31, 1926.

Thereafter, but within six months, the said guardian filed in said court a document entitled "Motion and Petition to Vacate and Set Aside Order and Judgment Settling and Approving Account of Said Administrator dated December 31, 1926," to which document were attached copies of the pleadings and other proceedings in said cause No. 4677. This petition alleged the disqualification of said judge upon the grounds above stated and the consequent invalidity of the order so made by him. Lack of knowledge previous to June 11, 1927, of said disqualification was also set up. The introductory portion of said motion and petition contained the words: " * * * Petitioner and plaintiff herein * * * respectfully moves and petitions the above-entitled court to vacate, set aside, and annul the judgment and order. * * * " Upon the presentation and filing of these documents, the judge of said court within said period made the following order: "Good cause having been shown, it is ordered that time be shortened, and that this motion be set for hearing on Friday, July 15, 1927. A. C. Finney, Judge of the Superior Court." Whereupon the moving party gave notice that on the day fixed the motion would be made upon this showing and upon the records and files of said cause, said notice containing also a restatement of the grounds of said motion.

Presumably the motion was made upon the day fixed by said court, or upon some subsequent day to which the hearing was regularly postponed, and the proceeding resulted in an order given and made on November 28, 1927, vacating and annulling said order of December 31, 1926.

Matters remained in this state until January 11, 1929, upon which date John R. Wardlaw, administrator of the estate of Charles T. Wardlaw, deceased, moved the court for an order annulling said order of November 28, 1927, and restoring vitality to the order of December 31, 1926, upon the ground that said order of November 28, 1927, was void on the face of the proceedings. This application was thereafter submitted to the court and on January 24, 1929, Hon. V. N. Thompson, the judge presiding, made an order granting said motion. Thus came into being the order here sought to be annulled.

Thereafter, and on February 16, 1929, Leon R. Grivel, the then administrator of the estate of said decedent, Rene Grivel, filed herein his petition for a writ of review, seeking the annulment of said last-mentioned order of January 24, 1929, as having been given and made in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. On March 12, 1929, the writ of review issued and on March 25, 1929, the said superior court made its return thereto and filed same herein, from which we have gleaned the above facts.

The proper conclusion as to the validity of the order under review will be made manifest, when we establish the validity or invalidity of said order of November 28, 1927.

[1] The disqualification of said judge, under section 170, subdivision 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, was sufficient ground for a proceeding under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to vacate and annul the order of December 31, 1926, upon the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect.

[2] The only material point in dispute is this: Did the moving party make an application for relief within a reasonable time, and in this case was it made within six months from the entry of the order in question? Unless we can see from the face of the proceedings that this was not done, said order of annulment cannot be declared void. The motion was lodged with the clerk before the expiration of the six-months period. The matter was specifically brought to the attention of the judge, and upon the showing made the judge fixed a day for hearing of the motion, which day was subsequent to the expiration of said period. Everything appearing confirms rather than disproves the making of the application to the court itself for relief. Nothing appears upon which to question in any wise the fact that the motion was brought directly to the attention of the court and its action thereon invoked. This being conceded, the invalidity of said order of annulment is not shown, but, on the contrary, its full validity upon an attack of this character is manifest.

[3, 4] Precedent for this holding exists in abundance. Of course, it is settled that the mere filing with the clerk within the six-months period of a notice of intention to make such a motion on a day subsequent to expiration of the period is not sufficient. To constitute an application, the action of the court must be invoked in some appropriate manner before the expiration of the prescribed period. Bell v. Krauss, 169 Cal. 387, 391, 146 P. 874; In re Morehouse, 176 Cal. 634, 169 P. 365; In re Yoder, 199 Cal. 699, 702, 251 P. 205. But, when this is done even though it be done on the last day of the period, and before notice to the adverse party is or could be given, it is nevertheless sufficient. Brownell v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 703, 709, 710, 109 P. 91.

In this case, as above pointed out, nothing is shown to warrant the conclusion that the party did not appear and move the court for the relief sought. On the contrary, all existing evidence tends to confirm the conclusion that it was done. This observation brings the case squarely within the holding of this court in In re Yoder, supra, wherein, at page 702 of 199 Cal. (251 P. 206), it is said: "Though the petition did not come on for hearing until after the expiration of the six-months period, there is nothing in the record herein to indicate that said petition was not brought to the attention of the court below prior to the expiration of said six-months limitation. The 'petition and motion' having been filed within said period and no showing having been made that the matter was not called to the attention of the lower court prior to the expiration of said period, it will be presumed that the application was seasonably made."

The order of November 28, 1927, being valid and being sufficient to annul the order of December 31, 1926, it follows as of course that the order here under review purporting to annul the order of November 28, 1927, and revive the order of December 31, 1926, is void; hence the conclusion above announced.

In re PETERSEN. (S. F. 13225.) *

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Attorney and client ⇨31—Resolution of Board of Governors of State Bar recommending disbarment is not final (State Bar Act, § 26).

Action of Board of Governors of State Bar in recommending disbarment is not a final proceeding, but power of disbarment rests finally and solely with Supreme Court under State Bar Act, § 26 (St. 1927, p. 41).

2. Constitutional law ⇨306—Disbarment proceedings do not deny due process, in view of notice and hearing, and final determination thereof in Supreme Court (State Bar Act, § 26).

Proceeding for disbarment of attorney under State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38) does not deny due process, since power of disbarment rests finally and solely with Supreme Court under section 26 (page 41), and notice and hearing are provided for.

3. Attorney and client ⇨53(1)—Attorney in disbarment proceedings should receive benefit of every favorable intendment and of proof of good character and reputation.

In disbarment proceedings, accused attorney is entitled to every favorable intendment and inference in his favor, and to benefit of such proof of good character and reputation as he is able to make, in view of attendant degradation and probable effects upon livelihood.

4. Attorney and client ⇨53(2)—Finding as to attorney's guilt of subornation of perjury held not sufficiently supported by evidence in proceedings for disbarment.

In disbarment proceedings, evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that accused attorney had been guilty of subornation of perjury in connection with defense of one charged with statutory rape, by advising false swearing as to age of girl for purpose of securing marriage license.

5. Attorney and client ⇨58—Attorney's alteration and use of proceeds of debtor's check given him by creditor as his client, and procurement of client's affidavit to complaint against debtor denying part payment, warranted suspension for one year (State Bar Act, § 26).

Where creditor turned over to his attorney check for part of amount due marked, "Paid in full," with instructions not to do anything with it to hurt the case, attorney in striking out the words "in full," and depositing the check and using the proceeds thereof for his own purposes, and thereafter causing his client to swear to complaint in which no credit was given for part payment, was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension for one year; burden being cast on attorney to show that decision of Board of Governors recommending disbarment was erroneous or unlawful under State Bar Act, § 26 (St. 1927, p. 41).

Proceedings by the Board of Governors of the State Bar, on the recommendation of the local administrative committee, for the disbarment of Cedric W. Petersen. The Board of Governors recommended disbarment, and the attorney petitions for review. Action of Board of Governors approved in part, and attorney suspended for one year.

Lillick, Olson & Graham, of San Francisco (Joseph J. Geary, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

Matt. I. Sullivan, Sullivan & Sullivan, and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, Leon A. Clark, of Oakland, Joseph J. Webb, of San Francisco, and Thomas C. Ridgway, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. On February 20, 1928, Amelia J. Rodrick, by her guardian ad litem, John Rodrick, filed with the State Bar of California her verified complaint against Cedric W. Petersen, a member of the State Bar, charging him with misconduct involving moral turpitude, constituting a ground for disbarment. Petersen was directly charged with subornation of perjury, and with compounding a felony in bringing about the marriage of the complainant with one Erasmus J. Silveria, who had been held to answer before the superior court upon a charge of statutory rape alleged to have been committed upon Amelia, in which Petersen was Silveria's attorney; one trial having been had in which the jury disagreed. Proceedings were inaugurated by the local administrative committee of Alameda county, to which the complaint was referred for hearing and action, by the issuance of an order to show cause directed to Petersen, and protracted hearings and the taking of much evidence followed. The committee duly filed its findings and conclusions. It found that Petersen was not guilty of compounding a felony, but held that the subornation of perjury charge had been proved, in that Petersen had advised Amelia J. Rodrick and her parents to swear that Amelia was of the age of 16 years, for the purpose of securing a marriage license to marry Silveria, when in truth and in fact he knew she was but 14 years of age.

Hilding G. Brelín also presented to the State Bar a complaint charging Petersen with misconduct as an attorney at law involving moral turpitude in the alleged unauthorized alteration, collection of, and use by Petersen of the proceeds of a check for $280, signed by Mrs. John F. Borden, made payable to Brelín, and turned over to Petersen by Brelín to do with as he chose, provided it did not interfere with a claim of $720 against Mrs. Borden, for which an action was about to be instituted. By an amendment, Petersen was further charged with making false affidavits in verifying a complaint and to secure an attachment in the action.

The Rodrick and Brelín matters were, by stipulation, consolidated for hearing, and in the Brelín matter the committee made findings, in practical effect, that Petersen had been guilty of a misappropriation of funds belonging to Brelín.

The recommendation of the local administrative committee to the Board of Governors was that Cedric W. Petersen be disbarred. After a further hearing of oral argument on behalf of Petersen and the filing of certain documentary evidence, the Board of Governors adopted as its findings the findings of the local administrative committee, in both cases, and by formal resolution recommended Petersen's disbarment. Within the prescribed time, Petersen petitioned this court to review the decision of the board.

The petitioner claims that:

1. The State Bar Act is unconstitutional and void;

2. The petitioner is deprived of a valuable property right without due process of law;

3. The facts, as disclosed by the evidence, do not support the resolution of disbarment.

The first of these contentions may be dismissed, it having been decided in State Bar of California v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 278 P. 432, and in Re Cate (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 131, that the State Bar Act is constitutional.

[1, 2] The second contention, that if the present disbarment proceeding be allowed to remain in force the petitioner will be deprived of liberty and a valuable property right without due process of law, is based upon the assumption that the action of the Board of Governors is a final proceeding. That is not so. By section 26 of the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 41), the power of disbarment rests finally and solely with this court. In re Shattuck (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 998. Nor does a proceeding under the State Bar Act deprive any one of property or right without due process of law, since notice and hearing are provided for, and a hearing is given in the court of last resort. In re Bruen, 102 Wash. 472, 172 P. 1152.

As to the third point made by the petitioner, the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the resolution of disbarment, this court will treat the findings of the Board of Governors as special findings of an intermediary agency, in order that our review may extend to the determination of the sufficiency of the facts to support them, and whether or not the findings, in turn, support the recommendation of the board. In re Shattuck, supra.

Directing our attention first to finding No. V in the Rodrick Case, it is as follows: "That at each and all of the times hereinabove referred to, wherein said Cedric W. Petersen, said accused, directed and instructed the complainant, and her said father and mother to swear upon the application for said marriage license that said Amelia J. Rodrick was of the age of sixteen years, as hereinbefore set forth, he did so wilfully, and with the desire and intent to procure a marriage license for said Amelia J. Rodrick and Erasmus J. Silveria, and with the wilful design and intent of procuring said Amelia J. Rodrick to commit perjury."

The salient facts leading up to the Rodrick charge are as follows: Erasmus J. Silveria, a youth of about 19, had been charged with statutory rape alleged to have been committed upon Amelia J. Rodrick at the ranch home of her parents near Livermore some time during December, 1926, and January, 1927. The Rodricks (or Rodriguez) and the Silverias were neighboring farmers, living about three miles apart. The two families were of Portuguese descent, the older members talking and understanding the English language but imperfectly. The Silverias were in much more comfortable circumstances than the Rodricks and had a more pretentious home than the Rodricks, who lived in a small ranch house occupied by several people. Young Silveria had lived with the Rodricks for some time, enticed there, as the Silverias believed, by the Rodricks, and against his parents' desires. The Silverias were old clients of Petersen and he had, at one time, also rendered professional services for the Rodricks. The Silverias asked Petersen to represent their son on the charge of rape. Upon his advice, Livermore attorneys were engaged to appear at the preliminary hearing in the justice court of that town. Young Silveria was held to answer before the superior court. Petersen conducted the superior court trial, and the jury disagreed. Judge Leon Gray of the superior court of Alameda county, who presided at the trial of young Silveria, furnishes something of the atmosphere of the situation. He testified in the present proceeding that "the attitude of the Rodricks all the way through was to do everything in their power to encourage" marriage, and "threw the children together as much as possible"; "that the Silverias thought they were a little better and that it would be a mesalliance, and they did everything in their power to stop it," and finally succeeded in taking the boy home, not by force but really by "coercion" and against his desire. "It was very clear from the attitude of the Rodricks," testified Judge Gray, "that the rape case was designed to force the marriage." After Erasmus was taken home by his parents, the charge of statutory rape was made against him by the Rodricks, and it was apparently broadcast about Livermore that Amelia was pregnant. This, however, it appears, was not a fact. The effect of this gossip in the community will be appreciated. In the superior court, the sole testimony as to the age of Amelia was that of the Rodricks. They testified that she was under 14 years of age at the time of the occurrences. The only testimony as to rape was that of Amelia herself. Petersen's defense was that Amelia was of statutory age, as he claims he believed. He seems to have consistently believed, at all the times here involved, that the Rodricks were lying as to Amelia's age; and claims that the physical appearance and sophistication of Amelia strongly indicated otherwise. Nothing authentic as to the girl's age appeared until the production of a baptismal certificate during this investigation, which must be accepted as prima facie evidence of its recital that she was born in 1913. Until this record was found, Petersen's efforts to establish Amelia's age by search of records had been fruitless and the question of age seems to have been unsettled all through the proceedings complained of, and there is testimony from which Petersen was entitled to draw inferences that Amelia's parents were adjusting her age for purposes of their own. A material fact, though, is that Petersen seems to have sincerely believed that Amelia was 16 years of age, and that Rodrick, the father, had told him she was 16, raising an inference that the Rodricks had lied about the matter. Within two days after the termination of the first trial, Deputy District Attorney Chamberlain, in charge of the prosecution of Silveria, was approached by the girl's parents to ascertain his attitude toward a marriage of the young people. It was stated to him that the Silverias had come to them, the Rodricks, and were then willing that their boy should marry Amelia. Petersen was not present at this interview and had no knowledge of it until the deputy district attorney testified to it at the hearing in the matter. Mrs. Rodrick denied having had such an interview with Chamberlain.

The prospects of a second trial appear to have been greatly upsetting to the Silverias. It had been developed during the trial that the young people were really in love with each other, irrespective of the bitter feeling of their parents, and Petersen arranged to have the Rodricks call at his office to ascertain if this feeling still existed, and, if it did, then to suggest marriage as the proper solution, which, provided there was no legal obstacle, seems to be an eminently proper thing to do in such a case. Petersen claims that he was then still under the belief that Amelia was, in reality, 16, and not 14, as her parents had testified. Counsel for the State Bar, in answer to Petersen's claim in this regard, cite the facts established by the record that at, or about, the time the matter of a dismissal of the charge against Silveria was pending, Petersen endeavored to find out from the office of the county clerk of Alameda county if "there was any way a marriage license could be procured for a person if there was a doubt if she was under sixteen years of age." The real issue here, however, seems to rest upon what Petersen is alleged to have said to the Rodricks in relation to securing a marriage license, having the young people married and the case dismissed. The subornation of perjury charge rests upon the story of the Rodricks and the two corroborating witnesses concerning the use of the word "sixteen" by Petersen.

The evidence given by Amelia and her parents, and which was sought to be corroborated by two witnesses, Himes and Mrs. Philbrook, was to the effect that, in his private office, again in his outer office or reception room in the presence of Himes, and again on the following Saturday when all the interested parties had come together to secure a marriage license, Petersen had told the Rodricks "to say that Amelia was sixteen years of age." Petersen denies having used the phrase testified to upon any of the occasions testified to. He is corroborated as to the first meeting by his stenographer, who was placed purposely to overhear the conversation with the Rodricks in his private office, and by Alice Boylan, who occupied desk room in the outer or reception office where the Rodricks and Himes claim the statement was to "be sure to say sixteen." Each testified they heard no such statement. The Rodricks' corroborating witness, Himes, a fur trapper occupying, rent free, a shack on the Rodrick place, was admittedly under obligations to them, and very friendly. He admitted having talked the matter over on several occasions with the Rodricks, and accompanied them to Petersen's office on the first visit, remaining in the outer office. He attempted to make it plain that he was testifying, not from what he had discussed with the Rodricks, but that he had made a note on a piece of paper of what occurred which was in a trunk somewhere and was not produced. His reasons for making the memorandum somewhat tax our credulity, but it is, nevertheless, very significant that, when held down to the facts, he finally testified as follows:

"Q. What did Mr. Petersen say about the girl being sixteen? A. He just simply said she had to be sixteen in order for them to get married.

"Q. Who did he say that to? A. In front of Mr. Rodrick, Mrs. Rodrick and the girl Amelia Rodrick at that time.

"Q. And yourself? A. Yes, sir."

The other corroborating witness of the Rodricks' story was Mrs. Philbrook, who testified as to what she claimed to have overheard on Saturday morning, and as to what she claims to have said. She testified that she was an ordained minister of the Eternal Truth Church, and therefore familiar with the requirements of the marriage law. She had attended the criminal trial throughout, and had heard the testimony as to Amelia's age, yet she was present to be a witness of the marriage for the Rodricks, knowing it to be unlawful. When questioned as why she acted as a witness to an illegal marriage, she replied: "It was none of my business." Mr. and Mrs. Silveria and Erasmus, who were admittedly present and a part of the group, testified they did not hear Petersen make any such statement as the Rodricks claim he made. They were not impeached, and the intendments are as strong in their favor as in favor of the others testifying in the matter. It would lengthen too much this consideration to attempt to go into detail and point out what appear to us to be the many weaknesses, inconsistencies, and apparent contradictions of the Rodricks' testimony, and that of Himes and Mrs. Philbrook; but a fair reading of it leads to the conclusion that the finding above set out of the local administrative committee, approved by the Board of Governors of the State Bar, is not sufficiently supported by such clear and convincing evidence, free from doubt, as should be required in such a case. Petersen was acting with the knowledge of the trial judge and the deputy district attorney, but without promises of any sort on their part. The license was obtained, and Erasmus and Amelia were married. When the motion was made to dismiss the charge against Erasmus, Judge Gray called in the official reporter and conducted an examination of the parties to establish that a voluntary marriage had been entered into, and then dismissed the case.

When the two families reached the street after the dismissal of the case, the intense feeling between them flared up because of the insistence of the Rodricks that the young people make their home with them, the Silverias insisting that it be made with them. The discussion became so animated as to create a street scene. It was finally arranged that young Silveria should drive his parents home, as neither could drive the automobile, Amelia and her father accompanying them. When they arrived at the Silveria home, Rodrick refused to allow his daughter to remain there with her husband. Erasmus did remain there. Amelia returned to the Rodrick home. Neither thereafter left their respective homes, and have not lived together since. Mrs. Rodrick made further efforts to have the rape charge renewed. The Silverias provided and furnished a room for the young people and asked Amelia to live there, but she refused. Rodrick testified that he was willing "to furnish a house, groceries, grub for thirty days or sixty days or until he ever get a job, get the credit in the store." After a time the Silverias went to Petersen for advice, and he advised them properly that a wife must conform to a reasonable mode of living provided by the husband, and he wrote a letter to that effect to Amelia, which was signed by Erasmus. An answer to it seems to have been prepared by an attorney named Wilson. Several weeks passed, during which Erasmus received a letter from Amelia saying she would do anything he wished, and to come and get her. Another letter was dictated by Petersen, signed by Erasmus, and sent to Amelia, in which Erasmus reiterated his desire that Amelia come and live with him and that he would be glad to show her what arrangements had been made. Copies of these letters are set forth in the copy of the affidavit of Erasmus Silveria attached to Petersen's answer in these proceedings. No response was ever received to the last letter, and Rodrick engaged an attorney to bring an action against young Silveria for maintenance, with motions for alimony, attorney's fees and costs. This came on for hearing, and Petersen filed an affidavit therein, prepared by himself and sworn to by Silveria, wherein it was stated, Petersen claims by inadvertence, that Amelia was but 14 years of age, quite contrary to Petersen's contention and what the Rodricks had sworn to in securing a marriage license. The making of this statement is cited here as a damning admission on the part of Petersen that he knew all the time that Amelia was 14. When the preliminary motion for alimony, etc., came on, in answer to some questions by the court, it was stated that Amelia was but 14 years of age, which raised a question as to the status of the marriage, and in consequence no order was made of any kind in the matter. The attorney for the Rodricks then charged Petersen with misconduct in having theretofore advised the Rodricks to swear falsely about the age of Amelia. Petersen's explanation of the reference in the affidavit to Amelia's age is rather weak. He claimed that any reference to her age in the affidavit was an inadvertence, and immaterial in the then proceeding; that a valid marriage had been solemnized, and the material matter he was called on to combat was the refusal of Amelia to live with her husband; and that he was in fact relying upon the statement made by Rodrick in his office that Amelia was 16. The action for support came on subsequently to be heard, Petersen, as attorney for Silveria, having filed an answer and cross-complaint for divorce. Neither party prevailed. Thereafter, Amelia swore to the charges against Petersen here being considered.

Upon the record we are confronted with the problem as to which of two constructions to adopt upon a hopeless conflict of testimony concerning what actually did happen and what Petersen actually did say. We must either conclude that Petersen deliberately advised the Rodricks to commit perjury under conditions of publicity and liability to official investigation in connection with the dismissal of a criminal charge, or that the Rodricks have unintentionally or intentionally distorted into a semblance of truth Petersen's endeavors to make them understand the age requirements of the statute, he being himself convinced and believing at the time, that Amelia was 16 years old and that her parents were not telling the exact truth as to her age. As to what occurred, and the exact language used, we cannot be certain. There are conflicts, inconsistencies and contradictions, however, in the testimony as a whole, some due, no doubt, to the antagonistic feelings of the two families, the imperfect understanding and expression of the English language, a strong taint of animus from different angles toward Petersen, and certain testimony that bears all the earmarks of having been rehearsed by the Rodricks and their corroborating witnesses.

[3, 4] In a matter as serious as the disbarment of an attorney at law, with its attendant degradation and probable effects upon a man's livelihood, the accused is, and should be, entitled to every favorable intendment and inference in his favor, and to the benefit of such proof of good character and reputation as he is able to make. The great weight of authority is to this effect. There was no direct attack on the truth and honesty of any witness. The evidence of Petersen and the Silverias is entitled to as full weight as that of the other witnesses, and the conflict between it and that of the accusers must be resolved, we feel, by consideration of all the circumstances of the case, the animus and desires of the complaining parties, and the impetus given to the prosecution by the advice of an attorney whose actions indicate that he felt that some one had grievously erred in bringing about the marriage of Amelia and Erasmus under the facts as related by the Rodricks. On the whole record of this part of the proceeding to disbar the petitioner, we can accept it as tending only to raise little more than a suspicion that Petersen may have been decidedly indiscreet in his method of procuring the dismissal of the criminal charge against his client. The evidence does not have the persuasive force the local committee appears to have accorded it.

[5] Coming now to the charge against Petersen made by Brelín, it appears from the record that Brelín, as architect, had rendered services to Mrs. John F. Borden. A controversy arose between them as to the amount finally due Brelín. Mrs. Borden sent Brelín a check for the sum of $280, marked "Paid in full." Brelín, claiming that Mrs. Borden owed him $720, and "being afraid of doing anything with the check," took it to Petersen, and placed it in the latter's keeping with instructions "not to do anything with the check to hurt the case." At the same time, he directed Petersen to file suit against Mrs. Borden "for the entire bill." What Petersen did in the matter is established by the following findings, made by the local administrative committee and adopted by the Board of Governors. In our opinion, they are fully supported by the evidence. They are:

"II. That the said Cedric W. Petersen received from one Hilding G. Brelín a check in the sum of $280, dated November 5, 1926, and drawn in favor of the said Hilding G. Brelín, and signed by Mrs. John F. Borden, and drawn on the Central National Bank of Oakland, California; that upon the face of said check appeared in writing the following, to wit: 'In full'; that said Cedric W. Petersen, upon the 20th of November, 1926, drew a line through the words 'in full' on the face of said check, and endorsed the same as follows: 'On account only, H. G. Brelín by C. W. Petersen, his Attorney, Cedric W. Petersen, Trustee.'

"III. That upon the 20th day of November, 1926, said Cedric W. Petersen caused the said check to be certified by said Central National Bank; that upon the 22nd day of November, 1926, said Cedric W. Petersen deposited said check in an account in the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank (now the First National Bank in Oakland) which account was designated as 'Cedric W. Petersen, Trustee'; that thereafter, and within a period of one month said Cedric W. Petersen withdrew the greater portion of said money and appropriated it to his own use; that at no time from the 15th day of November, 1926, until the 14th day of February, 1927, did the said H. G. Brelin know that said Cedric W. Petersen had caused said check to be certified, or had deposited said check in said bank, or at all, or had used the same, or any part or portion thereof, for his own personal use, or otherwise, and that at no time did said H. G. Brelin, or any one in his behalf authorize said Cedric W. Petersen to use the said money represented by the said check, or any part or portion thereof, for his own use.

"IV. That on the 22nd day of November, 1926, the said Cedric W. Petersen caused the said H. G. Brelin to verify a complaint filed in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Alameda, against Clara F. Borden (who is the same person as said Mrs. John F. Borden) and John F. Borden, her husband, and which said complaint set forth the full amount of the claim of said H. G. Brelin against the said Bordens, and which said full amount of said claim was in the amount of $720, and which said complaint set forth that no payment had been made thereon, and that the entire sum was due, owing and unpaid; and upon the said date, the said Cedric W. Petersen also caused the said H. G. Brelin to execute an affidavit for the purpose of securing a Writ of Attachment in said action, in which the averments were in substance the same as the said allegations of the said complaint; that on the 23rd day of November, 1926, the said Cedric W. Petersen wilfully caused said complaint and affidavit to be filed with the Clerk of said Court, and a Writ of Attachment to be issued on said affidavit, knowing that said verified complaint and said affidavit to obtain said Writ of Attachment were false and untrue, in that said check had theretofore been certified and banked as aforesaid;

"V. That at the time said Hilding G. Brelin delivered said check to said Petersen, said Petersen was told by said Hilding G. Brelin that he could do with said check as he saw fit, but to deal with it so as not to injure his case against said Bordens;

"VI. That said Petersen at all times concealed from said Brelin the fact that he had caused said check to be certified; also the fact that he had altered said check; also the fact that he had deposited said check in his account; also the fact that he had used the greater portion of the sum represented by said check, and that none of said facts were disclosed to said Brelin until the trial of said case against the Bordens, when the check was produced during the cross-examination of said Brelin by counsel for defendants;

"VII. Shortly following the trial of said action in the Superior Court, said Brelin made a demand upon said Petersen for an accounting of said sum of $280, but that said Cedric W. Petersen has at all times failed to render any such account; that shortly thereafter said Brelin recovered a judgment in the Justice's Court of Oakland Township against said Petersen for said sum of $280."

Other than these facts so found, the court, in the action, Brelin v. Borden, decided that Mrs. Borden was indebted to Brelin in the sum of $280, and no more. After Brelin obtained the judgment against Petersen for the amount of the check, the latter paid $50 on account. Before the balance was paid these proceedings in disbarment were brought, and Petersen claims the proceeding was brought as a means of compelling him to pay in full. Since this inquiry was inaugurated he has paid the judgment, including interest and costs. He made a plausible, but not convincing, explanation of his method of carrying his personal and clients' bank accounts, and offered in excuse of his action in depositing the check and appropriating the money the contention that Brelin was indebted to him for legal services. The explanation does not satisfy. The whole transaction, which is reflected in the findings on the charge made by Brelin, was not conducted along any high, or even medium, standard, if there can be a medium standard in legal ethics. We are unable to accept petitioner's contention that, when Brelin placed the Borden check in his hands and told him to do whatever he thought best with it so long as it did not affect Brelin's claim against Mrs. Borden, he (Petersen) was thereby authorized to collect the amount of the check and appropriate the money to his own use. He had no right to so use the money. He was further guilty of misconduct as an attorney at law in causing Brelin to swear to the truth of the allegation in the complaint against Mrs. Borden, and to make the affidavit for attachment in the action, in each of which it was alleged there was due Brelin the sum of $720, when in fact, as Petersen well knew, under any theory of the case, $280 had been paid on the claim for services rendered by Brelin.

Both the local administrative committee and the Board of Governors of the State Bar accorded Petersen every reasonable opportunity to clear himself of the serious charges involving his conduct and standing as a member of the legal profession. By the terms of the State Bar Act (section 26), the burden was cast upon him of showing here wherein the decision of the Board of Governors was erroneous or unlawful. He has not satisfactorily lifted that burden. His explanation and defense of his actions have not been satisfactory. But we feel, under all the circumstances as detailed above, that a judgment of suspension from the right to practice for a definite period will be adequate punishment for the offense committed by petitioner, instead of the more drastic penalty of disbarment. Prior to the initiation of these charges against the petitioner, he appears to have enjoyed a good reputation as an attorney, having a large clientele, and being intrusted with the handling of important matters for his clients. He has rested under the cloud of these charges, followed by the recommendation of the Bar Governors, for a year and a half, which in and of itself is a severe ordeal.

It is therefore ordered that the action of the Board of Governors in this matter be approved, in so far as the findings and decision relate to the charges made against petitioner by Hilding G. Brelin, and that Cedric W. Petersen be suspended from the rights and privileges of an attorney at law for the period of one year from and after the date of the filing of this order.

KAUFMAN v. TOMICH et al. (L. A. 9205.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 23, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨400—Municipality, commanding act inherently wrong, and agent, performing work, are both liable to any one injured thereby.

If an act commanded by municipality is inherently wrong, both municipality and agent performing the work are answerable in damages to any one injured thereby, even in absence of negligence in its performance.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨379, 400—Statute held not to give city engineer complete discretion in preparing plans and specifications for public improvements, but, if it did, city's liability for results would be unchanged (Vrooman Act [St. 1885, p. 147, as amended by St. 1891, p. 206] § 34).

Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, as amended by St. 1891, p. 206) § 34, does not give complete power and discretion to city engineer in preparation of plans and specifications and other engineering work necessary in carrying out public improvements, and, if it did, it would be merely substituting engineer as another agency of municipality for city council or board of public works, and would not change city's liability, if any, for results.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨388—City was liable if construction of sewer in particular location caused damage to abutting property (Const. art. 1, § 14).

If by reason of construction of sewer in particular location in street, abutting property was damaged, no compensation having first been made to owner, as required by Const. art. 1, § 14, city committed a legal wrong for which it was liable, since, in determining necessity of sewer, city by its council was acting in its governmental capacity, but in planning location and construction of sewer it was acting in its corporate or ministerial capacity.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨388—If plan and location of sewer were inherently dangerous, city was liable to abutting property owner.

If, as found by trial court, plan and location of sewer by city council were inherently dangerous, city was liable for damages to abutting property owner resulting therefrom.

5. Evidence ⇨508—Expert testimony that location and manner of constructing sewer were likely to endanger abutting property through removal of lateral support held admissible.

In action for damages to plaintiff's property, including retaining wall, from improperly planning, locating, and constructing sewer, evidence of witnesses experienced in similar excavation work that location and manner of construction of ditch were likely to endanger plaintiff's property held properly admitted; effect of removal of lateral support from soil on a hillside, composed of black adobe on a thick layer of mixed shale and clay, with subbase of clay, not being a matter of such common knowledge that opinion of experts would not be enlightening.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨404(6)—Evidence held to warrant finding that location of sewer was inherently dangerous to abutting property, and wrong, because of removal of lateral support.

In action against sewer contractor and city for damages to plaintiff's property, including retaining wall, from improperly planning, locating, and constructing sewer, evidence held to sustain finding that location and alignment of sewer were intrinsically dangerous and inherently wrong, and were of such nature and in such close proximity to plaintiff's property as to cause injury thereto by removing lateral support.

7. Municipal corporations ⇨400—Sewer contractor, having undertaken work dangerous to abutting property, and not having taken proper precautions, was liable for damages.

Sewer contractor, having undertaken to carry out work which was inherently dangerous to abutting property, and not having taken precautions which might have averted injury to said property, was liable therefor.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1071(3)—That finding that city did not require sides of ditch to be braced was contrary to evidence held immaterial, in view of finding that location of sewer endangered abutting property.

In action against sewer contractor and city for damages to plaintiff's property, including retaining wall, from improperly planning, locating, and constructing sewer, fact that finding that city did not by its specifications require sides of ditch to be braced was contrary to evidence was immaterial, where court found that location of ditch by city endangered plaintiff's property, since under such finding it was duty of city at all events to prevent injury.

9. Municipal corporations $\S$ 395(1)—Court was justified in determining damages for subsidence from cost of concrete garage which restored property, where expense was less than that of excavating for retaining wall.

Court's finding as to amount of property owner's damages, due to removal of lateral support by sewer construction, was proper, though based on cost of construction of concrete garage for restoring retaining wall, where evidence showed cost of garage was less than cost of excavating for retaining wall and served same purpose.

10. Appeal and error $\S$ 221—Defendants could not complain for first time on appeal that incorrect measure of damages was adopted.

Defendants, who tried case below on theory that measure of damages adopted by court in its finding was correct, could not complain for first time on appeal that measure of damages so adopted was improper.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by Ethel Clayton Kaufman against Peter Tomich and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of the District Court of Appeal in 272 P. 1082.

Jess E. Stephens, Frederick Von Schrader, and Lucius P. Green, all of Los Angeles, for appellant city of Los Angeles.

Hewitt, Crump & Penn, of Los Angeles (Pierce Works, J. F. Moroney, and Guy Richards Crump, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant Tomich.

K. A. Miller, Herbert N. Ellis, and Miller & Ellis, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. For reasons hereinafter more fully stated, this cause was taken over by this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 2. The action is one for damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff's property by reason of the installation of a sewer. The defendant city, through its engineering department, prepared the plans and specifications for a sewer in Fairfield avenue as proposed in a resolution of intention adopted by the city council, and a contract for the construction of the sewer was let to defendant Tomich. During the course of the work, and while the street ditches were open, the plaintiff's property, abutting on Fairfield avenue, was damaged by a shifting of the soil upon which plaintiff's retaining wall and the foundation of her house rested. It was plaintiff's theory, as evidenced by the allegations of her complaint, that the injury to her property resulted from the joint negligence of the city, in improperly planning and locating the sewer line, and of the contractor, in undertaking to install the sewer as so improperly planned and aligned. There are also allegations of the contractor's negligent performance of the work. Judgment went for the plaintiff against both defendants, each of whom thereafter appealed.

[1] Mr. Justice Strother, sitting pro tem. in the District Court of Appeal, in a minority opinion declared, and properly so, that if the act commanded by the municipality was inherently wrong, then both the municipality and the agent performing the work would be answerable in damages to any one injured thereby, even in the absence of negligence in its performance. This declaration finds support in Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 789, 127 P. 50, 53, wherein the rule is expressed in the following language: "Upon the other hand, if the act is one commanded by the municipality itself, if inherently wrong, the municipality and the agent who performed will both be liable. * * * If the injury results, however, not from the wrongful plan or character of the work, but from the negligent or improper manner in which it is performed, the one so negligently acting will always be responsible, and the public corporation may or may not be responsible, depending upon the relationship which it may sustain to that agent."

Being satisfied that the trial court, on competent evidence, had found the plan and location of the sewer to be inherently wrong and dangerous, Judge Strother declared, as his opinion, that judgment was properly entered against both defendants. Mr. Presiding Justice Koford, of the District Court of Appeal, in an opinion concurred in by Mr. Justice Nourse, agreed with that part of Judge Strother's opinion affirming the judgment against the defendant Tomich, but disagreed with that portion which affirmed the judgment against the defendant city of Los Angeles. In reversing the judgment against the defendant city, the opinion of Mr. Presiding Justice Koford declared that "the damage to plaintiff's property was caused by the negligence of the contractor in failing to carry out faithfully the specifications and not by the public work as planned, specified and contemplated."

When the cause came here on petitions for hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal, we were impressed with the fact that the foregoing quotation appeared to be inconsistent and at variance with those findings of the lower court which, if sustained by the evidence, undoubtedly warranted the entry of judgment against the defendant city as well as against the defendant contractor. The trial court found that the "location and alignment of the said sewer were intrinsically dangerous and inherently wrong, and were of such a nature and of so close proximity to the front of plaintiff's property and plaintiff's wall as were likely in the natural course of construction of the said sewer thereunder, to damage and injure said plaintiff's property by removing the lateral support from plaintiff's property in the excavating of the ditch for said sewer * * * and the court especially finds that the aforesaid negligence of the defendant the city of Los Angeles in designing and making said plans and specifications and the carrying out of said defective plans and specifications by the said defendant Peter Tomich, conjoined together to remove the lateral support of the soil under said wall and under the property of plaintiff, and conjointly contributed to destroy the wall, lawn and shrubbery on said plaintiff's property and the foundation under plaintiff's house, and placed plaintiff's house in imminent danger of toppling into the street, and necessitated immediate action on the part of said plaintiff in replacing the foundation under said house and the replacing of said wall and the restoring of said soil on said property to prevent further damage to plaintiff's property. * * *

In taking the cause over, it was our sole purpose, therefore, to examine the record with a view to determining whether the foregoing findings found support therein. Examination satisfies us that there is ample evidence in the record to sustain those findings. We are in complete accord, therefore, with the conclusions announced in the opinion written by Mr. Justice Strother pro tem., and we adopt it as the opinion and decision of this court herein, as follows:

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for damages to real property. The city council of the city of Los Angeles adopted a resolution of intention to lay a sewer on Fairfield avenue, a street upon which plaintiff's property abuts, to be constructed in accordance with specifications adopted by the council and plans and profiles on file in the office of the city engineer. A contract for the construction was let to the defendant Tomich.

Plaintiff's property was situated on the south side of Fairfield avenue, and sloped at a considerable angle toward the street, and at the line was about 7 feet above the street. A concrete retaining wall formed the property line. The defendant Tomich, in performance of his contract, dug a ditch in the street 7 or 8 feet from plaintiff's line and about 7½ feet deep in which to lay the sewer. The ditch was dug in sections 6 or 7 feet long, about 6 feet apart, with tunnels at the bottom between the sections. Directly after the excavation of the ditch, the westerly part of plaintiff's lot and part of a vacant lot west of hers began to slip diagonally toward the street, breaking the retaining wall and taking out part of the foundation of plaintiff's house, which was set about 15 feet back of the street line. It was the contention of plaintiff that the damage to her resulted from the conjoint negligence of the city in improperly planning and locating the sewer line and of the contractor in negligently performing the work. There was testimony on her behalf that the side of the ditch nearest her property cracked and bulged in, and that the contractor did not properly brace the sides of the ditch, so as to prevent movement of the earth. Judgment went for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal separately upon a joint bill of exceptions.

It is argued on behalf of the appellant city of Los Angeles that the only act of the city was a governmental one, in declaring the necessity for the construction of the sewer; that the plans and specifications for its construction were the work of an independent agent, the city engineer, and the carrying out of the plans and specifications solely the responsibility of the contractor. The case of Haughawout v. Hubbard, 131 Cal. 675, 63 P. 1078, and other cases, are cited in support of the proposition that the city is not liable for the acts of its officers in preparing specifications and doing other engineering work. But in all of these cases the court was considering, not the liability of the municipality, but the sufficiency and regularity of the proceedings as authority for proceeding with the proposed work, or the enforcement of the lien of assessments against the property liable for its cost. The cases which hold that a municipality is not liable for the acts of its administrative officers are those where the officer had omitted the performance of his legal duty, or done some act in violation, or in excess, of his legal duty, as in the case of Sievers v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 648, 47 P. 687, 56 Am. St. Rep. 153.

[2, 3] Section 34 of the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, as amended by St. 1891, p. 206) does not, as argued by the appellants, give complete power and discretion to the city engineer in the preparation of plans and specifications and other engineering work necessary in carrying out public improvements, and, if it did, it would be merely substituting him as another agency of the municipality for the city council or the board of public works, and would not change its liability, if any, for the results. The city council in its resolution of intention expressly designated the specifications for the work—which specifications it had theretofore adopted by ordinance—and defined the location of the sewer. In determining the necessity of the sewer, the city, by its counsel was acting in its governmental capacity; in planning the location and construction of the sewer, in its corporate or ministerial capacity, in the construction of a public work of the municipality. If, by reason of its construction in the particular location, the plaintiff's property was damaged, no "compensation having first been made," as required by article 1, § 14, of the Constitution, the city committed a legal wrong for which it is liable.

[4] The question whether the liability existed at common law or was created by the constitutional provision is immaterial, as the nature of the liability is the same in either case. In Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. at page 789, 127 P. 53, it is said: "Upon the other hand, if the act is one commanded by the municipality itself, if inherently wrong, the municipality and the agent who performed will both be liable." Again: "Wherever the injury complained of is the taking or damaging of private property for public use without compensation then under the guarantee of the federal constitution against such invasion of the private rights of property, neither the state itself nor any of its agencies or mandatories may claim exemption from liability." Id. The decisions in this state are uniform to the same effect. In this case, the court having found from competent evidence that the plan and location of the sewer was inherently dangerous, it comes within the rule.

[5, 6] It is urged by appellant city of Los Angeles that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding that the "location and alignment of said sewer was intrinsically dangerous and inherently wrong." Over the objection of defendants, witnesses, who were shown to be experienced in excavation similar in kind and location to that in this case, were permitted to testify that the location and manner of construction of the ditch were likely to endanger plaintiff's property. It is argued that this was not a matter upon which expert testimony was admissible, and appellant Tomich contends that, if the finding was true, he was not liable, and both appellants contend that no joint liability was shown. But it does not seem to us that the effect of the removal of lateral support from soil, on a hillside, composed of an overburden of black adobe on a thick layer of mixed shale and clay, with a sublease of clay, is of such common knowledge that the judgment of those experienced in working under such conditions would not be enlightening, or that the amount of care necessary to prevent soil of that character and in that position from caving, is matter of common knowledge. If they were matters of common knowledge it would seem hardly necessary to have the aid of an engineer, skilled in the planning and supervision of such work, in preparing its plans and specifications and locating its line. This evidence, with the evidence of the physical facts and of what happened, was sufficient to support the finding of the court.

[7] The contractor having undertaken to carry out a work which the court found was inherently dangerous to plaintiff, and having been found by the court not to have taken the precautions which might have averted injury to plaintiff, was also liable.

[8] Certain other findings of the court are objected to by appellants as not supported by the evidence. The finding that the city did not, by its specifications, require that the sides of the ditch should be braced, was contrary to the evidence. There was testimony, however, to the effect that they were not braced, and the court so found. The court having found that the location of the ditch endangered plaintiff's property, it was the duty of the city at all events to prevent the injury and the finding was immaterial.

The complaint alleged, and the court found, that the notice mentioned in section 832 of the Civil Code, defining the rights of coterminal owners to lateral support, and providing that each shall have the right to make proper and usual excavations on his own land, on "giving * * * reasonable notice to the other of his intention to make such excavations," was not given. There was, in the answer, no denial of the allegation, but merely a denial of the further allegation that "no notice was given."

[9] It is claimed by appellants that the amount of damages found by the court was excessive. Plaintiff restored the retaining wall by the construction of a concrete garage. Witnesses on her behalf testified that the cost of this structure was less than would have been the cost of excavating for a solid foundation for an ordinary retaining wall and replacing the earth behind it, and served the same purpose of restoring and maintaining the stability of plaintiff's property. This was sufficient justification for the court's finding.

[10] Appellants contend that the measure of damages adopted by the court in its finding was not correct, and that the finding should have been as to the difference in the value of the property before and after the injury, not the cost of restoring it to its original condition. The question is raised for the first time on this appeal, and the case was tried by both parties on the theory that the latter was the proper measure of damages. Appellants should not now be heard for the first time on appeal to complain that the case was tried on an erroneous theory. Kincaid v. Dunn, 26 Cal. App. 686, 148 P. 235.

The judgment is affirmed.

DUFOUR v. SEYMOUR et al. (Civ. 7004.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 24, 1929.

Master and servant $\S$ 417(7)—Finding of Industrial Accident Commission on testimony presenting substantial conflict on question whether servant was injured in course of employment is controlling.

Where testimony in proceeding before Industrial Accident Commission was in substantial conflict upon question whether or not servant was injured in course of his employment, finding of Industrial Commission is controlling.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Certiorari by Earl Dufour to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for injuries to Al Seymour. Writ denied.

Fabian D. Brown, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner and Wm. B. Hornblower, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The testimony in the above-entitled matter seems to present a substantial conflict upon the question of whether or not the petitioner was injured in the course of his employment; and in that state of the record the finding of the respondent Commission is controlling.

The application for the writ is, therefore denied upon that ground.

PACIFIC-SOUTHWEST TRUST & SAVINGS BANK v. VALLEY FINANCE CORPORATION. (Civ. 6477.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. August 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 3, 1929.

Bills and notes $\S$ 351—Accommodation party can set up, as against holder taking instrument for value after maturity, any defense he might have (Civ. Code, § 3110).

Notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 3110, defining accommodation party and providing that such person is liable on instrument to holder for value notwithstanding such holder at time of taking instrument knew him to be only accommodation party, accommodation party can set up any defense he might have as against holder taking instrument for value after maturity.

Appeal from Superior Court, of Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 279 P. 222.

H. A. Savage, of Fresno, for appellant.

Christian Hoeppner and Wakefield & Hansen, all of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff has filed a petition for a rehearing. It earnestly presses the point that the rights of the plaintiff as an accommodation party are those of a holder for value notwithstanding that it took the note after its maturity.

At an early date the point was decided against the plaintiff. Coghlin v. May, 17 Cal. 515. In 1917 we adopted the Uniform Negotiable Instrument Law (Stats. 1917, p. 1531). It was adopted by incorporating it into our Civil Code and it became division 3, part 4, title 15. As so adopted it contained four chapters. Some of the chapters contained as many as eight articles or more. When so adopted it will be noted that the Civil Code contained cognate provisions (sections 953, 1459) and that the Code of Civil Procedure contained cognate provisions. Code Civ. Proc. § 368. We are commanded by the law-making power to read the provisions of our four codes as though all such Codes had been passed at the same moment of time and were parts of the same statute, and if the provisions of any article conflict with or contravene the provisions of another article of the same chapter, the provisions of each article must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such article. Pol. Code, §§ 4480 and 4483. When the note in suit was executed our statutes provided as follows: In the Civil Code, section 3133 defined "a holder in due course." That definition does not include this plaintiff. Section 3139 provided: "In the hands of any holder other than a holder in due course, a negotiable instrument is subject to the same defenses as if it were nonnegotiable. * * *" Section 1459 provided: "A non-negotiable written contract for the payment of money * * * may be transferred. * * * Such indorsement shall transfer all the rights of the assignor under the instrument to the assignee, subject to all equities and defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time of the indorsement." Section 953 provided: "A thing in action is a right to recover money * * * by a judicial proceeding." Section 368, Code of Civil Procedure, provided: "In the case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee is without prejudice to any set-off, or other defense existing at the time of, or before, notice of the assignment. * * " Section 3097, Civil Code, provided: " * * As between the immediate parties, and as regards a remote party other than a holder in due course, * * * the delivery may be shown to have been conditional, or for a special purpose only, and not for the purpose of transferring the property in the instrument. * * *" There is no provision which expressly excepts accommodation paper from the foregoing rules. If it is to be excepted the exception rests in argument. Our statutes do not classify commercial paper and then state the rules pertinent to accommodation instruments. But in the Civil Code, title 15, sections 3082-3206, chapter 1 is addressed to instruments in general, chapter 2 to bills of exchange, chapter 3 to promissory notes and checks, and chapter 4 is the embodiment of general provisions. There is no chapter and there is no article addressed to accommodation paper. There is section 3110 which defines an accommodation party and then provides: "Such person is liable on the instrument to a holder for value, notwithstanding such holder at the time of taking the instrument knew him to be only an accommodation party." The plaintiff cites and relies on that section as supporting its claims. That argument fails to take into consideration a well-known fact in the history of jurisprudence.

From an early date the contention was made that an accommodation party could set up as a defense, want of consideration, as against an indorsee who took the instrument for value before maturity. 8 C. J., § 410; Violett v. Patton, 5 Cranch (9 U. S.) 142, 151, (3 L. Ed. 61). The provision relied on, section 3110, is apparently an enactment to settle the rule just mentioned. Nothing on its face shows to the contrary. It is in an article addressed to "Consideration." Conceding, solely for argument, that there is any conflict between that section and other sections of the same title, the provisions of section 3139, which is contained in an article on "Rights of Holder," will control (Pol. Code, § 4483), and as section 3139 is the later in numerical order it will control for that additional reason (Pol. Code, § 4484). But we think there is no conflict, and for the soundest of reasons the position of the defendant may not be disturbed. The construction which we have adopted gives force and effect to each and all of the provisions of the statute and does not lead to an absurdity. As between the Valley Bank and this defendant each and every defense which this defendant sought to interpose would have been sustained. First National Bank v. Reed, 198 Cal. 252, 244 P. 368. But as we have just shown by the provisions of our statutes, the rights of this defendant against this plaintiff are the same as against the Valley Bank. These conclusions are supported by what is known as the majority rule. Brannan's Negotiable Instrument Law (4th Ed.) p. 286; Wilhoit v. Seavall, 121 Kan. 239, 246 P. 1013, 48 A. L. R. 1273, and note. Ir Rylee v. Wilkerson, 134 Miss. 663, 669, 99 So. 901, at page 902, the Supreme Court of Mississippi said: "There appears no sound reason for the distinction in the two classes of negotiable paper, and it would seem that the makers, indorsers, or acceptors of accommodation paper should be permitted the same defenses as are guaranteed to the makers, indorsers, or acceptors of negotiable paper for value."

In Cottrell v. Watkins, 89 Va. 801, 817, 17 S. E. 328, 333, 19 L. R. A. 754, 759, 37 Am. St. Rep. 897, on page 906, the Supreme Court of Virginia stated the contention and then expressed itself as follows:

"Why, then, subject the makers, indorsers, or acceptors of such paper to this species of outlawry by denying to them the defenses guaranteed to the makers, indorsers, and acceptors of negotiable paper for value?"

"We know of no sufficient reason upon which to found any such doctrine, nor do we believe the ingenuity of man can suggest one. The reason, and the only reason, given in the books is that it is 'considered that parties to accommodation paper hold themselves out to the public by their signatures, to be bound to every person who shall take the same for value, to the same extent as if paid to him personally.' This is no reason whatever for the distinction, as precisely the same reason is applicable to the parties to paper for value."

Finally, in the case of Bartels v. Suter, 130 Okl. 7, 11, 266 P. 753, page 757, the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, after making an exhaustive study of the subject, reaches the conclusion that the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act " * * * should be construed as rendering an accommodation party liable to a holder for value only when such holder, or those through whom he acquired the instrument, became a holder for value before maturity of the instrument."

The petition is denied.

KIYOSHI WATANABE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SACRAMENTO
COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3853.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. June 28, 1929.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1929. Hearing
Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 26, 1929.

Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 355(2)—Findings and judgment on jury's special findings were properly refused, where special findings were too general, vague, uncertain, incomplete, and indefinite.

Where special findings of jury in favor of defendant were too general, vague, uncertain, incomplete, and indefinite to support judgment, court properly refused to enter findings and judgment on such special findings.

Petition by Kiyoshi Watanabe for a writ of mandamus directing the Superior Court in and for the County of Sacramento and J. R. Hughes, Judge of said court, to enter findings and judgment in favor of defendant on special findings of jury in action pending in said court in which K. Ito is plaintiff and Kiyoshi Watanabe is defendant. Petition denied.

Busick & Leeper, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Lee Gebhart, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a writ of mandate, directing the respondent court to enter findings and judgment in favor of the defendant on the special findings of the jury in an action pending in said court in which K. Ito is plaintiff and petitioner herein is defendant, is denied on the ground that such special findings are too general, vague, uncertain, indefinite, and incomplete to support the judgment. Hall v. Mitchell, 59 Cal. App. 744, 748, 211 P. 853.

PEOPLE v. FERLITO. (Cr. 1803.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 19, 1929.

1. Robbery $\S$ 24(4)—Robbery is established by proof of theft of any amount of money, no matter how small, other elements of robbery being present.

That defendant entered bank and made threats as to what he would do if any one interfered with him and was heard handling money in the cage, and thereafter there was shortage of money, was sufficient to establish robbery, as theft of any amount would be sufficient to make crime of robbery.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1159(3)—In appeal from conviction of robbery, appellate court could not pass upon conflicting evidence.

Where defendant was convicted of crime of robbery and there was a conflict between testimony as to defendant's whereabouts at time of robbery, appellate court could not pass upon conflicting evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Joseph Ferlito was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred E. Paonessa, of Los Angeles, and Charles A. Ruby, of Huntington Park, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

YORK, J. This case was tried by the court without a jury, after a waiver of a jury trial by the defendant, his counsel, and the district attorney, regularly entered in the record.

The whole appeal appears to be predicated upon the belief that the appellate court can pass upon conflicting evidence. The objection is made that the trial court "could have given no credit whatever to the witnesses for defendant, otherwise an alibi was fully established." The defendant was identified as the robber. The testimony of only one witness would be sufficient to enable the court to make its finding of guilt.

[1] There was proof of the corpus delicti in that a party, identified as the defendant, entered the bank and with a drawn revolver made threats as to what he would do if any one interfered with him, and was heard handling money in the cage, and thereafter there was evidence that there was a shortage of the funds in the cage. It makes no difference what the amount of the shortage was; the theft of any amount would be sufficient to make the crime robbery.

[2] The doctrine of the credibility of the testimony of witnesses has no application to this case, as there was a direct conflict between the testimony of defendant's witnesses that the defendant was at King City at the time of the robbery, and the testimony of the witness who testified that appellant was present in the bank and committed the robbery in Alhambra, at the same time fixed by defendant's witnesses as the time he was in King City.

There being no other questions raised upon appeal, the judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

CHRIST v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 7020.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 24, 1929.

Depositions $\S$ 32—Superior court need not order deposition under letters rogatory from court not proved court of record, where testimony was not proved material.

Superior court was under no duty to make order for taking of deposition of witness pursuant to letters rogatory issued out of Court of Republic of Guatemala, where application was not accompanied by affidavit of materiality of witness' testimony, and it did not appear that court issuing letters was court of record.

Petition by Rodolfo Christ for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco, and Hon. James G. Conlan, as Presiding Judge. Writ denied.

Geo. Olshausen, of Berkeley, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The petition herein for a writ of mandate to compel the superior court, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, to make the necessary order for the taking of the deposition of a witness pursuant to letters rogatory issued out of the Third Court of First Instance of the Republic of Guatemala, is denied upon the grounds that the application made to the superior court was not accompanied by an affidavit showing the materiality of the testimony of the witness whose deposition was sought, nor did it appear from said application that the court out of which the letters rogatory issued was a court of record.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and George H. Johnson, Dist. Atty., and Wardwell D. Evans, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Bernardino, for the People.

Albert E. Weller and Fred Duffy, both of San Bernardino, for respondent.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. Defendant George Wilson was charged by an information filed by the district attorney of San Bernardino county, in each of two counts, with the crime of burglary. To count 1 he pleaded guilty, and in due course sentence was passed upon him, committing him to San Quentin. The other count was dismissed on motion of the district attorney.

Before the defendant was removed to the penitentiary in execution of his sentence, the district attorney learned that he had several prior convictions to his credit and thereupon filed a supplemental information under the provisions of section 969a of the Penal Code (as added by St. 1927, p. 1064), charging, in separate counts, four prior convictions of felonies.

The first charged that the defendant was convicted of first degree burglary in Tulare county, Cal., in 1914 under the name of Frank Clark and was committed to the state penitentiary at San Quentin for the period of one year. In the second count the defendant was charged with having been convicted of burglary in the second degree in Yuba county, Cal., in 1919 under the name of William Henry Duncan, and that he was duly sentenced to five years in San Quentin. The third count was dismissed on motion of the district attorney and requires no comment here. The fourth count charged that the defendant was convicted in the Second judicial district court of the state of Nevada in and for the county of Washoe in 1926, under the name of Will Duncan, of the crime of attempted burglary in the second degree, and in due course was sentenced to the Nevada state prison.

The defendant made specific denial as to the truth of each of the alleged convictions set forth in the several counts.

Upon the trial of the case the district attorney offered in evidence a certified copy of the commitment issued out of the superior court in and for the county of Tulare. This commitment recited the fact that one Frank Clark pleaded guilty to the charge of burglary, and it was adjudged and decreed that the defendant Frank Clark be punished by imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin for one year. There is no recital in the commitment as to the degree of burglary.

In support of the allegations set forth in count 2, charging a prior conviction of felony in Yuba county, Cal., the district attorney introduced a certified copy of the commitment issued from the superior court in and for

PEOPLE v. WILSON. (Cr. 1807.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. August 20, 1929.

1. Criminal law ☞1202(3)—In prosecution for burglary, admission in evidence of defective commitment to show prior conviction of felony was not error (Pen. Code, §§ 459-461, 1192, and § 969a as added by St. 1927, p. 1064).

Where defendant was charged by information filed under Pen. Code, § 969a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1064, with crime of burglary and with four prior convictions of felonies, court did not err in admitting in evidence certified copy of prior commitment, defective under Pen. Code, §§ 459-461, and section 1192, in not reciting degree of burglary, as defendant had waived defect by serving his term of incarceration.

2. Criminal law ☞1202(3)—Commitment of foreign court held inadmissible as evidence of prior conviction, where not identified by its legal custodian.

In prosecution for burglary, original commitment of defendant issued by foreign court was improperly received in evidence to prove defendant's prior conviction, as document had not been identified by its legal custodian.

3. Criminal law ☞1156(2)—Court's discretion in granting new trial could not be disturbed, where evidence of identity of defendant conflicted.

In prosecution for burglary charging prior convictions, where evidence conflicted, there being sufficient evidence to support defendant's contention that he was not the same person convicted on former charge, court's discretion in granting new trial could not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

George Wilson was convicted of the crime of burglary and of prior convictions, and from an order granting a new trial the People appeal. Affirmed.

Yuba county reciting the plea of guilty to the charge of burglary on the part of defendant William Henry Duncan, the degree being therein fixed as second degree burglary.

One J. H. Carpenter, a witness produced by the prosecution, testified that he was and had been for a number of years past captain of the guard at San Quentin prison; that he recognized the defendant, George Wilson to be the same person who entered San Quentin in 1914 under the name of Frank Clark, having been committed from Tulare county, and also the same person who, under the name of William Henry Duncan, served a term in San Quentin beginning in 1919, having been committed from Yuba county.

As to the fourth count the district attorney offered what purported to be the original commitment issued from the Second judicial district court of the state of Nevada, in and for the county of Washoe, which recited a plea of guilty by the defendant Will Duncan to the charge of attempted burglary in the second degree. Attached to the commitment was a certified copy of the judgment of the court committing the defendant to the penitentiary. In addition, one Harlan L. Heward, testified that he was an assistant district attorney of the county of Washoe, Nev.; that the document which was put in evidence was obtained by him from the clerk of the Second judicial district court of that state, and that said document was the original commitment issued in that case; that he had filed the original information charging the defendant Will Duncan with the crime of burglary and that the defendant in that case pleaded guilty to attempted burglary in the second degree; and that the said defendant was committed to the state prison in Nevada, as indicated in the document offered as the original commitment. Heward further testified that defendant George Wilson was the same person against whom he had filed the information referred to, and who pleaded guilty in the Second judicial district court in Nevada, and who was committed to the penitentiary, pursuant to said plea of guilty.

The jury returned its verdict, finding each of the three charges of prior conviction to be true.

In due course, defendant filed his motion for a new trial. The record indicates that in presenting this motion, the defendant urged but two points of error: First, that the court erred in its ruling in admitting in evidence the certified copy of the commitment, issued out of the superior court in and for the county of Tulare, for the reason that the commitment does not declare whether the burglary was fixed as first or second degree burglary; and, secondly, that the court erred in its ruling in admitting the alleged original commitment from the state of Nevada, in that the only method provided by the laws of California for making proof of a judicial act of the court of a sister state is by a certified copy of such commitment, certified as provided in section 1905, Code of Civil Procedure.

The record further discloses that the court, at the time of its ruling on the motion for a new trial, discussed only the merits of appellant's contention regarding the admission in evidence of the original commitment from Nevada. However, the record would seem to indicate that the court granted a new trial as to all three of the counts of prior conviction of felonies, from which ruling the district attorney prosecutes this appeal.

Counsel for respondent in his brief contents himself with a mere statement that the commitment issued by the superior court of Tulare county was void for the reason that the degree of burglary was not found. No authorities are submitted by him in support of this contention.

Section 459 of the Penal Code specifies the acts that constitute the crime of burglary. Following in sections 460 and 461 are provisions for the classification of the acts constituting burglary and specifying the minimum and maximum periods of incarceration applicable to the several classes or degrees of burglary. A consideration of these sections of the Code would seem to indicate that there is but one crime denounced—that of burglary. The purpose of the Legislature in providing these degrees of the crime was undoubtedly to better enable the assessing of a more severe punishment for those cases of burglary, which are deemed particularly aggravating, and a lesser punishment for those cases which do not indicate a wholly abandoned heart on the part of the culprit. Section 1192 of the Penal Code reads as follows: "Upon a plea of guilty of a crime distinguished or divided into degrees, the court must, before passing sentence, determine the degree."

[1] Unquestionably the commitment is defective in that it does not recite the degree of burglary found, and assuming that the judgment is likewise defective, it does not follow that either or both are void. In fact, it has been decided in this state that a defect of this character may be corrected by the court on its own motion or on demand of the defendant, and thereupon the judgment would be enforced. People v. Jefferson, 52 Cal. 452; People v. Paraskevopolis, 42 Cal. App. 325, 183 P. 585.

That the defendant in the Tulare Case, whether he was George Wilson or some other person, had the right to waive the defect and serve his term of incarceration, as provided in the commitment, cannot be questioned, and in the absence of anything in the record, it will be presumed that the defect was waived.

The court unquestionably had jurisdiction of the defendant and of the crime with which he was charged, and any error or fault in the judgment or commitment did not render the judgment void.

We are satisfied that the court did not commit error in admitting in evidence the certified copy of the commitment from Tulare county. Marchi v. People, 75 Colo. 254, 224 P. 1053; Kelly v. People, 115 Ill. 583, 4 N. E. 644, 56 Am. Rep. 184.

[2] In support of the second point urged by appellant relating to the admission in evidence of the alleged original commitment from the state of Nevada, it is contended that the document was properly admitted in evidence under subdivision 7, section 1918, of the Code of Civil Procedure, while respondent urges that the only method provided for proving one's conviction of a felony in another state is by a certified copy of the judgment or record thereof, as provided by section 1905 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Assuming, but not deciding, that the record of a person's conviction of a felony in another state may be proven by the introduction of the original judgment or commitment, such document must necessarily be identified by the officer or person who is the legal custodian of such original document. The witness Heward, who presented the controverted document, stated that he had received it from the county clerk of Washoe county, who told him that it was the original commitment. Clearly the witness' testimony was hearsay and the document in question was not sufficiently identified to entitle it to be admitted in evidence. If a document is offered as the original judgment or commitment from a court of another state, it must come from the hands of one, who by law is intrusted with the keeping of the document in question, for it is only by reason of the knowledge and position of the custodian that the law attributes verity to the document and his testimony identifying it.

[3] Respondent further urges that, irrespective of the determination of the question as to the competency of the documents introduced in evidence, the court's order granting a new trial must be sustained, because there was a sharp conflict in the testimony as to whether or not the defendant George Wilson is the same person who was convicted of burglary in Tulare county under the name of Frank Clark, and who was convicted in Yuba county of the crime of burglary under the name of William Henry Duncan, and who was convicted in Nevada of the crime of attempted burglary under the name of Will

Duncan. The only testimony in the record identifying the defendant Wilson as the same person convicted in Tulare county under the name of Frank Clark and in Yuba county under the name of William Henry Duncan is that of J. H. Carpenter, who testified that he was captain of the guard at San Quentin and identified the defendant as the same person incarcerated in San Quentin prison under the name of Frank Clark and later under the name of Duncan. The only testimony identifying the defendant Wilson with the person convicted in Nevada, under the name of Will Duncan, was that of the deputy district attorney, Heward, who identified the defendant as the same person. The defendant Wilson in his own behalf denied that he was ever convicted of the crime of burglary in Tulare county, or of the crime of burglary in Yuba county, and stated that he had never been incarcerated in San Quentin prison. He likewise denied that he was convicted of the crime of attempted burglary in Washoe county, Nev., and denied that he had ever been incarcerated in the state prison in Nevada. The question of identification being a material one, and one upon which there was a conflict of evidence, it is within the discretionary powers of the court to grant a new trial. People v. Canfield, 173 Cal. 309, 159 P. 1046; People v. Petros, 25 Cal. App. 236, 143 P. 246; People v. Washington, 86 Cal. App. 133, 260 P. 806. As has been repeatedly held in this state, the court's action in granting a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal, where there is a conflict of evidence upon a material issue, unless it can be said that a verdict in favor of the moving party would not have found sufficient legal support in such evidence. Tweedale v. Barnett, 172 Cal. 271, 156 P. 483; Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. 732, 147 P. 960. Inasmuch as it cannot be said from the record that there was not sufficient evidence to support the defendant's contention that he was not the same person who was convicted in Tulare county and Yuba county, Cal., and in Washoe county, Nev., this court cannot say that error was committed by the trial court in granting a new trial.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

RIDEOUT v. EICH, County Treasurer.★
(Civ. 3844.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 26, 1929.

As Modified, on Denial of Rehearing, Aug. 7, 1929.

1. Counties ⇨204(5)—Though supervisors may compromise, settle, and adjust claims against county, they cannot by compromise give legal status to void claim.

Even though boards of supervisors possess power to compromise and settle and adjust claims against county, board cannot by compromise give legal status to claim against county which is otherwise void.

2. Counties ⇨152—County's agreement to pay difference between that paid and purchase price for real property could not validate previous contract incurring indebtedness exceeding county's income for year (Const. art. 11, § 18; Pol. Code, § 4101, subd. 6).

Agreement of county board of supervisors to pay difference between that already paid and price agreed upon as purchase price of certain real property, though difference to be paid was within amount in county treasury, could not validate previous agreement to lease and buy premises which was illegal because it incurred indebtedness or liability exceeding in year income and revenue provided for year in violation of Const. art. 11, § 18, and under which payment was void because not upon valid warrants based on orders as required by Pol. Code, § 4101, subd. 6.

3. Counties ⇨152—County's agreement to lease and purchase real property before money was raised held void as incurring indebtedness exceeding income for year (Const. art. 11, § 18).

Agreement by which county agreed to lease and purchase real property held void as incurring indebtedness in excess of county's income in year, in contravention of Const. art. 11, § 18, where no money had been raised by taxation authorizing leasing and purchasing of building and land.

4. Counties ⇨152—Contract originally void under Constitution cannot be ratified.

Ratification of contract originally void by reason of prohibitory provisions of Constitution cannot be had, since ratification presupposes power equivalent to previous authority.

5. Counties ⇨152—County, by agreeing to pay difference between that paid under previous illegal contract and purchase price of real property, could not waive return of money illegally paid (Const. art. 11, § 18; Civ. Code, § 1608; Pol. Code, § 4101, subd. 6).

County board of supervisors could not, by contract to pay difference between that already paid under contract to lease and purchase property before money was raised by taxation, in violation of Const. art. 11, § 18, because incurring indebtedness in excess of county's income for year and purchase price of property, waive return of money illegally paid out by county treasurer because not based on warrants as required by Pol. Code, § 4101, subd. 6, under Civ. Code, § 1608, providing that, if any part of single consideration for one or more objects or several considerations for single object is unlawful, entire contract is void.

PLUMMER, J. This cause is before us upon the petition of the above-named Phebe M. Rideout seeking a mandatory writ from this court directing the payment to her of the sum of $24,811.14 in cash, by the respondent herein, as treasurer of the county of Yuba.

The petitioner's cause of action is based upon a certain agreement dated the 14th day of May, 1929, entered into between the petitioner, as the party of the first part, and the board of supervisors of the county of Yuba, as the party of the second part. This agreement is in the words and figures following, to-wit:

"Witnesseth: Whereas, under date of February 8, 1923, the parties hereto executed a certain indenture in the words and figures following to-wit:" (here follows the agreement, Exhibit A herein), "which is the instrument of lease and purchase entered into between the petitioner herein and the board of supervisors of the county of Yuba, whereby the petitioner agrees to erect a certain memorial building on the premises described in the instrument, and to lease the same to the county of Yuba for a period of five years and six months, at a rental of $2,500 per month; and also, the payment by the party of the second part of certain other items set out in the agreement; and providing, further, that in consideration of the sum of $1, the party of the first part agrees to sell to the party of the second part the leased premises for the sum of $167,500; and further providing that the rentals paid for the premises shall be considered as payment on the purchase price of the property referred to and covered by the lease." (Exhibit A also includes a resolution of the board of supervisors of the county of Yuba purporting to authorize the execution of the lease and option to purchase by the president and clerk of the board of supervisors) "and Whereas, first party has done and performed everything by said indenture stipulated to be by her done or performed, and said 'Veterans Memorial Building' was accepted by second party on the 5th day of February, 1925, on which last mentioned date second party entered into possession thereof, and has since used and occupied the same, and has paid unto first party under the terms of said indenture, the sum of one hundred thirty-two thousand one hundred seventeen and 45/100 dollars ($132,117.45); and Whereas, on said 5th day of February, 1925, said Board of Supervisors passed and adopted a resolution in the words and figures following: " (Here follows the resolution, Exhibit B herein, which is as follows:)

"It appearing to the satisfaction of this Board that Phebe M. Rideout has caused to be constructed the Veterans Memorial Building mentioned and referred to in that certain agreement made and executed by and between her and the County of Yuba, in the State of California, on the 8th day of February, 1923, in accordance with the terms of said agreement, and has acquired title to the real property in said agreement referred to, and that all thereof are now ready for acceptance and occupancy by said County in accordance with the terms of the agreement aforesaid:

"It is Hereby Resolved, that said contract has been fully complied with on the part of said Phebe M. Rideout and said structure, namely, said Veterans Memorial Building, and the real property in said contract referred to, be, and the same hereby are accepted by this Board on behalf of said County of Yuba;

"Be it Further Resolved, That the said lease referred to in said agreement be and the same hereby is accepted by this Board on behalf of said County, the term thereof to commence on the 5th day of February, 1925, and that the option to purchase in said agreement mentioned and made a part of said lease, be, and the same hereby is, accepted by said Board on behalf of said County;

"And it Further Appearing to This Board that the total cost of said Auditorium and said land referred to in said agreement is the sum of $155,441.11;

"Therefore, it Is Hereby Resolved, That this Board on behalf of said County hereby orders and directs that there be paid to said Phebe M. Rideout, out of the County Treasury of said County, upon said option to purchase, the sum of $39,693.76, and F. H. Greeley, auditor of said County of Yuba, is hereby directed to forthwith draw his warrant upon the County Treasury of said County of Yuba in favor of said Phebe M. Rideout for said sum last aforesaid."

"And Whereas, an action has been commenced in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Yuba, by one F. W. Johnson, as plaintiff, against the said County of Yuba and various of its officers as defendants, wherein the said plaintiff as a tax-payer seeks to have the said County of Yuba and certain of its officers enjoined from expending any further moneys under said indenture, and to have said indenture declared void; and

"Whereas, by reason of the matters and things hereinbefore recited various and sundry doubts and a controversy exists between the parties hereto as to their respective rights and liabilities under said indenture and their respective performance of the terms thereof; and

"Whereas, second party, to avail itself of the provision of section 4041f of the Political Code of California, originally entered into said indenture and made the payments to first party as aforesaid, and desires now to avail itself of the provisions of said section 4041f of the Political Code of California, by purchasing from first party the said land mentioned in said indenture, together with the improvements thereon, viz.: said 'Veterans Memorial Building', and first party is willing to sell the same to second party for the sum of one hundred fifty-six thousand nine hundred twenty-eight and 59/100 dollars ($156,928.59), and such present purchase is advisable in the best interests of said County of Yuba;

"Now, Therefore, it is mutually agreed as follows:

"First: Said indenture executed by and between the parties hereto, and dated February 8, 1923, is hereby cancelled, terminated and rescinded.

"Second: Second party agrees that said sum of one hundred thirty-two thousand one hundred seventeen and 45/100 dollars ($132,117.45) heretofore paid by second party to first party as aforesaid may be retained by first party on account of the purchase price of the said real property and improvements, and agrees forthwith to pay to first party in cash the balance of said purchase price, to-wit: the sum of twenty-four thousand eight hundred eleven and 14/100 dollars ($24,811.14)

"Third: First party agrees, upon receipt of said sum of twenty-four thousand eight hundred eleven and 14/100 dollars ($24,811.14) in cash, to convey to second party by a duly executed and acknowledged grant deed, said real property and improvements, free and clear of all liens and encumbrances except the lien of current taxes not delinquent.

"Fourth: In consideration of the preceding stipulations of this instrument and the said present sale and conveyance of said real property and improvements by first party to second party, as aforesaid, each of the parties hereto does hereby release and forever discharge the other of and from all claims and demands, actions, and causes of action of every kind and nature, so that neither of them shall have any claim on the other, directly or indirectly, arising from said indenture dated February 8, 1923, or from any act or thing undertaken, done or omitted or attempted to be done pursuant thereto.

"This instrument, and all the provisions thereof, is intended by the parties to be whole and entire and no provision nor any part thereof is intended to be severable but the considerations moving to the respective parties hereunder are received, and this instrument is executed by said parties, in contemplation of one whole and entire and non-severable disposition of the matter and things, aforesaid, the subject matter hereof.

"In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have executed these presents the day and year first above written." (Signed by the respective parties thereto.)

The record discloses that the respondent refused to pay the warrant issued to petitioner by the auditor of the county of Yuba, under the direction of the board of supervisors, on the ground that the agreements referred to herein are invalid. The petition sets forth the legal existence of the board of supervisors of the county of Yuba, and the personnel constituting the same; that prior to the 30th day of June, 1925, no money had been raised by taxation, as provided by the act of the Legislature, authorizing the leasing, building, and purchasing of a building to be used by the American Legion, and other patriotic organizations, as a home or meeting place; that since said date there has been raised, by the levy of a tax, as provided in said act, and by moneys transferred from the general funds of the county into a fund called the veterans' memorial fund of said county, the sum of $158,093.85; that at the date of the issuance of the warrant in favor of the petitioner herein there was in said veterans' memorial fund a sum of money in excess of $25,000. Other matters are set forth in the petition, such as the publication of notice of intention to purchase and of the fact that the agreements herein referred to were all executed in good faith. The petition also shows that other than as to the $25,000 just referred to in the veterans' memorial fund, that there was not, on the 5th day of February, 1925, nor at any time during the fiscal year from July 1, 1924, to June 30, 1925, the sum of $155,441.11 mentioned in the resolution of the board of supervisors of that date, in the treasury of said county, applicable to the purchase of said property, and said sum was in excess of the income and revenue of said county of Yuba provided for such year and available for payment to the petitioner under the terms of the agreement of lease and purchase called Exhibit A; that no election was ever held for the purpose of determining whether any indebtedness should be created by the issuance of bonds to raise money for the erection of the building referred to in the agreements, or any memorial building. The petition further sets forth that on or about the 11th day of December, 1928, an action was commenced in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Yuba, to enjoin the officers named therein as respondents, from expending any further money under the agreement of lease and purchase, on the ground that said agreement was a violation of section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution, and also seeking the judgment of the court that the respondent in this action repay to the county treasury of the county of Yuba all moneys paid out under and by virtue of the agreement of lease and purchase amounting to the sum of $132,117.45. To the petition the respondent filed a general demurrer, and the cause is now before us upon the legal issues involved.

[1, 2] Basing his argument upon the cases City and County of San Francisco v. Boyle, 195 Cal. 426, 233 P. 965, and Mahoney v. City of San Francisco, 201 Cal. 248, 257 P. 49, the respondent contends, and the petitioner, acknowledging the application of the reasoning of those cases as applied to the agreement of lease and purchase, practically admits, that the agreement of lease and purchase entered into between the petitioner herein and the board of supervisors of the county of Yuba on the 11th day of December, 1923, and accepted and ratified by the board of supervisors of the county of Yuba on the 5th day of February, 1925, is void, as being in contravention of section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution. The theory of the petitioner's claim herein is that the instrument hereinbefore set forth as Exhibit D and entered into between the petitioner and the board of supervisors of the county of Yuba on the 14th day of May, 1929, is valid as being an instrument of purchase and sale involving only the sum of $24,418.14 in cash, which sum was in the veterans' memorial fund in the treasury of the county of Yuba at the date of the execution of this instrument. It is further contended that this instrument stands alone; that it is not based upon the original agreement of lease and purchase; and that therefore the void character of the agreements previously entered into between the parties cannot and does not affect the right of the petitioner to the sum of $24,418.14 represented by the warrant issued to her as the balance of the purchase price of the building referred to in the respective instruments. This argument is based in part upon the following paragraph contained in Exhibit D, to wit: "Whereas, by reason of the matters and things herein recited various and sundry doubts and a controversy exists between the parties hereto as to their respective rights and liabilities under said indenture" (referring to the previous agreement of lease and purchase) "and their respective performance of the terms thereof." This, followed by the citation of a number of authorities to the effect that boards of supervisors are clothed with the power of compromising claims against the county, and that the agreement known as Exhibit D, wherein the county purports to buy, and the petitioner to sell to the county, the memorial building, is a compromise of a claim against the county. Whether any claim has been filed against the county does not appear from the record in this cause, and we do not find anything therein in support of such contention. However, if the agreement to which we have just referred be denominated a compromise and adjustment of the controversy between the parties, we think, even though the authorities cited by the petitioner apparently support the contention that boards of supervisors possess the power to compromise and settle and adjust claims against the county, it does not follow that a board of supervisors may, by way of compromise, give a legal status to a claim against the county which is otherwise void; that while boards of supervisors may compromise contested claims and agree upon the amount legally due, no validity can be given in this manner to an illegal claim. The agreement of the board of supervisors to pay a certain amount upon an otherwise illegal claim does not render such claim legal. Furthermore, a board of supervisors cannot escape the results of its illegal acts by way of compromise with the other party to the illegal transaction, nor can a board of supervisors, by way of compromise, eliminate the prohibitory provisions of section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution. In other words, if the agreement of lease and purchase entered into between the petitioner and the board of supervisors of the county of Yuba was rendered void by the prohibitory provisions of the Constitution, no act of compromise on the part of the board of supervisors, in relation to the transaction, could give validity thereto or endow the petitioner with any right to the retention of any moneys illegally obtained from the county under and by virtue of the void agreement.

[3] That the original agreement was and is void, by reason of the prohibitory provisions of the Constitution declaring void any contracts calling for the expenditure of money beyond the revenues provided, further appears by the reasoning found in the case of Arthur v. City of Petaluma, 175 Cal. 216, 165 P. 698. In that case we find the following with reference to section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution: "That constitutional provision means, not only that an indebtedness incurred contrary to its express provisions is absolutely void, but that each year's income and revenue must pay each year's indebtedness and liability, and that no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the income and revenue of any future year."

Again, the contention of the petitioner that the contract dated May 14, 1929, stands alone, and is not in any wise dependent upon the original agreement, does not appear to us to be well taken. The contract of May 14, 1929, provides for the retention by the petitioner of the sum of $132,117.45 paid to her upon the void agreement. In other words, it gives vitality to such illegal payments and overlooks entirely all questions as to whether that sum of money is or ever was legally applicable to the purchase of the property for which the balance of $24,811.14 was to be paid. That Exhibit D does not stand alone is further shown by the fact that Exhibit B incorporated therein, provided for payment on the option to purchase of the sum of $39,993.76. This was provided for on the 5th day of February, 1925, the date upon which the lease and agreement to purchase was to begin to operate and upon which date there was no such sum of money due on account of rentals if it could be otherwise contended that the original instrument was only one of leasing. The petitioner admits that on the date of this payment on account of the option to purchase, no provision had been made by the board of supervisors relative to the revenues of the county, as provided by section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution. It is further contended that the contract or agreement of May 14, 1929, does not violate any of the provisions of section 18 of article 11, in that there was and is in the county treasury of the county of Yuba, in the memorial fund, a sum in excess of $25,000. If nothing further were involved, petitioner's contention might be admitted, but it eliminates the real meat of the controversy, that is, that the board of supervisors may illegally pay out all but a minor portion of the purchase price of the property involved, and then, by making payment of an amount slightly below the money at their disposal, legalize the whole transaction and validate what the Constitution declares to be void. If this can be done, even in good faith, then and in that case the constitutional prohibition contained in the section referred to is meaningless. The purchase price of the property was really and in fact not the balance of 24,000 and odd dollars, but that sum of money including all that had been previously illegally paid. The circumstances of this case distinguish it from the principle involved in the case of Buck v. City of Eureka, 109 Cal. 504, 42 P. 243, 30 L. R. A. 409, and Id., 124 Cal. 61, 56 P. 612, and Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 45 P. 824, 50 P. 670, and Higgins v. City of San Diego, 131 Cal. 294, 63 P. 470. Likewise, the circumstances are distinguishable from those involved in the case of Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transportation Co., 139 U. S. 62, 11 S. Ct. 489, 35 L. Ed. 69, and the case of Chapman v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 348, 2 S. Ct. 62, 27 L. Ed. 378, and the case of Sacramento County v. Southern Pacific Co., 127 Cal. 217, 59 P. 568, 825. Those actions involved quantum meruit for work and labor performed and for materials furnished or rescission. This is not an action for restitution and accounting, but is simply a petition asking for a writ of mandate to compel payment upon a contract entered into, having as its basis, as we have said, prior void contracts and in effect, if not by intent of the parties, avoiding the consequences of an illegal transaction. Furthermore, the record does not show that title has passed, and it further appears that title did not pass only as coincident with the payment of the warrant involved in this action. As to the liability of the county for the occupancy of the premises, though argued in the briefs, we need only to state that the record presents no such question for decision nor do we need express any opinion as to whether section 4005 of the Political Code is applicable to any claim that might be presented by the petitioner.

Again, the Political Code prescribes the method for disposition of moneys belonging to a county. Subdivision 6 of section 4101 specifies that money shall be drawn out of the treasury only upon warrants based upon orders. That is the only method by which $132,000 and odd dollars could be applied upon the purchase price of the property involved.

By the stipulation of the parties to this action and by the petition on file, it is made to appear that the $132,117.45 is involved in litigation now pending in the superior court of Yuba county, and that the treasurer of the county, the respondent herein, is enjoined from paying out any money under the provisions of the original agreement. If the petitioner's contention could be held valid that the $24,811.14 is supported by a valid agreement in no wise dependent upon the preceding transactions, then and in that case a judgment of the trial court affecting the payment of $132,117.45, apparently paid without authority of law, would not be affected by the issuance of a writ of mandate herein.

[4, 5] It is needless to cite authorities to the effect that ratification of a contract, originally void by reason of the prohibitory provisions of the Constitution, cannot be had. Ratification presupposes a power equivalent to previous authority. Zottman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 97, 81 Am. Dec. 96; 7 Cal. Jur. pp. 515, 516, § 88. Section 1608 of the Civil Code is likewise applicable here so far as it applies to the payments already made upon the contract, and made preceding May 14, 1929. The principle announced in many cases that the mode provided measures the power for action by the board of supervisors applies to this case, and there is no mode provided authorizing a board of supervisors, by a subsequent contract, to waive the return of money illegally paid out by the county treasurer, even though paid following illegal orders entered by the board of supervisors. The noble purpose of the petitioner in this case and the good faith of the board of supervisors are fully appreciated, but we cannot give consideration to those matters where the question is one of constitutional law.

Nothing contained herein is intended as an intimation that, if the moneys referred to were in the treasury of Yuba county, the board of supervisors would not, or does not, possess the power and authority to make purchase of the property involved for the purposes mentioned in section 4041f of the Political Code.

The writ is denied.

100 Cal. App. 152
SOUTHERN LAND CO. v. McKENNA et al.*
(Civ. 6219.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Quieting title $\S$ 44(1)—Defendants in action to quiet title, stipulating that third party owned property when conveyed to plaintiff, had burden of showing plaintiff lost title.

In action to quiet title, defendants had burden of establishing by preponderance of evidence that plaintiff had lost title to property, where it was stipulated that third party had been owner of property to certain date and had conveyed property to plaintiff.

2. Lost Instruments $\S$ 8(3)—Evidence of alleged conveyance of property to defendants sued to quiet title held insufficient to show lost deed.

In action to quiet title to property claimed by defendants to have been conveyed to them by plaintiff corporation under lost deed, evidence that officers who were supposed to have executed conveyance were dead at time of trial, and that defendants were dealing with third party who they believed to be true owner of property, together with evidence indicating transaction with corporation had fallen through, and absence of record of any conveyance, held not to show lost deed to property.

3. Corporations $\S$ 617(2)—Deed by trustees of corporation at time when corporation's right to transact business was suspended for failure to pay taxes held not to convey corporation's interest.

Deed executed by alleged trustees of corporation at time when corporation's right to transact business was suspended for failure to pay taxes held not to convey any of corporation's interest in property, since failure to pay taxes did not cause forfeiture of corporate existence nor vest assets in trustees.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Finding that conveyance by plaintiff suing to quiet title was not established, warranted by evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Finding by trial court, in action to quiet title, that alleged conveyance from plaintiff corporation to defendants had not been established, warranted by evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

5. Adverse possession $\S$ 95—Evidence of failure to pay taxes for five years before suit to quiet title did not sustain defense of adverse possession.

In action to quiet title, defense of adverse possession by defendants held not sustained under evidence showing that defendants had not paid taxes on property for five consecutive years preceding commencement of action.

6. Corporations $\S$ 630(3)—Evidence that certain persons purchased corporate stock after corporation's suspension and revived corporation to institute suit to quiet title held properly excluded (St. 1917, p. 377, § 12, as amended by St. 1921, p. 606).

In action by corporation to quiet title to property, evidence that certain persons had purchased stock in corporation and caused it to be revived for purpose of bringing suit, and that such persons were not stockholders at time of corporation's suspension for failure to pay taxes, and that such persons were real parties in interest and caused corporation to be revived with knowledge that neither corporation nor its stockholders claimed any interest in property, held properly excluded under St. 1917, p. 377, § 12, as amended by St. 1921, p. 606, providing that all corporate powers suspended may be revived and restored on application by any stockholder or creditor thereof on payment of all accrued taxes.

7. Corporations $\S$ 630(5)—Evidence that corporation of same name as corporation suing to quiet title was incorporated while plaintiff's powers were suspended, held properly excluded (St. 1917, p. 377, § 12, as amended by St. 1921, p. 606).

In action by corporation to quiet title, evidence of records showing that while corporation's powers were suspended for nonpayment of taxes, articles of incorporation had been filed by company having same name as plaintiff corporation, held properly excluded under St. 1917, p. 377, § 12, as amended by St. 1921, p. 606, providing that corporate powers may be revived by stockholder or creditor on payment of taxes.

8. Corporations $\S$ 630(3)—Certificate of revival to corporation suspended for nonpayment of taxes held properly admitted, in corporation's action to quiet title to land (St. 1917, p. 377, § 12, as amended by St. 1921, p. 606, and § 14 as amended by St. 1921, p. 766).

In action by corporation to quiet title to land, evidence of certificate of revivor issued to plaintiff corporation whose powers were suspended for nonpayment of taxes held properly admitted under St. 1917, p. 377, § 12, as amended by St. 1921, p. 606, and section 14 as amended by St. 1921, p. 766.

9. Corporations $\S$ 617(2)—Corporation suspended for nonpayment of taxes held not deprived of use of name by another corporation adopting similar name (St. 1917, p. 377).

Corporation whose rights, powers, and privileges have been suspended for nonpayment of taxes subsequent to effective date of St. 1917, p. 377, may not be deprived of use of its corporate name through adoption of similar name by another corporation organized in state during period of such suspension, but such corporation is entitled to certificate of revivor from state controller, regardless of fact that during period of its suspension another corporation has been organized under similar name.

10. Corporations $\S$ 630(2)—Corporation not dissolved by failure to pay taxes nor having trustees held not barred from suing to quiet title by six months' limitation for suit against trustees' action (Code Civ. Proc. § 341, subd. 3).

Action to quiet title by corporation held not barred by limitations provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 341, subd. 3, barring, within six months, action to set aside action by trustees of corporation dissolved by operation of law, including revivor of any such corporation, where corporation's failure to pay taxes did not cause it to become dissolved, and corporation did not have any trustees who could act in its behalf.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by the Southern Land Company against J. Irving McKenna and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Catherine A. McKenna and J. Irving McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. Emmet H. Wilson and Randall J. Hood, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOLLZER, Justice pro tem. This is an action to quiet title. Defendants appeal from a decree awarded to plaintiff.

It is difficult to ascertain on what grounds a reversal is sought. Appellants' brief is a mixture of rambling and more or less disconnected narrative and discussion. No particular finding of fact is attacked. No points of law, respecting which it is claimed the trial court erred, are presented under separate or any headings. In short, appellants have failed to comply with rule VIII of this court, which requires that "the brief must present each point separately under an appropriate heading, showing the nature of the question to be presented."

In their original answer filed February 5, 1925, defendants claimed title to the property by adverse possession.

In an amendment to the answer filed more than a year later, and only a few days prior to the trial, the defendants asserted that in July or August, 1918, plaintiff conveyed the property to them, but that said conveyance was never recorded and had been lost.

It was further charged in this later pleading that in September, 1921, and while plaintiff's right to transact business had been suspended for nonpayment of taxes, the defendants obtained another deed to the same property, which later conveyance was signed "W. S. Brush, Geo. B. Raum, all of the surviving members of the last named board of directors of the Southern Land Co. (a defunct corporation), as the trustees of and all of the stockholders of said defunct corporation."

Defendants also alleged that while the plaintiff's rights were suspended another corporation, in no way connected with the latter, but having the same name as the plaintiff, was organized under the laws of this state, and that plaintiff's subsequent attempted revivor was void and that it had no capacity to sue.

Defendants further pleaded that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 341, subdivision 3, Code of Civil Procedure.

The record on this appeal was prepared under what is commonly known as the alternative method, and the reporter's transcript is rather voluminous. The appellants' brief, however, contains only a small portion of the evidence presented in the court below.

[1] At the trial it was stipulated that one George E. Hart had been the owner of the property in question up to 1916, and that in the latter year he conveyed the property to the plaintiff. Under this state of the record the burden rested upon the defendants to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff had lost title to the property.

[2] The evidence respecting the alleged lost deed, by which it was claimed plaintiff had transferred to defendants the property in question, was not convincing, to say the least.

At the time of the trial plaintiff's officers, who were supposed to have executed this conveyance, were dead. Defendants were the only persons who testified that such a deed had ever been in existence. However, they admitted that in obtaining the instrument, claimed to have been subsequently lost, they had dealt with one Hart because they considered him the real owner of the property, and also acknowledged that after Hart's death they had secured from his heirs a quitclaim deed to the same property. Their recollection as to who executed the document in question was uncertain. Furthermore, it appeared that at the time they were dealing with Hart the defendants did not know who was the owner of the property. Likewise witnesses called on behalf of the plaintiff testified that after the commencement of the action at bar one of the defendants had admitted that the deal whereby the latter were to obtain a conveyance from the plaintiff had fallen through. One of the plaintiff's directors testified that he had never heard of any such a deed, and also that during the year following its alleged delivery to the defendants he had been employed by the plaintiff to sell the property. These facts, and also the absence of any record of such conveyance—both of the defendants being attorneys naturally understood the importance of having the same recorded—and the further fact that defendants' testimony that they had paid the taxes on this property for the years 1918, 1919, and 1920 had been disproved, all these circumstances were sufficient to create a serious doubt as to whether such a conveyance had ever been made.

[3] The deed bearing date September, 1921, introduced by defendants, was executed, not by the plaintiff, but by certain alleged trustees thereof, and at a time when plaintiff's right to transact business was suspended for failure to pay taxes. Such failure, however, did not cause a forfeiture of plaintiff's corporate existence; nor did its assets become vested in any trustees. This instrument, therefore, did not convey any of plaintiff's interest in the property. Usher v. Henkel (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 494.

The case of Clark v. San Francisco, 53 Cal. 311, cited by defendants, is not in point. That decision merely holds that where a corporation has been dissolved, the directors are the trustees for the stockholders and have the exclusive power to settle its affairs and, in the exercise of that authority, may convey its property. In the action at bar, however, as already pointed out, the plaintiff's failure to pay taxes did not cause it to become dissolved, and there were no trustees who were authorized to transfer its property or otherwise act in its behalf.

[4] The lower court therefore was fully warranted in holding that the defense based upon an alleged conveyance from plaintiff to the defendants had not been established. In the light of the record as heretofore outlined, its finding in that regard cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Whether defendants have abandoned the claim of adverse possession is not altogether clear. In the court below, during the early portion of the trial, while arguing objections to the introduction in evidence of a certificate of redemption issued by the county auditor to Feely, the following took place:

"Mrs. McKenna: If your Honor please, I object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, because in the first instance here this plaintiff was not concerned as to whether the taxes were paid or not; the payment of taxes is not a material matter.

"Mr. Wilson: It certainly is so far as it bears upon the question of adverse possession.

"Mr. McKenna: We are not relying on adverse possession. I am relying on a deed executed by this corporation.

"The Court: Are you not relying on adverse possession?

"A. Only to show we had a deed and went into possession of it and exercised the ownership of it, and then too, if your Honor please, I have here receipts and I know I personally paid those taxes and I know the property was assessed.

"The Court: Then it goes into a question of contradictory evidence." Reporter's Trans., pp. 74, 75.

[5] Assuming, however, that the claim of ownership under alleged adverse possession is still one of the issues to be decided, the evidence establishes quite clearly that the defendants did not pay the taxes for five years continuously next preceding the commencement of the action. Although both of the defendants testified that they personally had paid all of the taxes continuously from 1912 down to the date of the suit, documentary evidence introduced by the plaintiff, and consisting of a portion of the records of the county auditor, showed that the taxes for the years 1918, 1919, and 1920 had been allowed to become delinquent. These records further proved that the property had been sold on account of such delinquent taxes, and that on November 14, 1921, the property had been redeemed by one Frank E. Feely, who, on the last-mentioned date, paid the taxes covering those years, together with the accrued interest and penalties thereon. The complaint having been filed on January 26, 1925, payment of the taxes for a period of five consecutive years, beginning with 1920, constituted one of the prerequisites to proving ownership acquired by adverse possession. Accordingly, since it appeared that the defendants had not paid the taxes for the year 1920, the lower court very properly found that the defense of adverse possession had not been sustained.

[6] At the trial defendants offered to prove that in 1924 one Boswell and one Usher had bought stock in the plaintiff corporation, and thereafter had caused it to be revived for the purpose of bringing the present suit and similar actions; also, that these men were not stockholders at the time of plaintiff's suspension, that they were the real parties in interest in the present case, and that they caused the plaintiff to be revived with knowledge that neither the plaintiff nor its stockholders claimed any interest in the property. The lower court sustained an objection to this offer of proof. Appellants claim that this was error.

It is a sufficient answer to this contention to point out that the law in force at the time plaintiff's corporate rights were suspended, and likewise applicable at the time of its revivor, expressly provided that "all corporate powers, rights and privileges, suspended or forfeited under the provisions of this act, may be revived and restored to full force and effect upon application therefor by any stockholder or creditor thereof and upon payment of all accrued taxes," etc. Section 12, c. 215, p. 377, Stats. 1917, and section 12, c. 414, p. 606, Stats. 1921.

[7] The defendants also offered in evidence certain records from the county clerk's office showing that on November 13, 1922, and while plaintiff's corporate rights, powers, and privileges were suspended for nonpayment of taxes, articles of incorporation had been filed by a company having the same name as that of the plaintiff, which company was in no way connected with the latter. The trial court sustained an objection to the admission of this evidence.

[8] In addition, the defendants objected to the introduction in evidence of the certificate of revivor issued to the plaintiff by the state controller on December 26, 1924. This objection the trial court overruled.

Defendants contend that these rulings were erroneous. Their argument is that, since another corporation had been organized under the same name as that held by plaintiff during the period of the latter's suspension, the certificate of revivor issued by the state controller to the plaintiff was void and of no effect. In support of their argument appellants cite the cases of Rossi v. Caire, 186 Cal. 544, 199 P. 1042, and Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 396, 205 P. 446.

Neither of these authorities supports appellants' contention. In the case of Rossi v. Caire, supra, the court was construing the statute of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 493) and the amendments thereof, all of which, however, had been repealed prior to the incorporation of the plaintiff. On the other hand, that law was superseded by the act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 422), as amended by the act of 1917 (chapter 215, p. 371, Stats. 1917) and as further amended by the act of 1921 (chapter 414, p. 606, Stats. 1921).

In Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court, supra, the court held that under the terms of these amendments the penalty for nonpayment of license and franchise taxes by a corporation had been changed, and that the result of such nonpayment was no longer a forfeiture of its charter and consequent dissolution of the corporation, but only a suspension of its rights, powers, and privileges, with the provision of revivor. As observed by the court in the last-mentioned case, at page 397 of 188 Cal. (205 P. 448):

"The distinction between the position of a corporation, after failure to pay its license and franchise taxes, under the former and under the present law was pointed out in Rossi v. Caire, 186 Cal. 544, 199 P. 1042, where the status of such a corporation was considered. The court in that case said: 'The corporation (under the former laws) simply ceased to exist, just exactly as in the case of a forfeiture for cause by judicial decree, without any existing provision of law for rehabilitation as a corporation. It was not a case simply of suspended animation as under the present license tax law, but one of absolute death.'

"It follows that petitioner did not cease to exist during the period of suspended animation."

The only restriction against the controller issuing a certificate of revivor to a corporation which has paid all of the delinquent taxes and accrued penalties is to be found in section 14 of the act of 1917 (chapter 215, p. 378, Stats. 1917), as amended in 1921 (chapter 497, p. 766, Stats. 1921). Section 14 as thus amended provides, in substance, that "any corporation which has heretofore failed to pay any license tax and penalty imposed under the provisions of chapter three hundred eighty-six, Statutes 1905, and amendments thereof, or under chapter one hundred ninety, Statutes of 1915, and for such nonpayment suffered a forfeiture of the charter of such corporation or of the right to do business in this state may be relieved of such forfeiture or may be restored to its right to do business in this state upon making application therefor" and paying certain taxes and penalties. "In case the name of any corporation which has suffered the forfeiture prescribed by either of said acts" above mentioned "has been adopted by any other corporation since the date of said forfeiture," then such reviving corporation shall be entitled to a certificate of revivor pursuant to the terms of said section "only upon the adoption by such corporation seeking revivor of a new name." Such reviving corporation shall have the right to use its former name or take such new name "only upon filing an application therefor with the secretary of state."

On the other hand, section 12 of the same act declares, in substance, that "all corporate powers, rights and privileges, suspended or forfeited under the provisions of this act may be revived" upon application therefor by any stockholder or creditor thereof and upon payment of certain taxes and penalties to the state. Upon the payment of such moneys, "the state controller shall issue a certificate under his seal evidencing such payment and restoration."

It will be observed that, although both of these sections deal with the subject-matter of the conditions or procedure under which a corporation which has suffered a forfeiture or suspension by reason of failure to pay taxes may be relieved of such forfeiture or suspension, each covers a different class of cases.

Section 14 defines the procedure with respect to a "corporation which has heretofore failed to pay any license tax and penalty imposed under the provisions of chapter three hundred eighty-six, Statutes 1905, and amendments thereof, or under chapter one hundred ninety, Statutes of 1915." As to any such corporation, it is provided that "in case the name of any corporation which has suffered the forfeiture prescribed by either of said acts" above mentioned "has been adopted by any other corporation since the date of said forfeiture," then such reviving corporation shall be entitled to a certificate of revivor "only upon the adoption by such corporation seeking revivor of a new name."

Section 12, however, lays down the procedure whereby "all corporate powers, rights and privileges, suspended or forfeited under the provisions of this act [Stats. 1917, chap. 215, p. 371] may be revived." As to such a corporation there is no provision that such suspension or forfeiture in any way jeopardizes the corporation's right to the use of its name. The payment of the taxes and penalties specified in that section is the sole prerequisite to a restoration to corporate capacity upon the application of any stockholder or creditor.

Since its suspension occurred in March, 1921, plaintiff does not come within the classification of a "corporation which has heretofore failed to pay any license tax and penalty imposed under the provisions of chapter three hundred eighty-six, Statutes 1905, and amendments thereof, or under chapter one hundred ninety, Statutes of 1915."

For the same reason plaintiff must be regarded as a corporation, the powers, rights, and privileges of which were suspended under the condition defined by section 12 of the act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 377). With respect to the restoration of such a corporation to its rights, powers, and privileges, that section empowers the state controller to issue the certificate of revivor merely upon payment of certain taxes and penalties.

[9] Accordingly, we conclude that a corporation whose rights, powers, and privileges have been suspended for nonpayment of taxes subsequent to the date on which chapter 215, Statutes of 1917, became effective, may not be deprived of the use of its corporate name through the adoption of a similar name by another corporation organized in this state during the period of such suspension. In other words, a corporation whose rights, powers, and privileges have been thus suspended, upon complying with the provisions of section 12 of said act, is entitled to a certificate of revivor from the state controller, regardless of the fact that during the period of its suspension another corporation has been organized in this state under a similar name.

[10] The remaining contention advanced by appellants may be briefly disposed of. In the amendment to their answer, defendants pleaded that this action was barred by the provisions of section 341, subdivision 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The latter subdivision bars, within six months, an action to set aside or invalidate any action taken or performed by a majority of the trustees of any corporation heretofore, or hereafter dissolved by operation of law, including the revivor of any such corporation. As heretofore pointed out, plaintiff's failure to pay taxes did not cause it to become dissolved, nor did it have any trustees who could act in its behalf. There is no merit, therefore, in this point.

The judgment is affirmed.

LARRABEE v. REPUBLIC BOND & MORTGAGE CO. et al. (Civ. 6723.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 27, 1929.

1. Corporations Ⓒ306—Evidence, in action against corporation and its president for selling stock, held to sustain conclusion corporation alone was liable for commissions.

In action against corporation and its president for commissions on sale of corporation's capital stock, evidence held to sustain conclusion that corporation and not president was real party to contract of employment, and that president acted merely on behalf of corporation, rendering corporation alone liable for commissions.

2. Brokers Ⓒ56(3)—Salesman interesting purchaser in corporate stock was entitled to commission, where president took over prospect and closed transaction after termination of salesman's services.

Where salesman before termination of services interested large investor in corporation, whereupon president took over prospect because of unusual circumstances surrounding investment and closed transaction after termination of salesman's services, salesman was entitled to commission, since if, after broker initiates negotiations, seller takes matter into his own hands and completes sale on his own terms, broker is so completely discharged from responsibility in premises that seller is estopped to contend as against broker's claim for commissions that broker has not produced purchaser ready, able, and willing to make purchase.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elias V. Rosenkranz, Judge.

Action by Weldon C. Larrabee against the Republic Bond & Mortgage Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff and for defendant D. Binkhorst, and defendant company appeals. Affirmed.

Fickeisen & Richardson and J. E. Haley, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Loewenthal, Collins & Loewenthal and Loewenthal, Lissner, Roth & Gunter, all of Los Angeles (Julius Mackson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The respondent, Weldon C. Larrabee, brought this action against the Republic Bond & Mortgage Company, a corporation, and D. Binkhorst, its president, to collect $2,000 claimed to be due as commissions for the sale of the corporation's capital stock. The trial court granted a nonsuit in favor of Binkhorst upon the ground that respondent's contract of employment was with the corporation alone, and at the conclusion of the trial entered judgment against the corporation for the amount of said commissions less the sum of $450 theretofore advanced to respondent under the terms of his contract, from which judgment the corporation appeals.

The corporation now contends that respondent's contract of employment was with Binkhorst, and that consequently the corporation was not liable for the payment of said commissions. There is no merit whatever in the contention. The evidence shows that said corporation was about to enter upon a stock-selling campaign, and in furtherance thereof had obtained from the corporation commissioner a permit to sell a certain number of shares of its capital stock and to pay a selling commission of not exceeding 20 per cent. of the par value of the stock sold. Thereupon the directors of said corporation, by resolution, directed its vice president and secretary to enter into a written contract with Binkhorst to "supervise the sale" of said stock for a commission "of 20% of the selling price thereof as authorized by said permit" and granting him power "to appoint and employ for said corporation and in its name competent salesmen. * * *" (Italics ours.) On January 24, 1924, a contract to that effect was executed whereby Binkhorst was employed as "fiscal agent * * * to supervise and conduct the sale" of said stock, with power "to appoint and employ sub-agents and to fix the amount of their remuneration upon the condition that the entire cost to the company of selling a unit of said stock shall not exceed twenty per cent (20%) of the selling price thereof." Acting pursuant to the authority thus granted, Binkhorst entered into a written contract with respondent whereby the latter was employed as "sales manager" to carry on the sale of said stock. Such contract was in the form of a letter addressed to respondent, signed by Binkhorst, and written from the corporation's offices on one of its letterheads setting forth the name of the corporation and the names of its officers, including the name "D. Binkhorst President." The letter contained the terms and conditions of the employment, and read in part as follows: "This is to state that after our several interviews we have appointed you a Sales Manager for the sale of our capital stock as authorized under the permit issued by the Corporation Securities Commissioner, a copy of which is attached hereto. The writer hereby appoints you as Sales Manager by virtue and under the contract with the corporation dated January 24, 1924. You are to provide salesmen to sell this security and pay them a commission of 10%. You are to increase this sales force and create an adequate sales organization as the conditions will warrant. You are to receive an overriding commission of 2% on all sales made by the corporation while and during the time you are its Sales Manager for the sale of its capital stock, except such sales which have been partially closed and committed from the directors of this corporation. * * *" Furthermore, it was agreed to furnish respondent with offices, office equipment, stenographer work, telephone bills, and all expenses incident to such overhead, and also to pay him $75 a week "as an advance" on his commissions. The letter further provided as follows: "You are to co-operate with us in the method of advertising * * * and in all matters of importance in your sales campaign you are to counsel and directly deal with the President and Board of Directors of the Republic Bond & Mortgage Company." And then, after setting forth other matters relating to the employment, but which are not pertinent here, the letter concluded as follows: "As we are compelled technically to work under the contract made by me with the corporation under date of January 24, 1924, I agree within a period of 90 days, if it will serve our purposes best, to have the corporation execute a contract direct with you or have a more definite contract executed with you under this agreement of January 24 with myself and the assistance of our attorneys for the corporation. With the understanding that a more permanent and definite contract shall be executed between ourselves and the corporation at a later date, and by signing your name in acceptance hereto, the foregoing is considered to be a contract between us and expresses clearly your authority to proceed as Sales Manager for the sale of the securities of the Republic Bond and Mortgage Company under the customary reasonable and cooperative methods usually employed in executing the duties of Sales Manager." Attached to the letter was the written acceptance of respondent and Binkhorst.

Thereafter and in accordance with the terms of said contract the corporation furnished respondent with offices which were part of the general offices of the corporation, supplied him with business cards representing him to be its sales manager, and with letters of introduction to several directors of said corporation, written on the corporation's letterheads and signed "Republic Bond and Mortgage Company, D. Binkhorst, President," in which it was stated in part: "This will introduce to you Mr. Weldon Carey Larrabee whom we have engaged as sales manager in the department created for selling our capital stock." The corporation also paid respondent the weekly installments of $75 each mentioned in the contract by the checks drawn upon its funds; and, furthermore, the evidence shows that the entire proceeds derived from the sale of the capital stock were retained by the corporation and paid into one account. The 20 per cent. allowance for commissions for the sale of the stock was not segregated. A "fiscal agent" account was carried on the books of the corporation to which money was transferred at irregular times from the general funds of the corporation; but the funds so deposited in the "fiscal agent" account were used generally to defray the operating expenses of the corporation and to meet the expenses of the sale of said stock. Binkhorst drew no salary from the corporation, nor was he paid any commissions on stock sales, but he drew various sums from the "fiscal agent" account from time to time as his circumstances required.

[1] We think it evident without discussion that the foregoing facts are amply sufficient to sustain the trial court's conclusion that the corporation and not Binkhorst was the real party to the contract of employment, and that Binkhorst acted in the matter merely on behalf of the corporation and as its president in carrying out the directions of the board of directors set forth in its resolution, and that consequently the corporation was liable for the payment of respondent's commissions. It may be fairly inferred, as indicated by the trial court in granting the nonsuit, that the reason why the corporation did not contract directly with respondent for the employment of his services was to avoid any technical violation of the corporation commissioner's permit limiting the commission on stock sales to 20 per cent. of the par value of the stock sold.

[2] Appellant further contends that in any event respondent is not entitled to the commissions sued for because, as it claims, he abandoned his employment prior to the consummation of the particular sale out of which the present demand for commissions arises. This contention is equally without merit. The contract of employment contained the following provision: "I (Binkhorst) will co-operate with you in trading your securities and assist in absorbing the losses on account of such exchanges, and as president of the Republic Bond & Mortgage Company I pledge that the officers and directors of this corporation will assist you to a reasonable degree in the endeavors of your sales campaign." The evidence shows that prior to the date of the alleged termination of respondent's services one of the salesmen employed by him pursuant to the terms of his contract procured a prospective purchaser named Foreman who was desirous of investing $100,000 in said stock under certain conditions, and that after conferring with Foreman respondent, accompanied by the salesman, introduced Foreman to Binkhorst; that upon being informed of the conditions under which Foreman was willing to invest the amount mentioned Binkhorst told respondent that the transaction was an unusual one and could be handled only by himself as president of the corporation. Thereafter Binkhorst closed the transaction with Foreman for the sale of stock of the par value of $100,000. Under such circumstances, respondent was clearly entitled to a commission on said sale even though, as appellant claims, respondent's services ended prior to the date of the consummation of the Foreman sale, because it is well settled that if after a broker initiates the negotiations the seller takes the matter into his own hands and completes the sale on his own terms, the broker is so completely discharged from responsibility in the premises that the seller is estopped to contend against the broker's claim for commissions that the broker has not produced a purchaser who is ready, able, and willing to make the purchase. *Contant v. PEOPLE v. MARTIN. (Cr. 1085.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 10, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 23, 1929.

1. Husband and wife ⇨313—Evidence held to show that husband willfully refused and neglected to provide wife with necessities of life (Pen. Code, § 270e).

Evidence, in prosecution for abandoning and leaving wife in destitute condition and refusing and neglecting to provide her with necessary food, clothing, shelter and medical attendance, held sufficient, under Pen. Code, § 270e, providing that proof of acts charged is prima facie evidence of willfulness, to show that defendant willfully refused and neglected to provide wife with necessities of life.

2. Husband and wife ⇨313—Evidence held to show husband abandoning and leaving wife in destitute condition had sufficient ability to provide for wife's support and was able to earn means thereof (Pen. Code, § 270a).

In prosecution for abandoning and leaving wife in destitute condition and refusing and neglecting to provide her with necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance, evidence held sufficient to show that defendant had sufficient ability to provide for wife's support, and was able to earn means of wife's support within meaning of those terms as used in Pen. Code, § 270a.

3. Husband and wife ⇨313—Evidence of husband's earnings between date he was charged with abandoning and leaving wife destitute and date on which information was filed held admissible (Pen. Code, § 270a).

In prosecution for abandoning and leaving wife in destitute condition and refusing and neglecting to provide her with necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance, under Pen. Code, § 270a, evidence of defendant's earnings at any time between date he was charged with abandonment and date information was filed held admissible.

4. Husband and wife ⇨313—Evidence of husband's earnings after information was filed charging abandonment of wife leaving her destitute held admissible as tending to show earning capacity (Pen. Code, § 270a).

Evidence showing defendant's earnings after information was filed charging him with abandoning and leaving wife in destitute condition, under Pen. Code, § 270a, held admissible as tending to show defendant's earning capacity.

5. Husband and wife ⇨305—Husband abandoning wife and leaving her destitute can be punished therefor, though others furnished wife necessities (Pen. Code, § 270a).

Husband, who abandoned wife, leaving her in destitute condition, and refused and neglected to furnish her with necessities of life, held punishable therefor, under Pen. Code, § 270a, though wife was furnished necessities of life by others after abandonment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Thomas P. Martin was convicted of abandoning and leaving his wife in a destitute condition and refusing and neglecting to provide her with necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. W. McGowan, of Willows, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The information herein filed January 5, 1929, charges the defendant with the crime of abandoning and leaving his wife in a destitute condition, "on or about the 11th day of July, 1928," and refusing and neglecting to provide her with necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance. The case was tried before the court without a jury, the defendant expressly waiving a jury trial. He was found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

Appellant contends that the evidence is not sufficient to show that he willfully abandoned and left his wife in a destitute condition or refused to provide her with the necessities of life.

Mrs. Martin testified that on many occasions from June 1 to July 11, 1928, the defendant, without cause and in profane and vulgar language, ordered her to leave, threatening that he would kick her out if she did not; that, by reason of such conduct, on July 11, she left and went to the home of a neighbor, where she lived for several weeks; that on September 6, 1928, she broke some small bones in her foot, which prevented her from earning anything for six weeks; that at that time she had no money and had no "help only with what my mother sent me"; that she wrote her husband two letters during that time to the effect that she was "disabled and sick * * * and had no means of getting along," but he did not go to see her or help her out in any manner. The testimony shows that the defendant refused to pay the physician who attended his wife's injuries, but this refusal was after the physician's services had been performed. It was admitted by the defendant that, during the fall of 1928, he notified a butcher not to let Mrs. Martin have any meat on the defendant's credit. The evidence shows without contradiction that the defendant did nothing whatever towards the support of his wife after she left him.

[1] "Proof of the abandonment and nonsupport of a wife * * * is prima facie evidence that such abandonment and nonsupport * * * is willful." Pen. Code, § 270e; People v. Wallach, 62 Cal. App. 385, 398, 217 P. 81. The foregoing evidence is amply sufficient to show that the defendant willfully refused and neglected to provide his wife with the necessities of life.

[2] It is next urged that the evidence fails to show that the defendant had the ability to so provide for his wife. The defendant testified that for certain kinds of work he received a dollar an hour; that he worked "about two days a week and last month nothing at all, just about enough to eat on"; that "there is nothing to do"; that he had not "looked for work in fifteen years"; that he did not "look for any for the simple reason it hasn't been necessary up until a short time ago"; that he did not know of his own knowledge that there is no work to be had, but that he had seen "the men that are not working around town." Mrs. Martin testified that about a month before she left the defendant he said he had between $1,100 and $1,200 in his pocket. Other witnesses testified that certain payments had been made to the defendant for work since his wife left him. While the aggregate of such payments is not large, it cannot be held that the trial court was not justified in finding from the whole evidence that the defendant had "sufficient ability to provide for his wife's support" and was "able to earn the means of such wife's support," within the meaning of those terms as used in section 270a of the Penal Code. In People v. Turner, 29 Cal. App. 193, 195, 156 P. 381, 382, cited by appellant, it is said: "If the defendant had an opportunity to work and refused it, his conduct in that behalf would probably be regarded in conjunction with the fact of nonsupport as constituting a violation of the section of the Code in question."

[3, 4] It is contended that "the court erred in admitting evidence of the financial condition and earnings of the defendant after July 11, 1928, the date of the alleged commission of the offense." Evidence of the defendant's earnings at any time between July 11, 1928, and January 5, 1929, on which latter day the information was filed, was clearly admissible. People v. Curry, 69 Cal. App. 501, 505, 231 P. 358; People v. Frazier, 87 Cal. App. 65, 67, 261 P. 1071. There was some evidence admitted showing the defendant's earnings after the information was filed. This evidence was properly admitted as tending to show the defendant's earning capacity. It is highly improbable that the trial court considered it for any other purpose.

[5] Appellant seems to contend that, when a husband has abandoned his wife, if she is furnished the necessities of life from any source, the husband is not liable to punishment under the provisions of section 270a. In support of this contention, he cites People v. Selby, 26 Cal. App. 796, 148 P. 807; People v. Smith, 31 Cal. App. 736, 161 P. 753; People v. Clarke, 51 Cal. App. 469, 201 P. 465; and Matter of Povlitzki, 80 Cal. App. 410, 251 P. 940. None of these cases sustain appellant's contention. In People v. Morrison, 54 Cal. App. 469, 472, 202 P. 348, a case prosecuted under section 270 of the Penal Code, relating to the failure of a father to support his minor child, and arising prior to the amendment of 1921 (St. 1921, p. 1723), providing that "it shall be no defense to such an action that such child has been provided for by other persons," it was held that the defendant could not escape criminal liability by showing that the child was supported by the charity of others. As said in State v. Bess, 44 Utah, 39, 137 P. 829, 831, to permit a defendant, "whose family, because of his violation of a penal statute, is being sheltered, fed, and clothed by sympathetic friends or charitable institutions," to interpose "this same charity as a shield to protect himself from the penalties which the law imposes for the violation of the statute under which he is prosecuted * * * would be to make a farce of the law and a mockery of justice."

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

(Civ. 6462.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. July 25, 1929.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1929. Petition for Modification of Opinion Denied Sept. 4, 1929.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Eugene Daney, Jr., Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied with modification of opinion.

For former opinion, see 279 P. 196.

Luce & Swing and Albert J. Lee, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Ed P. Sample and Harden & Green, all of San Diego, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In denying this application for rehearing, we are impelled to condemn intemperate statements therein contained, referring to parts of the opinion in an impertinent and disrespectful manner not warranted by the record. It is said concerning the following from the opinion: "It appears that both the testator and the appellant had previously had other spouses, but that notwithstanding that fact they had maintained exceedingly intimate relations," that it is "an unjustified and unfair aspersion upon the character of the contestant." This statement is utterly untrue. The contestant's own testimony amply supports the essential assertion contained in the paragraph above attacked, that the testator and appellant had maintained exceedingly intimate relations while having other spouses. She at first denied knowing Withington before she married him. Thereafter she testified that she knew him five years before they were married, at which time she was married to a man named Hanes. She then ran a rooming house, and Hanes was a bookkeeper in a grocery store; that Withington brought his first wife there to rent an apartment, as "the proposed Mrs. Withington"; that thereafter she met Withington by appointment at hotels in Los Angeles, Calexico, and San Diego, and stayed at the same hotels with adjoining rooms. She testified that he had a wife living, and she still had a husband; that one Cucick, acting on behalf of Withington, brought her from Calexico to San Diego to meet Withington; that, upon this occasion, the then Mrs. Gladys Withington, meeting contestant on the street, pushed the latter, who tripped on the curb and fell, and that the difficulty was occasioned by contestant visiting Withington; again, that Mrs. Gladys Withington went to the house where Withington and his bookkeeper were occupying adjoining and connecting rooms at Calexico with contestant, and on this occasion, on warning from Cucick that Mrs. Withington might do some harm, contestant left Withington's apartment, and Mrs. Withington entered contestant's (then Georgia May Hanes) apartment, "breaking up all the furniture and the glass out of the door and the flower pots." Concerning the manner in which contestant and Withington lived in the apartment house at Calexico, we quote the following from her testimony:

"Q. Well, you and Mr. Withington at no time occupied the same room there? A. Why, he had his room in connection—

"Q. In connection? A. (Continuing)—with my apartment, he and his bookkeeper.

"Q. Right off of your apartment? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. His room—and did you ever have to get out of that room hurriedly on notice that Mrs. Withington was there for some purpose? A. Well, if I remember right, I did one time."

[1] We are satisfied that the statement contained in the opinion that contestant and Withington "maintained exceedingly intimate relations" before they were married is amply justified, and that the assertion in the petition to the contrary is wholly unwarranted.

[2] Again, the petition assails, as wholly unjustified by the evidence and as contrary to the evidence, the statement in the opinion that "their marital relations, as upon previous ventures, were not blessed with constant congenial peace and quiet." From contestant's testimony it appears that, when first married, she and Withington lived at Venice for about a month; that they had "little disputes"; that upon one occasion thereafter Withington accused her of being in love with one Grundy; that "we had an argument, and he struck me and knocked me to the floor and it bruised me up terribly"; that thereafter they discussed the subject of divorce more than once and negotiated concerning a property settlement. No important inaccuracy is pointed out.

We have not attempted to give all of the evidence in support of either of the assertions in the opinion referred to and assailed in the petition in an unwarranted manner, nor to pay attention to a number of other instances of a similar character in the petition, but, since it is replete with exaggerated and improper assertions, we feel that the impropriety of this character of petition cannot be passed entirely unnoticed.

The opinion of this court in the above-entitled matter, filed on June 26, 1929, and reported in volume 59, California Appellate Decisions, at page 679 (see 279 P. 196),¹ is amended as follows: Strike from the third paragraph on page 680 thereof sixteen lines commencing with the words "It appears," to and including the quoted words "or I will," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

It appears that both the testator and the appellant had previously had other spouses, but that, notwithstanding that fact, they had then maintained exceedingly intimate relations. She testified that she herself had been attacked by the decedent's former mate for her associations with him, prior to the time she married him, and censured by Withington for visiting the Tia Juana resort of, and being friendly with, one Grundy. Withington had for many years been engaged in conducting saloons, gambling houses, and assignation resorts in California and in Mexico, prior to and during his marriage with appellant, with some of which she was familiar, and from one of his places of business at Tia Juana she had drawn considerable sums of money. Their marital relations were not blessed with constant congenial peace and quiet; they discussed the subject of divorce, each suggesting that the other obtain a decree, and Withington upon one occasion told the appellant, "Either you get a divorce or I will." Shortly thereafter appellant proposed, "I would get a divorce and I would go my way and he could go his," if he would "do the right thing" by her in a financial way. She testified that they had "little disputes," and that at one time, after complaining that she did not love him, and that he had heard rumors, he knocked her down.

GACKSTETTER v. MARKET ST. RY. CO. et al. (Civ. 6951.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Granted Sept. 19, 1929.

1. Trial ⇨140(1), 143—Credibility of witnesses, and weight, effect, and probative force of conflicting testimony, are for jury.

Where conflict of testimony exists, it is for jury to judge credibility of witnesses, and weight, effect, and probative force to be given their testimony.

2. Appeal and error ⇨930(1)—Reviewing court must construe conflicting evidence to support verdict.

Reviewing court, on appeal, is to construe conflicting evidence, so as to support verdict, if it may be done so reasonably, accepting as true evidence tending to sustain verdict, unless it be inherently incredible, and rejecting as untrue those portions which conflict therewith.

3. Negligence ⇨6—Violation of ordinance is negligence per se.

The violation of an ordinance is negligence per se.

4. Street railroads ⇨114(8, 21)—Evidence sustained findings that street car was negligently operated between intersections when striking child, and that negligence was proximate cause of child's injury.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain findings of jury that defendant's street car was negligently operated between intersections at time it collided with plaintiff child, and that negligence was proximate cause of injury to child.

5. Witnesses ⇨379(2)—Testimony that street car, striking child, was traveling at moderate speed, could not be impeached by question whether witness stated motorman made fine stop and was not at fault (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2051, 2052).

Where witness, in action for injuries sustained by child when struck by defendant's street car, had previously testified that car was traveling at moderate speed, which he thought was 20 to 25 miles per hour, his testimony could not be impeached, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2051, 2052, by question, on cross-examination, whether witness said that motorman made fine stop and was not at fault.

6. Witnesses ⇨386—Inconsistency appearing inferentially, allowing inference favoring consistency, is insufficient to impeach witness (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2051, 2052).

In order to impeach witness, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2051, 2052, by showing that he has made inconsistent statements, impeaching testimony must appear to be plainly inconsistent with that already given, and is insufficient if inconsistency appears only inferentially, under circumstances that an inference in favor of consistency might also be drawn.

7. Trial ⇨260(1)—Refusing instruction, substantially covered by instructions given, held not error.

Refusing to give requested instruction, substance of which was fully covered by other instructions given by court, held not error.

8. Street railroads ⇨95(2)—That street car was operated within speed permitted by ordinance would not preclude recovery for injuries to child struck by car, if car could not be stopped in time to avoid accident.

Refusal, in action for injuries child sustained when struck by street car, to give instruction that motorman could operate car at speed permitted by ordinance, and that, if at that speed car could not have been stopped in time to have avoided striking plaintiff, verdict must be against plaintiff, notwithstanding speed was in excess of speed authorized by ordinance, held not error, since one may act in strict conformity to terms of ordinance, and yet not exercise care required under circumstances.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1039(13)—Variance between allegations that plaintiff, before being struck by street car, was on south side of street, and proof that she was on north side, did not justify reversal.

Variance between allegations of complaint, in action for injury sustained when struck by defendant's street car, that plaintiff before accident was on south side of street, and proof showing that she was on north side, held not to justify reversal of judgment for plaintiff in action for injuries, since, to justify reversal, variance must be material, and it not appearing there was variance that could have misled defendants to their prejudice; allegations of complaint being in accordance with testimony of defendant motorman.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Betty Gackstetter, a minor, by John Gackstetter, her guardian ad litem, against the Market Street Railway Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, and Walter H. Linforth, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Vincent W. Hallinan and James J. Roach, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem. On June 24, 1925, plaintiff, a girl, then about three years of age, was injured by one of the cars of the defendant corporation. The accident occurred about 4 o'clock in the afternoon on Hayes street, between Broderick and Divisadero streets, in the city of San Francisco. A verdict for the sum of $5,000 was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the appeal is by the defendants, Market Street Railway Company and L. McClelland, from the judgment entered upon such verdict.

The car was proceeding easterly on Hayes street under the operation of defendant McClelland, as motorman, and had stopped to let off passengers at Broderick street. It was then started towards the next street, Divisadero street, where a regular stop had to be made, according to the regulations of the defendant corporation. After traveling almost half way along the block, the motorman noticed the plaintiff and a little boy near a sand pile in front of a building under construction. The evidence is conflicting as to the exact position of the little girl immediately before the accident—the testimony of a woman spectator, who was standing near the point of collision, being that the little girl ran from the north side of the street and attempted to run across the street; that she was struck by the left side of the front fender, tossed across the fender to the right side of the car and onto the pile of sand, from which she rolled down under the wheels; and the testimony of the motorman being that she was on the south side of the street just off the curb a foot or so; that his car was running at the rate of about 7 or 8 miles per hour when he saw her, and that he did not exceed that rate between Broderick street and the point of the accident; that, when he first saw them, the boy and girl were standing near the sand pile, at a distance of about $1\frac{1}{2}$ car lengths from the car. The girl started to run fast toward the car and toward the north side of the street, and instantly he sounded the gong, threw on the air, and reversed the car; that, when she started to run, she was about 20 feet away from the car; that she was struck by the right forward steps of the car at the very front corner; and that he found a piece of overall cloth on the step after the accident, the cloth resembling the material of the garment which she was wearing.

The girl was seriously injured, the chief injury being in the legs, one of which was broken, and there being cuts and bruises on other parts of the body. The motorman stopped the car very suddenly and within a short distance after sounding the gong. The girl was found, with her feet on the rail, lying close against the brake shoe immediately in front of the front wheel of the forward truck of the car, the wheel not having passed over any part of her body.

The complaint alleges that on the date of the accident there was in full force and effect Ordinance No. 1674 of the city and county of San Francisco, which provided in part that no person or corporation should operate any street car at a greater speed than 15 miles per hour within a certain area therein described, which area embraced the territory where the accident occurred. The complaint also alleges that the street car which struck the plaintiff was being operated at the time at a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour.

The testimony on behalf of the plaintiff as to the speed of the car was somewhat meager and lacks the exactness that should be present in a case of such serious nature. Valentine McDonnell, a policeman, as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, testified that he was seated in the rear end of the car reading a newspaper. The following examination occurred:

"Q. Now, do you remember the car proceeding across Broderick street and down Divisadero street prior to the time of the collision? A. Yes; I do.

"Q. Now, during that space—from the time it crossed Broderick street until the little girl was struck, at what rate of speed was the car being operated? A. Oh, it was going at a moderate rate of speed.

"Q. What do you call a moderate rate of speed in miles per hour? A. I would call a moderate rate of speed between 20 and 25 miles per hour.

"Q. Was it going about that speed at the time you mention? A. Well, to the best of my knowledge."

The witness heard some one scream; then the sound of the gong; then all of a sudden the car came to a stop. He jumped off and ran to the front, where he found the plaintiff in the position heretofore stated. He testified that the car was stopped very quickly.

The jury heard the conflicting testimony of this witness and the motorman, and had the witnesses before them where they could note their bearing, their tone of voice, and the other elements of personality which are so essential in the courtroom, and particularly before a jury. In the case of Charves v. Terminal Railways, 44 Cal. App. 221, 186 P. 154, the court said:

"What the actual rate of speed of the car was at the time was a question of fact for the jury, and whether or not the rate of speed which the jury found said car to have been actually running at said time was an undue rate of speed for cars to be operated upon said Adeline street, were also questions of fact for the jury. Burr v. United Railroads, 163 Cal. 663, 126 P. 873; Ellis v. Central Cal. Traction Co., 37 Cal. App. 390, 174 P. 407."

[1, 2] Where a conflict of testimony exists, it is for the jury to judge the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight, effect, and pro-bative force to be given their testimony and the duty of the reviewing court on appeal is to construe the evidence so as to support the verdict, if it may be done so reasonably; that is to say, to accept as true such evidence as tending to sustain the verdict, unless it be inherently incredible, and to reject as untrue those portions which conflict therewith. Truittner v. Knight, 83 Cal. App. 655, 257 P. 447.

[3] The violation of an ordinance is negligence per se. Baillargeon v. Myers, 180 Cal. 504, 182 P. 37, 39; King v. San Diego Electric Railway Co., 176 Cal. 266, 168 P. 131; Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 550, 182 P. 281. In Baillargeon v. Myers, supra, the court said:

"In view of the conflict in the evidence in this behalf, we must assume in favor of the judgment that the jury found that at the time of the collision the ordinance was being violated by the chauffeur, and that the condition of the traffic was not such as to excuse such violation. This being so, the defendant was guilty of negligence per se, and is liable for the injury to the plaintiff, if such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and if the plaintiff was free from contributory negligence."

"It has been repeatedly declared by the Supreme Court of this state that the failure to perform a duty imposed by statute or municipal ordinance constitutes negligence. Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418; Driscoll v. Market Street, etc., Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 553, 32 P. 591, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203; Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 85 P. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059. But the omission to perform such duty must contribute directly to the injury; otherwise, however, illegal the act or omission thereof, in the abstract, no action for damages can be maintained thereon. McKune v. Santa Clara V. M. & L. Co., 110 Cal. 480, 42 P. 980." Fenn v. Clark, 11 Cal. App. 81, 103 P. 944, 945.

[4] Upon this branch of the case we are of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings of the jury as to defendants' negligence in the operation of its car, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury.

The point is made by defendants that the trial court erred in sustaining objections to questions by defendants on cross-examination of the witness McDonnell, who testified as hereinbefore related as to the speed of the car. The cross-examination was directed to a conversation had with such witness by a representative of the defendant corporation about two weeks after the accident. The question was asked: "Now, then, didn't you at that time tell him that in your opinion the motorman made a fine stop and was not at fault?" Again: "Let me put it this way: Did you, at that time and place, say to Mr. Lewin that the motorman was not at fault?"

And again: "Did you, at that time and place, state to Mr. Lewin that the motorman made a fine stop?"

[5] Objection was made to each question, upon the ground that it was not an impeachment of anything testified to by the witness. The objections were properly sustained. The witness had previously testified that the car was traveling at a moderate speed, that he called 20 to 25 miles per hour a moderate rate, and that to the best of his knowledge the car was traveling at that rate.

Section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a witness may be impeached by contradictory evidence, and section 2052 of the same Code provides that a witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony.

Before a witness may be impeached, it must be shown that the statements sought to be elicited are either contradictory or inconsistent with the statements he has previously made in his testimony. In this instance the statements sought to be brought out are not inconsistent with or contradictory of any other statements. The motorman might have acted in a very commendable manner, and with great promptitude and presence of mind, and have made a very fine stop; but his conduct at that moment would not serve to erase any acts of negligence which preceded, and which might have been found to have been the proximate cause of injury. A statement that the motorman made a fine stop and was not at fault would be simply a conclusion of the witness, and would not serve to enlighten the jury as to facts and conditions which the witness obviously had not observed.

[6] In order to impeach a witness, by showing that he has made inconsistent statements, the impeaching testimony must appear to be plainly inconsistent with that already given; it is insufficient if the inconsistency appears only inferentially under such circumstances that an inference in favor of consistency might also be drawn. 27 Cal. Jur. 153; People v. Collum, 122 Cal. 186, 54 P. 589.

Defendants have taken exception to the refusal of the court to give the following instruction to the jury:

"In a case where the alleged negligence consists of an omission of duty suddenly and unexpectedly arising from a person walking or running either in front of the car upon the track without warning, or running into the side of the car, it is incumbent upon plaintiff to show that the circumstances were such that the motorman had an opportunity to become conscious of the facts giving rise to the duty, and a reasonable opportunity to perform it, before it can be said the motorman was guilty of negligence or the railroad company can be held liable on that ground. Of course, it is for you to say whether or not the little girl did walk or run in front of the car, or did walk or run into the side of the car."

[7] The instruction was properly refused. The substance of the instruction was fully covered by other instructions given by the court. The court gave instruction No. IX, as follows:

"It is for the plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant McClelland was negligent and careless in the operation of the car at the time of the happening of the accident referred to in the complaint. If the plaintiff has failed to prove this negligence by a preponderance of the evidence, then your verdict must be against the plaintiff and in favor of the Market Street Railway Company and its motorman."

Also instruction No. X:

"The duty resting upon the motorman of the car in question was to use ordinary care for the safety of the plaintiff. He was not obliged to use a higher degree of care; if he did use ordinary care, then your verdict must be against the plaintiff and in favor of the motorman and also in favor of the Market Street Railway Company."

Also instruction No. XIII:

"The motorman of the street car in question had a right to expect, in the absence of warning or knowledge to the contrary that the plaintiff, Betty Gackstetter, would not suddenly undertake to run across the street or into the car, if you find she did so."

Also instruction No. XIV:

"In determining the question of negligence in this case you should take into consideration all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the occurrence, including the fact that the street car could not travel upon any other part of the street except its rails; the speed at which it was traveling; that the plaintiff was a child of the age of three years; the place where the accident happened; the conditions existent at the time and place and any other facts proved from which you can determine whether under the circumstances the motorman defendant used the degree of care which an ordinary prudent person would have used in the same circumstances."

Also instruction No. XV:

"If you find that the plaintiff suddenly ran in front of, or in such close proximity to the moving car at a time and under such circumstances that the motorman by the exercise of ordinary care had no reason to believe or expect that she would do so, and at a time, when by the exercise of ordinary care it was impossible to have stopped the car in time to have avoided injuring her, then I instruct you your verdict should be against the plaintiff and in favor of the Market Street Railway Company and its motorman, if you further find they were not guilty of negligence as charged in the complaint."

It is not error to refuse an instruction, when the matter requested is substantially covered by other instructions. 19 Cal. Jur. 748; Murray v. United Railroads, 49 Cal. App. 462, 193 P. 596; Cook v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 279, 66 P. 306.

Defendants also complained of the refusal by the court to give the following instruction:

"The defendants had the right at the time and place of the happening of the accident in question, to operate its car at the speed of 15 miles an hour. If you find, under the facts and circumstances of this case, as shown by the evidence, by the use of ordinary care, the car, if traveling at this rate of speed could not have been stopped in time to have avoided the infliction on plaintiff of the injuries complained of, then your verdict must be against the plaintiff and in favor of the Market Street Railway Company and its motorman, notwithstanding you also find the speed of the car at the time and place in question was in excess of 15 miles an hour."

[8] The proffered instruction does not correctly state the law. It does not follow, merely because one has complied with the terms of a statute or ordinance, that he is thereby absolved from negligence. One may act in strict conformity to the terms of an enactment, and yet not exercise the amount of care which is required under the circumstances. 19 Cal. Jur. 634; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125; Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co., 180 Cal. 32, 179 P. 203, 15 A. L. R. 401. In the case of Spring v. McCabe, 53 Cal. App. 330, 200 P. 41, 43, the court said:

"The operator of a vehicle may not escape liability for a collision by simply saying that he was not exceeding the speed limit established by statute or ordinance when it happened. It may appear (the other party being without fault) that though a defendant was not exceeding the limit of speed prescribed by the ordinance, yet that he was operating his vehicle without such control as to speed under the particular circumstances as a careful and prudent man in the exercise of due care and caution would have had."

The jury were fully and properly instructed as to the law upon this particular point in instructions XVI, XVII and XIX.

The defendants also complain of the refusal of the court to give the following instruction:

"If you find the accident in question was caused solely and entirely by the fault of the plaintiff, then your verdict must be against her and in favor of the defendant Market Street Railway Company and its motorman."

The matters set forth in that instruction were covered by instructions VI and XV as given by the court.

[9] The point has been made by the defendants that plaintiff cannot, as a matter of law, recover for negligence in a case involving the action of the plaintiff in running from the north side of Hayes street to the south side; in other words, that there is a variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof. In order to justify a reversal, the variance must be material. 19 Cal. Jur. 692; Poak v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 177 Cal. 190, 170 P. 159.

It does not appear that there was such a variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof as could have misled the defendants to the prejudice; the allegations of the complaint being in accordance with the testimony of the defendant McClelland.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

HAMMOND LUMBER CO. v. RICHARDSON BUILDING & ENGINEERING CO., Inc., et al. (Civ. 3782.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 25, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 24, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Where evidence conflicted, finding that plaintiff received and accepted note was conclusive on appeal.

Where finding that materialman received and accepted note, alleged to constitute extension of time of payment, was based on conflicting evidence, such finding was conclusive on appeal.

2. Subrogation ⇨31(1)—Surety is entitled to benefit of securities held by creditor upon satisfying obligation of principal (Civ. Code, §§ 2848, 2849).

Upon satisfying obligation of plaintiff, a surety is, under Civ. Code, §§ 2848, 2849, entitled to benefit of securities held by creditor.

3. Account stated ⇨1—"Account stated" is unperformed promise of one party to pay stated sum to another.

An "account stated" is unperformed promise of one party to pay a stated sum to another and, if complete, it contains a signed and written acknowledgment of present, unqualified indebtedness or liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Account Stated.]

4. Account stated ⇨4—Execution and acceptance of note for balance of unsettled account constitutes "stating of account."

Execution and acceptance of note for balance of an unsettled account constitutes stating of an account between parties.

5. Mechanics' liens ⇨315—Execution and acceptance of note as account stated did not release sureties on contractor's bond.

Execution and acceptance of note as account stated did not release sureties on contractor's bond given for materials furnished to contractor.

6. Sales ⇨82(2)—Where contract was silent as to time of payment, presumption arose that it was due immediately or on demand when contract was completed.

Where contract to furnish material was silent as to time of payment, presumption arose that it was due and payable immediately or on demand when plaintiff's contract was completed.

7. Mechanics' liens ⇨315—Materialman's acceptance of note held not extension of time so as to release sureties on contractor's bond (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Where contract to furnish material was silent as to time of payment, taking of ninety-day note was not an extension of time so as to release sureties on contractor's bond given for payment of material under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, but merely established maturity of obligation which theretofore had been indefinite.

8. Principal and surety ⇨112—Sureties are not entitled to reduction of liability on account of payments made to creditor on another contract.

Sureties on one contract are not entitled to a reduction of their liability on account of partial payments made to their creditors on another debt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by the Hammond Lumber Company against the Richardson Building & Engineering Company, Incorporated, and others. From a judgment denying plaintiff relief against their sureties, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part with directions.

Superseding opinion in 278 P. 261.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Stephens & Stephens and G. C. De Garmo, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This action was brought against Richardson Building & Engineering Company, a building contractor, and Ella W. Richardson, E. Will Richardson, and W. C. B. Richardson, the sureties on the contractor's bond, given pursuant to the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for materials furnished by the plaintiff to the contractor and used in the construction of a building for Edward A. Geissler. The plaintiff was given judgment against the contractor, but was denied any relief against the sureties. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

As required by section 1183, the bond provides that "the same is hereby expressly made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who perform labor upon or furnish materials to be used in the work described in the said contract, or in any modification thereof; and any and all such persons shall have and are given a right of action to recover upon this bond against the said principal and sureties, or either of them, in any suit brought to foreclose mechanic's liens, which may be filed by such persons, or any of them upon the property mentioned in said contract, or in a separate suit brought upon this bond, and may recover in such action or actions the value of such labor done or materials furnished, or both, not exceeding, however, in the aggregate of such recoveries, the amount of this bond as above specified."

The only defense relied on by the sureties is that they were discharged from liability by alleged acts of the plaintiff, found by the court, substantially in the language of the answer, to be as follows:

"That on the 26th day of December, 1923, said defendant Richardson Building and Engineering Co. Inc., as contractor, was indebted to said plaintiff for and on account of building materials furnished by said plaintiff to said Richardson Building and Engineering Co. Inc. for use in various buildings theretofore constructed by said contractor, including the materials furnished by said plaintiff for use in the building described in plaintiff's complaint; that to evidence said entire indebtedness said Richardson Building and Engineering Co. Inc., did on the 26th day of December, 1923, execute to said plaintiff and said plaintiff did accept and receive from said Richardson Building and Engineering Co. Inc., a promissory note for the sum of $23,192.82 payable on or before 90 days after date thereof, with interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum; and said note by its terms provided that the execution and acceptance of said note constituted evidence of said debt as a stated account.

"That said note was secured by an assignment to said plaintiff of certain securities belonging to said contractor; and since said time said note and securities have been and are now retained by and are in the possession of said plaintiff.

"That prior to the 26th day of December, 1923, the indebtedness referred to in plaintiff's complaint and sued on in this action was an ordinary book account and the same was and had been payable on or before the 28th day of September, 1923; that subsequent to the execution of said note there was a novation of indebtedness sued on herein and said book account was closed, discharged and liquidated and the same was, subsequent to the 26th day of December, 1923, merged into and became and was an account stated, which account stated included debts other than the one herein sued on.

"That at the time of the execution of said note, it was agreed between said plaintiff and said contractor that five per cent should be added to said book account of $4,756.03, making a total of $5,003.40, as alleged in plaintiff's complaint, and said sum of $5,003.40 became and was made a part of said promissory note hereinbefore referred to and described.

"That the extension of time given by said plaintiff to said contractor for the payment of said original debt, under and by virtue of the execution of said note, and the substitution of said new account for said original book account, as aforesaid, were given and made by the parties thereto, without the knowledge or consent of the defendant sureties, or either of them; that said defendant sureties did not at any time assume, promise or agree to pay said account stated or said note or any part thereof."

The promissory note referred to in the findings contains the following: "This note is not given or accepted as payment of said amount due said payee, but as evidence of said debt as a stated account only." It is not found that the note was given or accepted as payment, and the note itself states that it was not so given or accepted. "In the absence of an agreement to this effect, the acceptance is not a payment of the debt." National Lumber Co. v. Whalley, 162 Cal. 224, 226, 121 P. 729, 730.

[1] The finding that the plaintiff received and accepted the promissory note is based on sharply conflicting evidence, and is therefore conclusive on appeal.

[2] The collateral securities referred to in the findings consisted of a large number of shares of preferred stock of the Jennings Corporation and the contractor's promise to deliver in pledge a large number of shares of the common stock of the First Mortgage Corporation "when, and only when, permission has been received from the corporation commissioner." Such permission has never been given. It appears without contradiction, from affidavits used on plaintiff's motion for a new trial, that "on or about December 26, 1923, preferred stock of Jennings Corporation * * * was absolutely worthless"; that "soon after December 26, 1923, the Jennings Corporation became defunct and went out of business"; that "the common stock of the First Mortgage Corporation was valueless on December 26, 1923"; that, "in fact, it was a liability at that time"; and that "since then, the First Mortgage Corporation was acquired by another corporation and the common stockholders realized nothing for their stock." Upon satisfying the obligation of his principal, a surety is entitled to the benefit of securities held by the creditor. Civ. Code, §§ 2848 and 2849. The sureties in this case, however, tendered no such issue, and if the alleged securities are of any value the sureties still may enforce their right of subrogation. Cawston Ostrich Farm v. Salomon, 72 Cal. App. 550, 237 P. 808.

[3-5] It is not perceived on what theory it can be held that the sureties were discharged by the alleged stated account between the plaintiff and the contractor. The obligation of the sureties is not to pay the purchase price of the materials originally agreed upon by the plaintiff and the contractor, or the amount agreed upon in the stated account, but the reasonable value of such materials. "An account stated is a mere unperformed promise by one party to pay a stated sum to another." Bennett v. Potter, 180 Cal. 736, 744, 183 P. 156, 159. "It is a complete account stated if it contains a signed and written acknowledgment of a present, unqualified indebtedness or liability with a promise to pay a named sum." Gardner v. Watson, 170 Cal. 570, 574, 150 P. 994, 995. The execution and acceptance of a promissory note for the balance of an unsettled account constitute the stating of an account between the parties. Kinley v. Thelen, 158 Cal. 175, 183, 110 P. 513; Bledsoe v. Stuckey, 47 Cal. App. 95, 98, 190 P. 217. If stating an account in a case such as this discharges the sureties, then they would be discharged in all cases where a promissory note is accepted for the balance of an account, contrary to a long line of decisions, a few of which are hereinafter cited.

[6, 7] Respondent contends that the giving and acceptance of the note constituted an extension of the time of payment and that by reason thereof the sureties were discharged. It is neither alleged nor found that the plaintiff and the contractor made any specific agreement as to the time of payment for materials prior to December 26, 1923, when the note was executed. The finding, in the language of the answer, that the indebtedness "was an ordinary book account and the same was and had been payable on or before the 10th day of August, 1923," the day on which the plaintiff's contract was completed, does not imply a specific agreement to make payment at any particular time. Neither does the evidence show that any definite agreement as to the time of payment was made prior to the execution of the note. The time of payment not being fixed, the presumption arises that it was due and payable immediately or on demand when plaintiff's contract to furnish the materials was completed. Civ. Code, § 1657; Newhall v. Sherman, Clay & Co., 124 Cal. 509, 511, 57 P. 387; Sunset Lumber Co. v. Smith (Cal. App.) 272 P. 1068. This presumption applied, of course, in the cases hereinafter cited, where the time for payment had not been specifically agreed upon prior to the acceptance of notes payable at a future date. In construing statutory provisions similar to those of Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, it is said:

"Decisions of this court have made it clear that the statute and bonds given under it must be construed liberally, in order to effectuate the purpose of Congress as declared in the act. In every case which has come before this court, where labor and materials were actually furnished for and used in part performance of the work contemplated in the bond, recovery was allowed, if the suit was brought within the period prescribed by the act. Technical rules otherwise protecting sureties from liability have never been applied in proceedings under this statute." Illinois Surety Co. v. John Davis Co., 244 U. S. 376, 37 S. Ct. 614, 616, 61 L. Ed. 1206.

In the leading case of United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States, 191 U. S. 416, 24 S. Ct. 142, 144, 48 L. Ed. 242, the Circuit Court of Appeals had certified to the Supreme Court of the United States the question whether the act of the company which had furnished materials in taking two promissory notes of the contractor for the amount of its account, "then due and payable, one of said notes running for thirty days and the other for sixty days," operated to discharge the surety. In answering the question in the negative the court said:

"In an ordinary guaranty the guarantor understands perfectly the nature and extent of his obligation. * * * In such cases he contracts in reliance upon the exact terms of his principal's undertaking, and has a right to suppose that no change will be made without his consent; and the courts have gone so far as to hold that any change will exonerate him, though it really redound to his benefit.

"This covenant, however, is inserted for an entirely different purpose from that of securing to the government the performance of the contract for the construction of the building. * * * The guarantor is ignorant of the parties with whom his principal may contract, the amount, the nature, and the value of the materials required, as well as the time when payment for them will become due. These particulars it would probably be impossible even for the principal to furnish, and it is to be assumed that the surety contracts with knowledge of this fact. Not knowing when or by whom these materials will be supplied, or when the bills for them will mature, it can make no difference to him whether they were originally purchased on a credit of sixty days, or whether, after the materials are furnished, the time for payment is extended sixty days, and a note given for the amount maturing at that time. If a person deliberately contracts for an uncertain liability, he ought not to complain when that uncertainty becomes certain. * * * The rule of strictissimi juris is a stringent one, and is liable at times to work a practical injustice. It is one which ought not to be extended to contracts not within the reason of the rule, particularly when the bond is underwritten by a corporation which has undertaken for a profit to insure the obligee against a failure of performance on the part of the principal obligor."

In First Congregational Church of Christ v. Lowrey, 175 Cal. 124, 126, 165 P. 440, 441, it is said:

"Neither our statute law nor our decisions under it have ever recognized that there is any distinction between a compensated and uncompensated surety or guarantor, nor between a corporate surety and an individual surety, nor between a corporation or an individual engaging in the business of suretyship or guarantyship for compensation and a corporation or individual who enters into a like contract without compensation."

The decision in United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States, supra, has been followed generally by federal and state courts. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ohio River Gravel Co. (C. C. A.) 20 F.(2d) 514; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States (C. C. A.) 178 F. 692; Chaffee v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (C. C. A.) 128 F. 918; State v. Adams, 187 Ind. 165, 118 N. E. 680; George H. Sampson Co. v. Commonwealth, 202 Mass. 339, 88 N. E. 916; Watanabe v. Ota, 137 Wash. 368, 242 P. 379, 43 A. L. R. 1368. In several of the cases cited stress is laid upon the fact that the surety was not prejudiced by the extension of the time of payment. In an action by the owner against the sureties on a building contractor's bond, it is said that if there has been "a change in the contract in any material respect, the inquiry there ends and the guarantor is exonerated, and that it is not a subject of inquiry whether the alteration has or has not been to his injury." First Congregational Church of Christ v. Lowrey, supra. This holding, however, was expressly limited in its application by the decision in Roberts v. Security Trust & Savings Bank, 196 Cal. 557, 565, 238 P. 673, which also was an action between the owner and the sureties on a building contractor's bond. No case in this state has been cited which holds, in a suit by laborers or materialmen against the surety on a bond in the terms of the one involved herein, that "it is not a subject of inquiry whether the alteration has or has not been to his injury."

In a case similar in principle to this, in which the defendant surety claimed a discharge from liability for the purchase price of grapes by reason of the taking of trade acceptances by the creditor, it is said:

"The bond was given to insure payment of the grapes received by Herman and which he sold on credit. The agreement between the parties with reference to payments to be made by Herman was silent as to any particular due date. At most, the trade acceptances definitely fixed such date. There never was an extension of the time of payment, for without a due date a subsequent agreement fixing such date is not an extension. Such an agreement merely establishes the maturity of the obligation which theretofore had been indefinite." Earl Fruit Co. v. Herman (Cal. App.) 266 P. 592, 594; Tyson v. Reinecke, 25 Cal. App. 696, 145 P. 153.

Respondents rely on American Bonding Co. v. United States (C. C. A.) 233 F. 364, 368. In that case, however, there was a definite agreement as to the time of payment, but the terms of the agreement were not observed. The company furnishing the materials "accepted numerous notes from Wells [the contractor] for such amounts as were agreed upon from time to time * * * and discounted the notes at several banks. These notes were often renewed, the extension sometimes being as much as a "year."

The finding that "subsequent to the execution of said note there was a novation of indebtedness sued on herein" is without support in the evidence.

[8] The answer alleges that the "note was secured by the assignment to plaintiff of certain accounts due and to become due said contractor, * * * and * * * that said plaintiff has collected and received sufficient money from said accounts and securities to pay the claim herein sued on in full." The court made no finding responsive to this allegation, but the evidence in relation thereto is undisputed. As found by the court, the amount of the note was made up of the balances due for materials used "in various buildings theretofore constructed by said contractor." Collections were made by the plaintiff from the owners of two of these buildings and credited in part payment of the balances due for materials used therein. No collection was made by the plaintiff from Geissler. It seems too clear for argument that the sureties on one contract are not entitled to a reduction of their liability on account of partial payments made to their creditor on another contract.

The court found that the reasonable value of the materials furnished by the plaintiff and used by the contractor in the Geissler building is $4,756.03. All other facts are found in the plaintiff's favor except those from which the court concluded that the sureties were discharged from liability. Since the facts found in favor of the sureties are not sufficient to warrant the conclusion reached, there appears to be no good reason to send the case back for a retrial.

The judgment in favor of the plaintiff against defendant Richardson Building & Engineering Company, Inc., is affirmed. The judgment in favor of defendants Ella W. Richardson, E. Will Richardson, and W. C. B. Richardson against the plaintiff is reversed and the trial court is directed to enter judgment on the findings in favor of the plaintiff against said defendant Ella W. Richardson,

E. Will Richardson, and W. C. B. Richardson for the sum of $4,756.03 and costs of suit.

PEOPLE v. FAIN et al. (Cr. 1036.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 26, 1929.

Larceny §55—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for theft of automobile.

In prosecution of occupant of automobile arrested with driver for theft thereof, evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. R. Hughes, Judge.

J. W. Fain was convicted of theft of an automobile, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Murle C. Shreck, C. E. O'Neil, and George E. Foote, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendants, J. W. Fain and Bennie Bridgeman, were charged with the theft of an automobile, a Ford coupé, the property of R. K. Hamada. Bridgeman entered a plea of guilty and Fain one of not guilty. Fain was duly convicted and his motion for a new trial was denied. He has appealed from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. Appellant's only contention is that the evidence is insufficient to warrant his conviction.

Hamada testified that he parked the automobile on one of the streets of Sacramento at 9 o'clock in the evening of February 5, 1929, and that when he returned at 10 o'clock the same evening the automobile was gone, and that his registration certificate was "on the steering post" in "plain sight, so everybody could see it."

A police officer of the city of Stockton testified that, in that city, "around 3:30 in the morning" of February 6, 1929, the defendants "were riding along in this Ford coupé and I * * * stopped them. I asked them what they were doing out in that part of town, and they said they were lost. I asked them where they were going, and they said they were going to Los Angeles. * * * I asked * * * the driver of the car * * * what his name was, and he said his name was Turner. Later on he said his name was Bridgeman. * * * I put my flashlight on the certificate in the car, and I saw it was registered to a Japanese by the name of R. K. Hamada, 2125 Fourth Street, Sacramento. * * * I asked the driver of the car, Mr. Bridgeman, if the car belonged to him, and Mr. Fain spoke up and says: 'No, it don't belong to him, it belongs to his brother.' * * * I asked him if his brother was a Japanese, and he would not answer, so I accused them both of stealing the car, and neither one said anything, so I put them under arrest. * * * I took Mr. Fain down to the station with me. * * * I tried to get him to tell me where they stole the car, but he wouldn't do it. He said he didn't know anything about the car, that he was out getting some cigarettes or something, and he didn't know anything about the car being stolen." The defendant Fain testified that he had served a term in Folsom prison for the crime of stealing an automobile in Los Angeles; that he was released from that prison January 21, 1929; that during the evening of February 5th he was invited by Bridgeman to ride with him to Stockton, "and I asked him about this car. I says: 'I didn't know you owned a car.' I says: 'Whose car is it?' He says: 'My brother's car.'" The appellant further testified that he had no information that the automobile was stolen until his arrest.

The jurors were not required to believe the appellant's explanation. His presence in the stolen automobile, his false statement to the Stockton policeman that the automobile belonged to Bridgeman's brother, and his silence when the policeman accused him of the theft, are sufficient to establish his guilt. People v. Lang, 142 Cal. 482, 76 P. 232; People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 88, 74 P. 547; People v. Hunter, 59 Cal. App. 444, 210 P. 968; People v. Edwards, 79 Cal. App. 514, 249 P. 1090.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

HUNTLY v. ZURICH GENERAL ACCIDENT & LIABILITY INS. CO. et al. (Civ. 6955.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. August 1, 1929.

1. Dead bodies ☞1—There is no property right in dead body in absence of statutory provision (Pen. Code, § 294).

In absence of statutory provision, there is no property right in a dead body; Pen. Code, § 294, providing that person charged by law with duty of burying body of deceased person is entitled to custody for purpose of burial, not conferring property right.

2. Limitation of actions ☞31—Wife's cause of action arising from mutilation of body of deceased husband held one for injury to her person within one-year limitation (Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3).

Where gravamen of cause of action by wife for mutilation of deceased husband's body as alleged was shock to wife's mental and physical structure, and wife introduced testimony as to her physical and mental condition as indicated by insomnia, hysteria, and nervousness, together with physician's testimony along same lines, cause of action was one for injury to person within Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, requiring action for injury to person to be brought within one year.

3. Limitation of actions ☞31—Force and violence or battery inflicted upon plaintiff causing injury is not necessary to constitute "injury to person" within one-year limitation (Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, requiring an action for an injury to person to be brought within one year, it is not necessary that act of force and violence or battery be inflicted upon plaintiff to constitute an "injury to the person," since when bodily injury occurs law considers action as one for personal injuries, regardless of nature of breach of duty, and adopts nature of damage as test.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Injury to the Person.]

4. Limitation of actions ☞31—One-year limitation on actions for injuries held intended to apply to actions for damages "on account" of personal injuries (Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3).

Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, requiring an action for injury to another to be brought within one year, held intended to refer to actions for damages "on account" of personal injuries.

5. Limitation of actions ☞31—Amendment to one-year limitation held intended to embrace within its terms all infringements of personal rights, as distinguished from property rights (Amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, by St. 1905, p. 232).

Amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, by St. 1905, p. 232, bringing within one-year limitation causes of action for injury to or death of one caused by wrongful act or neglect of another, held intended to embrace within its terms all infringements of personal rights, as distinguished from property rights.

6. Coroners ☞11—Coroner, having reasonable ground to suspect possibility of death by hand of deceased or through instrumentality of some other person, has discretion to hold inquest (Pen. Code, §§ 1510, 1512).

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1510, 1512, authorizing coroner to inquire into cause of death in certain instances and hold post mortem examinations, coroner, having reasonable ground to suspect death of person was sudden or unusual and of such a nature as to indicate possibility of death by hand of deceased or through instrumentality of some other person, has discretion to hold inquest, and should not be held responsible simply because at conclusion of inquest it has been determined that deceased died natural death.

7. Coroners ☞11—Coroner may order autopsy without consent of deceased's family, when in his judgment that is appropriate means of ascertaining cause of death (Pen. Code, §§ 1510, 1512).

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1510, 1512, authorizing coroner to inquire into the circumstances of death in certain instances and to hold inquest, coroner may order an autopsy when in his judgment that is appropriate means of ascertaining cause of death, and this he may do without consent of family of deceased.

8. Evidence ☞83(4)—Presumption exists, in absence of contrary showing, that coroner's official duty has been regularly performed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963).

It is presumed, in absence of contrary showing, that official duties of coroner have been regularly performed, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, raising presumption that official duty has been regularly performed.

9. Coroners ☞11—Coroner held authorized to hold inquest and perform autopsy, where deceased's wife contended death was not natural and inquest had not previously been held (Pen. Code, §§ 1510, 1512).

Where autopsy on body of deceased was performed in another county but no inquest was held, and, upon arrival of body of deceased, wife was dissatisfied with finding of autopsy surgeon and represented that husband's death was caused by terrible fall or violence of some sort and was not result of natural causes, coroner held to have acted within authority in ordering inquest and authorizing autopsy surgeon to proceed in usual manner under Pen. Code, §§ 1510, 1512.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Emma L. Huntly against the Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Company and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Raymond Perry, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent Strange.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent Coroner Leland.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for respondents Insurance Company, Suhr, H. F. Suhr Co., Ophuls, and Newlin.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff appeals from orders of the superior court granting defendants' motions for nonsuit and from the resulting judgment entered in favor of defendants.

The action is one to recover damages from the defendants arising from their alleged acts in jointly causing an autopsy to be performed upon the body of Thomas H. Huntly, deceased, husband of plaintiff herein.

Mr. Huntly died in the county of Los Angeles on March 22, 1926. A partial autopsy was performed upon the body by a surgeon occupying the position of autopsy surgeon in the office of the coroner of Los Angeles county, under the authority of the coroner, but no inquest was held in that county. The body was shortly thereafter shipped to San Francisco, which was the home of the deceased and his wife. Upon its arrival in San Francisco the body was received by representatives of the defendants Suhr and H. F. Suhr Company, and taken to their undertaking establishment.

It appears that the autopsy surgeon at Los Angeles determined that the cause of death was angina pectoris, and the coroner issued a death certificate upon such finding. Apparently dissatisfied with the result of the examination in Los Angeles, the plaintiff asked the defendant Suhr to give her the name of some surgeon who could make a further examination of the body and determine for her benefit the nature of a bruise appearing upon the forehead of the deceased. Mr. Suhr referred plaintiff to defendant Strange, who was then occupying the position of autopsy surgeon under the defendant Leland, who was coroner of the city and county of San Francisco. In an interview with Dr. Strange, plaintiff asked him some questions about the possible effect of a blow on the forehead of the deceased. Dr. Strange asked if there had been an autopsy, and if the people who performed such autopsy had examined the head.

According to the testimony of Dr. Strange, who was called as a witness on behalf of plaintiff, plaintiff asked him to do a private autopsy upon the body of her husband. He asked her what kind of a death it was, and upon being informed that the deceased died while at work and as the result of an accident, Dr. Strange informed her that he did not believe he would have a right to perform a private autopsy on a violent death case, and that plaintiff informed him that she wanted to have the skull opened to find out if there was a fracture, because she thought she was entitled to certain insurance as the result of a death by accident; that she was not satisfied that the cause of death was angina pectoris, and wanted Dr. Strange to open the head to find out if there was a fracture of the skull, and Dr. Strange informed her that the matter should be taken up through the coroner's office.

The matter was reported to the coroner, who was informed, according to the testimony, that a partial autopsy had been performed at Los Angeles. He ordered that an inquest be held, and that an autopsy be performed, and the body was later removed to the office of the coroner, where the autopsy was performed by Dr. Strange, who testified that there had been a prior incision, and that he opened the body by cutting the stitches; that the organs had all previously been cut loose and examined. He found the arteries hardened, and took small samples from the heart, as well as from other organs of the body. He also opened the head and examined the skull to see if there had been a fracture, and examined the brain to ascertain whether there had been a contusion or laceration of the brain. The organs, with the exception of the specimens, were returned to the body. The specimens, which included samples from the brain, heart, lungs, spleen, kidneys, and liver, were placed in a six-ounce bottle, containing a fluid, and were delivered to the defendant Ophuls for microscopic and other examination. Ophuls, who was in the employ of the defendant insurance company, was not present at the autopsy and did not see the body of Mr. Huntly, but received the samples from attendants at the coroner's office.

In her opening brief appellant states that the defendants are sued as joint tort-feasors; the defendant insurance company for having employed the defendant Newlin to employ defendant Ophuls to remove the specimens; the defendant Newlin, who was present at the autopsy, for unlawfully witnessing the mutilation and employing Dr. Ophuls to remove the specimens; defendant Ophuls for an unlawful examination and removal of specimens; defendant H. F. Suhr Company and Fred Suhr for the unlawful removal of the body from their parlors for the purpose of mutilating it; defendant Leland for unlawfully granting permission to perform the mutilation, for permitting the use of his office for an unlawful mutilation, and for permitting the unlawful removal of specimens; and the defendant Strange for performing the mutilation. Plaintiff claims that the autopsy was performed without her consent or knowledge, and that she was not informed of the same until the defendant Newlin informed her of it at his office at some later date.

The plaintiff alleges, in substance, that on the 22d day of March, 1926, the coroner of the county of Los Angeles ordered his assistant autopsy surgeon to perform an autopsy upon the body of Thomas H. Huntly, and said surgeon did on that date perform a legal autopsy upon said body; that the defendants, and each of them, knew on the 24th day of March, 1926, that "the legal and only lawful autopsy" had been performed by and under the authority of the coroner of the county of Los Angeles.

The complaint then alleges as follows:

"X. That on the 24th day of March, 1926, said defendants, with knowledge that a lawful autopsy had been performed upon the body of Thomas H. Huntly, did cause said body of the late Thomas H. Huntly to be removed from the undertaking establishment of H. F. Suhr Company in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to the office of the coroner of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, without the consent, knowledge, or authority of the plaintiff, and did mutilate, desecrate, violate and outrage, and commit an act of irreverence and profanation upon the body of the late Thomas H. Huntly, in that without the permission of the plaintiff, the widow of the said Thomas H. Huntly, and the lawful owner and possessor of said body, and without authority of law, did perform in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, a mutilation, desecration and violation upon said body of said Thomas H. Huntly in this: that said defendants did cause the skull of said Thomas H. Huntly to be opened and the brains removed; the body of said Thomas H. Huntly to be opened and specimens of the heart, lungs, kidneys, liver and spleen to be removed and said specimens of the heart, lungs, kidneys, liver, spleen and brains to be delivered to the defendant William Ophuls, as the agent and representative of the defendant Zurich General Accident and Liability Insurance Company, a corporation.

"XI. That said mutilation, desecration, violation and outraging of the head and the body of her deceased husband was repugnant to the plaintiff, was offensive to and indecently insulted the said plaintiff, and by reason of said acts, and each of them, did cause the plaintiff a shock to her mental and physical equipoise, causing violent agitation of feeling and disturbances of her mind and wrecking her mental and physical equipoise, to her horror, mental anguish and extreme disgust, and disturbing permanently her peace of mind.

"XII. That by reason of the said acts of the defendants aforesaid the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $75,000.00."

The complaint was filed on May 6, 1927.

Upon the trial, and at the close of plaintiff's case, motion for nonsuit was made upon behalf of each of the defendants upon the ground, among others, that the action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the motion was granted as to each of the defendants upon that ground.

Plaintiff contends that the cause of action stated in the complaint falls within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads in part as follows: "Within two years. 1. An action upon a contract, obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument of writing, other than that mentioned in subdivision 2 of section 337 of this code. * * *"

Defendants contend, on the other hand, that the action is one to recover damages for an injury to the person of the plaintiff, caused by the wrongful act of the defendants in mutilating, as alleged, the body of the deceased, and is barred by the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads in part as follows: "Within one year * * * 3. An action for libel, slander, assault, battery, false imprisonment, seduction or for injury to or for the death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another."

The subdivision just quoted has undergone several amendments since its original enactment.

As enacted in 1872, it read "an action for libel, slander, assault, battery or false imprisonment." In 1874 (Amendments to the Codes 1873-74, p. 292, § 34), the words "or seduction" were added, and in 1905 (St. 1905, p. 232), there were added the words "or for injury to or for the death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another."

The primary question for consideration is the nature of the right upon which the plaintiff bases her cause of action.

[1] In the absence of statutory provision, there is no property in a dead body. Enos v. Snyder, 131 Cal. 68, 63 P. 170, 53 L. R. A. 221, 82 Am. St. Rep. 330.

Various statutes have been enacted for the purpose of enforcing, as well as protecting, the duties which we owe to the bodies of the dead, as well as the public welfare and health. Among them is section 294 of the Penal Code, which provided at the time of the incident under examination as follows: "The person charged by law with the duty of burying the body of a deceased person is entitled to the custody of such body for the purpose of burying it; except that in the case in which an inquest is required by law to be held upon a dead body by a coroner, such coroner is entitled to its custody until such inquest has been completed."

The reservations and safeguards which have been placed around the right of possession by the relatives to the body of a deceased person have caused confusion in some cases with the right of ownership, and have led to the use of the expression "quasi property." Numerous authorities, however, from earliest times to the present, support the conclusion of the courts of this state that there can be no ownership in a human body after death. An interesting discussion of the law, civil, common, and ecclesiastical, is found in the case of Pierce v. Proprietors of Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I. 227, 242 (14 Am. Rep. 667). Therein the court said: "Although, as we have said, the body is not property in the usually recognized sense of the word, yet we may consider it as a sort of quasi property, to which certain persons may have rights, as they have duties to perform towards it arising out of our common humanity. But the person having charge of it cannot be considered as the owner of it in any sense whatever; he holds it only as a sacred trust for the benefit of all who may from family or friendship have an interest in it, and we think that a court of equity may well regulate it as such, and change the custody if improperly managed."

In the case of Darcy v. Presbyterian Hospital, 202 N. Y. 259, 95 N. E. 695, 696, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1238, the Court of Appeals of New York said: "The most elaborate consideration of the question in the courts of this country appears in the case of Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 50 N. W. 238, 14 L. R. A. 85, 28 Am. St. Rep. 370, in which, after an examination of the authorities both in this country and in England, the conclusion is reached that, while no action can be maintained by the executor or administrator upon the theory of any property right in a decedent's body, the right to the possession of a dead body for the purpose of preservation and burial belongs to the surviving husband or wife or next of kin, in the absence of any testamentary disposition; and this right the law will recognize and protect from any unlawful mutilation of remains by awarding damages for injury to the feelings and mental suffering resulting from the wrongful acts, although no pecuniary damage is alleged or proved. * * *

In the case of Beaulieu v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 103 Minn. 47, 52, 114 N. W. 353, 355 (19 L. R. A. [N. S.] 564, 14 Ann. Cas. 462) the court said: "The rule laid down in the Larson Case expresses the modern view of the question, and extends a remedy where otherwise none would exist. There being no property in dead bodies, and the wrong complained of being only the invasion of an intangible legal right, no actual damages for the wrongful mutilation of the body can be recovered, and the courts award solatium for the bereavement of the next of kin as the only appropriate relief. Without the element of mental distress, the action would be impotent of results and of no significance or value as a remedy for the tortious violation of the legal right of possession and preservation."

In the case of Hasselbach v. Mt. Sinai Hospital, 173 App. Div. 89, 159 N. Y. S. 376, the court held that it is well settled that there are no property rights in the ordinary commercial sense in a dead body, and the damages allowed to be recovered for its mutilation are never awarded as a recompense for the injury done to the body as a piece of property.

[2] Having come to the conclusion that there is no ownership in the body of a deceased human being, the next question for determination is the nature of the wrong for which damages are being sought in this action.

It is plaintiff's contention that her right to maintain an action arose out of the mutilation of the body, and that "the measure of damages is the mental suffering. Therefore, the damages for mental suffering are not the gist of the cause of action."

The injury upon which plaintiff bases her cause of action was an injury to her person.

In the case of Sloane v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 111 Cal. 668, 44 P. 320, 322, 32 L. R. A. 193, the court said: "The real question presented by the objections and exceptions of the appellant is whether the subsequent nervous disturbance of the plaintiff was a suffering of the body or of the mind. The interdependence of the mind and body is in many respects so close that it is impossible to distinguish their respective influence upon each other. It must be conceded that a nervous shock or paroxysm, or a disturbance of the nervous system, is distinct from mental anguish, and falls within the physiological, rather than the psychological, branch of the human organism. It is a matter of general knowledge that an attack of sudden fright, or an exposure to imminent peril, has produced in individuals a complete change in their nervous system, and rendered one who was physically strong and vigorous weak and timid. Such a result must be regarded as an injury to the body rather than to the mind, even though the mind be at the same time injuriously affected. Whatever may be the influence by which the nervous system is affected, its action under that influence is entirely distinct from the mental process which is set in motion by the brain. The nerves and nerve centers of the body are a part of the physical system, and are not only susceptible of lesion from external causes, but are also liable to be weakened and destroyed from causes primarily acting upon the mind. If these nerves, or the entire nervous system, are thus affected, there is a physical injury thereby produced; and, if the primal cause of this injury is tortious, it is immaterial whether it is direct, as by a blow, or indirect, through some action upon the mind."

The language of that opinion was expressly approved in Lindley v. Knowlton, 179 Cal. 298, 176 P. 440.

In the case of Johnson v. Sampson, 167 Minn. 203, 208 N. W. 814, 46 A. L. R. 772, the court had under consideration an action in which false charges of unchastity had been made against a school girl 15 years of age, resulting in alleged mental and bodily injuries. In its discussion of the case, the court said: "On the whole we see no good reason why a wrongful invasion of a legal right, causing an injury to the body or mind which reputable physicians recognize and can trace with reasonable certainty to the act as its true cause, should not give rise to a right of action against the wrongdoer, although there was no visible hurt at the time of the act complained of."

In the case of Morton v. Western Union Tel. Co., 130 N. C. 299, 41 S. E. 484, 485, the court, in discussing the meaning of the phrase "or other injury to the person," said: "In law the word 'person' does not simply mean the physical body, for, if it did, it would apply equally to a corpse. It means a living person, composed of body and soul. Therefore any mental injury is necessarily an injury to the person. Personal injuries may be either bodily or mental, but, whether one or the other, they infringe upon the rights of the person, and not of property. A learned author has said that: 'The mind is no less a part of the person than the body, and the sufferings of the former are sometimes more acute and lasting than those of the latter. Indeed, the sufferings of each frequently, if not usually, act reciprocally upon the other.'"

The allegations of injury to the plaintiff, as set forth in the complaint, have already been stated. The gravamen of the cause of action, as alleged, was the shock to the plaintiff, mental and physical. Without such injury to her, personally, there could have been no cause of action for the reasons heretofore discussed. In support of her case, the plaintiff introduced testimony as to her physical and mental condition as indicated by insomnia, hysteria, and nervousness.

Her physician testified that she was suffering from "exhaustion psychosis," which he defined as a lowered condition of her nervous and physical system, a low blood pressure, a lowered mental condition, a slow power of concentration, a tardy memory, general weakness of her nervous system, and as an anemia due to an interference of the nervous system that controls the blood mechanism and blood nutrition.

We think that the inescapable conclusion from the allegations of the complaint, and from the testimony offered on behalf of plaintiff, must be that the injury that was inflicted was to the person of the plaintiff, as a result of the acts of the defendants.

[3] It is not necessary that an act of force and violence, or a battery, be inflicted upon the plaintiff in order to bring the case within the meaning of subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code.

In the case of Basler v. Sacramento, etc., Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 33, 134 P. 993, the plaintiff's wife sustained a personal injury by reason of the negligence of the defendant, and the plaintiff sued for the loss of his wife's services and for the expense incurred in her medical care.

[4] The court held that the action was barred under the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 340 because it was one for personal injuries and not upon an obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument in writing. In the discussion of the case at page 36 of 166 Cal. (134 P. 994), the court said:

"It has been held that the word 'for' means 'by reason of,' 'because of,' and 'on account of,' and that a statute prescribing a limitation on 'actions for injury to the person * * * caused by negligence' should be interpreted to mean 'actions "by reason of" or "because of," or "on account of" injuries to the person caused by negligence,' Sharkey v. Skilton, 83 Conn. 503, 77 A. 952. Applying this rule to our own statute, we must hold that the language of section 340 quoted above refers to actions for damages 'on account of' personal injuries. In Sharkey v. Skilton, supra, the plaintiff was the husband of the injured woman, and there, as here, counsel sought to make a distinction between the direct injury to the wife and the indirect damage and loss to the husband, but the court held that both harmful results had their efficient cause in the accident to her, and that therefore the same statute of limitations applied to actions in which the wife was a party, and to those in which the husband sued alone because of his relative rights.

"Maxson v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R. R. Co., 112 N. Y. 560, 20 N. E. 544, was a case similar to this, in which the husband sued for the loss of his wife's services because of injuries received by her on account of the defendant's negligence. It was held that his cause of action was governed by the statute prescribing the time within which an action might be commenced for a 'personal injury, resulting from negligence.'

"We see no escape from the reasoning of the foregoing authorities."

It is unnecessary to cite numerous cases in other jurisdictions which are in accord with the conclusion of our courts that there need be no physical contact with the body of a person to constitute a cause of action for personal injury. When a bodily injury occurs, the law considers the action as one for personal injuries, regardless of the nature of the breach of duty. It adopts the nature of the damage as the test, and not the nature of the breach.

In the case of Groff v. Du Bois, 57 Cal. App. 343, 207 P. 59, which was an action for damages for an injury alleged to have been suffered by plaintiffs as the result of an unlawful and malicious attempt by the defendants to eject them from certain premises of which they were in lawful and peaceful possession, and which it was alleged resulted in one of the plaintiffs suffering a miscarriage, the court held that the action was one brought for injury to the person, and should have been commenced within one year. In accord are Krebenios v. Lindauer, 175 Cal. 431, 166 P. 17; Harding v. Liberty Hospital Corp., 177 Cal. 520, 171 P. 98.

[5] We are of the opinion that by the amendment to subdivision 3 of section 340 introducing the clause "or for injury to or the death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another," it was intended to embrace therein all infringements of personal rights as distinguished from property rights.

In this case plaintiff's cause of action arose solely from her relationship to deceased, and the effect the mutilation of his body had upon her, personally. If there had been an estrangement between herself and her husband, or an absence of affection, or such an attitude of mind that the alleged desecration occasioned no anguish or distress or injury, then the plaintiff would have had no cause of action. As pointed out by respondents, the right which she sought to exercise in caring for her husband's body in death was one strictly personal to her, and which could not have been exercised by others.

[6] The objection has also been made that the trial court erred in granting a motion for nonsuit against the defendant Leland, which was made upon the additional ground that the evidence introduced failed to show any carelessness or negligence upon the part of that defendant, or any breach of duty upon his part owing to the plaintiff.

Section 1510 of the Penal Code provides that: "When a coroner is informed that a person has been killed, or has committed suicide, or has suddenly died under such circumstances as to afford a reasonable ground to suspect that his death has been occasioned by the act of another by criminal means, he must go to the place where the body is * * * and summon not less than nine nor more than fifteen persons, qualified by law to serve as jurors, to appear before him forthwith, at the place where the body of deceased is, to inquire into the cause of the death."

Section 1512 provides that the coroner "may summon a surgeon or physician to inspect the body, or hold a post-mortem examination thereon, or a chemist to make an analysis of the stomach or the tissues of the deceased and give a professional opinion as to the cause of the death."

If the coroner has reasonable ground to suspect that the death or killing of a person was sudden or unusual and of such a nature as to indicate the possibility of death by the hand of the deceased, or through the instrumentality of some other person, he has authority to hold an inquest. He has latitude in determining whether the case falls within section 1510 of the Penal Code. He may act upon information, and it should not be held that simply because at the conclusion of an inquest it has been determined that the deceased died a natural death, he had no right, therefore, to hold an inquest. Morgan v. County of San Diego, 3 Cal. App. 454, 86 P. 720.

[7] A coroner may order an autopsy when, in his judgment, that is the appropriate means of ascertaining the cause of death, and this he may do without the consent of the family of the deceased. Young v. College of Physicians & Surgeons, 81 Md. 358, 32 A. 177, 31 L. R. A. 540.

In the case of People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452, at page 458, the court said: "At common law, as well as under the statute of Edward I, and our statute concerning coroners, which are but declaratory of the common law, the coroner holding an inquest super visum corporis is in the performance of functions judicial in their character (R. v. White, 3 E. & E. R. 144; Rep. Const. Ct. So. Ca. 231; 32 Mis. R. 375); so distinctly judicial that he is protected under the principles which protect judicial officers from responsibility in a civil action brought by a private person. (Garnett v. Ferrand, 6 Barn. & Cress. 611)."

[8] It is presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that an official duty has been regularly performed. Morgan v. County of San Diego, supra; Code Civ. Proc. § 1963.

[9] The evidence offered by plaintiff shows that no inquest was held in Los Angeles county. The performance of an autopsy was not the holding of an inquest. It also shows that upon the arrival of the body in San Francisco, plaintiff was dissatisfied with the findings of the autopsy surgeon in Los Angeles; that she represented that her husband's death was sudden; that he had had a "terrible fall." She further expressed the idea that his death had been occasioned by violence of some sort and was not the result of natural causes. Under the circumstances, the body being within the city and county of San Francisco, and within the jurisdiction of the defendant Leland, and he having been informed that no inquest had been held in the county of Los Angeles, and there being a question as to the cause of death as expressed by the plaintiff, the coroner acted within his authority in ordering an inquest held, and in authorizing his autopsy surgeon to proceed in the usual manner.

The decision of the question as to whether an inquest is necessary rests in the sound discretion of the coroner, and there is nothing in the record to counteract the presumption that he regularly performed his duty as coroner, and there was no breach of any duty which he owed to the plaintiff.

It is our opinion that the motions for non-suit, based upon the ground that the cause of action was barred within one year, were properly granted; and that the motion for non-suit as to the defendant Leland, based upon the ground that the evidence introduced in the case failed to show any carelessness or negligence on the part of the defendant Leland, or any breach of duty on the part of such defendant owing to plaintiff, was also properly granted. We deem it unnecessary to discuss the other objections made by plaintiff to the judgment entered herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WILSON. (Cr. 1800.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Aug. 23, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 829(7)—Refusal of instruction on alibi defense to robbery charge, notwithstanding instructions on burden of proof and presumption of innocence, held prejudicial error (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1096, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, $\S$ 1).

In prosecution for robbery, refusal of requested instruction on defense of alibi, notwithstanding court had already instructed on burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt of each and every material fact relevant to issue and had instructed on presumption of innocence, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1096, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, $\S$ 1, held prejudicial error.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 829(18)—Statute authorizing court to decline further instruction on reasonable doubt held inapplicable to defense from which reasonable doubt of guilt may be inferred (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1096, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, $\S$ 1, and $\S$ 1096a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039, $\S$ 2).

Pen. Code, $\S$ 1096a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039, $\S$ 2, providing that, in charging jury, court may read section 1096, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, $\S$ 1, on presumption of innocence, and no further instruction on subject of presumption of innocence or defining reasonable doubt need be given, held to refer merely to right of trial court to refuse offered instruction by which reasonable doubt is further defined, and has no application to instruction covering a defense as shown by evidence, such as alibi, from which reasonable doubt of guilt may be inferred.

York, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Albert Wilson was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Reversed.

George A. Glover and Peter J. Youngdahl, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. From a judgment following his conviction on each of two counts in an information wherein he was charged with the commission of the crime of robbery, and from an order by which his motion for a new trial was denied, defendant has appealed to this court.

Although on the trial of the action defendant was identified by the sole victim in each of the robberies as the person who committed the crime, by the testimony of each of several apparently reputable witnesses, it was made to appear that, at the time when such robbery was committed, defendant could not have been present thereat; in other words, disregarding any question of the credibility of such witnesses, a complete and perfect alibi for defendant was established by the evidence presented by him. After instructing the jury as to the duty of the prosecution to establish beyond a reasonable doubt "each and every material fact relevant to the issue" and that in meeting such evidence the defendant was only required to present sufficient evidence to raise in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to the truth of any such material fact, the trial court gave to the jury the time-honored instruction set forth in section 1096 of the Penal Code, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, $\S$ 1, as follows:

"A defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal, but the effect of this presumption is only to place upon the state the burden of proving him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Reasonable doubt is defined as follows: 'It is not a mere possible doubt; because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case, which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they can not say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge.'"

[1] The appeal herein is predicated upon the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury certain instructions requested by defendant which related to the law as applied to the evidence affecting the alibi of defendant. Such requested instructions were to the effect that, if from the evidence the jury believed "that the defendant was not present at the time it was alleged or proven that the crime was committed, and therefore could not have committed the crime charged in the information, and did not aid or abet in its commission," the verdict should be "not guilty." The reply of the respondent to such claim is that, since the trial court fully instructed the jury with reference to the doctrine of reasonable doubt, as well as to the bounden duty of the prosecution to establish beyond a reasonable doubt "each and every fact relevant to the issue," and since the presence of defendant at the place where and at the time when the robbery was committed was one of such necessary or essential facts, it should follow that the point presented by the requested instructions by defendant was fully covered by the instruction given, and consequently that the trial court committed no error in refusing to give either of the several instructions requested by defendant.

In each of the cases of People v. Fong Ah Sing, 64 Cal. 253, 28 P. 233, and People v. Wong Loung, 159 Cal. 520, 114 P. 829, the right of a defendant to have given to the jury a special instruction of the nature of that here under consideration is clearly recognized. The situation in each of the cases of People v. Visconti, 31 Cal. App. 169, 160 P. 410, 411, and People v. Vasquez (Cal. App.) 269 P. 549, was nearly identical with that in the instant case; and the ruling in each of such cases was that by the refusal of the trial court to give the requested instruction the defendant was prejudiced in his substantial rights. The only authorities to which attention has been directed and which might be considered as indicating a principle at variance with the rule announced in the cases cited are distinguished in the case of People v. Vasquez, supra.

[2] Notwithstanding the certainty of expression in the language of the Supreme Court and the District Court of Appeal to the effect that a defendant is entitled to a special instruction covering a defense of alibi, respondent particularly urges that, by reason of the provision contained in section 1096a of the Penal Code (adopted in 1927 [St. 1927, p. 1039, & 2]), no error was committed by the trial court in refusing to give to the jury either of the instructions requested by defendant. The statute on which reliance is thus placed reads as follows:

"In charging a jury, the court may read to the jury section 1096 of this code, and no further instruction on the subject of the presumption of innocence or defining reasonable doubt need be given."

So far as is here material, it may be noted that, having given to the jury an instruction in the language of section 1096 of the Penal Code, the trial court is authorized to decline to give to the jury any "further instruction * * * defining reasonable doubt. * * *" One of the instructions requested by defendant and refused by the trial court was as follows:

"You are instructed that if the defendant was at some other place at the time of it is alleged or proven that the crime was committed, it is what in law is called an alibi. When satisfactorily proven it is a good defense in law. Whether or not an alibi was proven and established to your satisfaction in this case, is a fact for you to decide from all the evidence introduced before you and if you believe that the defendant was not present at the time it was alleged or proven that the crime was committed, and therefore could not have committed the crime, charged in the information, and did not aid or abet in its commission, then you should find him not guilty."

Respondent refers to certain authorities, to wit, People v. Lloyd (Cal. App.) 275 P. 1010, 1012; People v. Cohen (Cal. App.) 270 P. 377; People v. Knocke (Cal. App.) 270 P. 468; People v. Leddy (Cal. App.) 273 P. 110; People v. Williams (Cal. App.) 273 P. 1087, as indicating a ruling to the effect that, whenever an instruction embodying the rule of law as contained in section 1096 of the Penal Code is given to the jury, no other instruction relating to the subject of reasonable doubt need be given to the jury. A consideration of the authorities just cited discloses the fact that none of them is directly applicable to the situation here presented. They are either directed toward "the subject of the presumption of innocence," or to the definition of reasonable doubt, and each of them is readily distinguishable from the instructions requested herein by defendant. It is manifest that a vast difference might exist between an instruction by which reasonable doubt would be defined and one in which might be stated the law with reference to some fact from which the jury would be authorized to form a conclusion as to whether a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant would follow. The language of the statute merely refers to the right of the trial court to refuse an offered instruction by which the doctrine of reasonable doubt is further defined; and has no application to an instruction covering a defense as shown by the evidence in the case from which reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant may be inferred. In other words, without infringing in any manner on the provision of the statute by attempting to further define reasonable doubt, a defendant would still have the right to direct attention to the evidence from a consideration of which a reasonable doubt of his guilt might be engendered. It is manifest that, so far as an instruction to the jury covering the defense of alibi is concerned, the right of a defendant thereto is governed by the authorities to which reference has been had herein, and that such right is unaffected by the provisions of section 1096a of the Penal Code.

In the instant case, it appearing that by the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury the instructions relating to the claimed alibi of defendant he has been prejudiced in his substantial rights, it follows that the Judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial should be reversed. It is so ordered.

I concur: CONREY, P. J.

YORK, J. I dissent. I believe that the instructions refused were too involved to be given to the jury.

In re IZEDORIO'S ESTATE.*

SILVA et al. v. BELLO et al.

(Civ. 6862.)

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California. Aug. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 30, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 28, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨39—Title of intestate's realty vests in heirs on his death, subject to administration and sale only to pay expenses and debts.

When owner dies intestate, title to realty vests immediately in his heirs subject to administration, and cannot be sold or disposed of unless it is necessary to pay expenses of administration and claims of creditors.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨404—Proceeds of sale of decedent's homestead, after payment of funeral and administration expenses, held distributable to heirs exempt from creditors' claims (Civ. Code, § 1265; Code Civ. Proc. § 1485).

Under Civ. Code § 1265, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1485, proceeds of sale of decedent's homestead, after payment of funeral and administration expenses, should be considered as realty and not personal property, distributable to decedent's heirs, exempt from claims of creditors, as against contention that, because purchaser of homestead at probate sale took property free and clear of debts and claims arising prior to decedent's death, proceeds were not exempt, and heirs had no rights superior to those of creditors.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨404—Failure of heirs to object to sale of homestead to pay funeral and administration expenses did not waive their rights to balance of proceeds (Civ. Code, § 1265; Code Civ. Proc. § 1485).

Where it was necessary to sell intestate decedent's realty to pay funeral and administration expenses, failure of heirs to object to sale did not waive rights of heirs to have balance of proceeds distributed to them exempt from creditors' claims under Civ. Code, § 1265, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1485, since objection would have availed them nothing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Final accounting of Anna I. Silva, as administratrix of the estate of Antonio Izedorio, also known as Antonio Izedorio Betten-court and Antonio Izidorio, deceased, involving claim of Manuel R. Silva, a creditor, and a petition for distribution, to which account Amelia Bello and others, heirs at law of decedent, filed exceptions. From a decree settling the account and directing distribution, administratrix and claimant appeal. Affirmed.

F. I. Lemos, of Hayward, for appellant Anna I. Silva as administratrix.

C. W. White, of Hayward, for appellant Manuel R. Silva, a creditor.

E. H. Christian, of Oakland, for respondent Mary Fernandez.

Jo. Lawrence and Richard Liebman, both of Oakland, for other respondents.

DEASY, Justice pro tem. On the 30th day of October, 1909, Antonio Izedorio, resided with his wife and family in a dwelling house situated upon a piece of real property in the city of Hayward. The property was community property, and on said date said Antonio Izedorio duly executed a declaration of homestead thereon, which was thereafter duly recorded in the office of the recorder of Alameda county, Cal. No abandonment of said homestead was ever made or recorded, and said real property belonged to said Antonio Izedorio and his wife as a homestead until her death, some time in 1925. Upon his wife's death said Antonio Izedorio became the successor to the homestead and the sole owner of the property. By appropriate proceedings the title was declared vested in him by the superior court, such proceedings having taken place after his death.

On the 6th day of December, 1927, said Antonio Izedorio died intestate, leaving as his heirs at law five children, all of whom were over the age of 21 years. The only estate left by said decedent was the piece of property above referred to.

On the 23d day of January, 1928, after due proceedings, one of his daughters, Anna I. Silva, was appointed administratrix of the estate of said decedent by order of the superior court of the county of Alameda, and thereafter she duly qualified and is still such administratrix. She caused notice to creditors to be given as required by law, and the following claims were presented and were allowed by the administratrix and by the court:

P. F. Kearny, M. D., services in last illness	$ 110 00
Manuel R. Silva, for care of deceased	1,080 00
Manuel R. Silva, board and lodging	300 00
Mary Correia, services as nurse	60 00
Lottie Vieira, services as nurse	12 00
Sorenson Bros., funeral expenses	285 70
Rev. J. Viladomat, funeral services	25 50

Making a total of..... $1,873 20

The administratrix received no money or personal property belonging to said estate, and in order to pay the expenses of administration and the claims that had been filed she sold the real property above referred to.

All of the heirs at law of said decedent received notice of the proceedings relative to said sale, and none of them made any objection thereto. The sale was confirmed by the court and the sum of $3,400 was received by the administratrix. She thereafter filed her first and final account, which showed a balance in her hands of $1,702.27, and also stated that none of the claims against the estate heretofore mentioned had been paid. With the account the administratrix filed a report asking that the court make an order for the payment of said claims, and she also filed a petition for distribution asking that the court make its order bringing the administration of said estate to a close, and discharging her as such administratrix.

Thereafter exceptions to said account were filed by Amelia Bello, Izedorio V. Izedorio, Manuel Izedorio, and Mary Fernandez, the remaining four heirs at law of said decedent. The items excepted to were the sum of $190 paid for a monument, and all of the claims which had been presented. The principal ground of objection stated was that the whole of the property belonging to said estate was subject to a homestead exemption, by reason of the declaration of homestead made by said Antonio Izedorio on October 30, 1909.

The court heard the matter of the settlement of said final account and the exceptions thereto, and ordered the administratrix to pay the item of $190 for the monument, and the claim of Sorenson Bros. for funeral expenses amounting to $285.50, and the claim of Rev. J. Viladomat for funeral services amounting to $25.50.

Thereafter the administratrix filed a supplemental account showing that said amounts had been paid, and that there was a residue in her hands of $1,391.07. Manuel R. Silva, one of the creditors, also filed a petition asking for an order directing the administratrix to pay to him the amount of his two claims. To this petition the heirs at law, other than Anna I. Silva, filed written objections upon the ground that the property was subject to a homestead exemption as claimed in their exceptions to the account of the administratrix.

After a further hearing the trial court sustained the objections of the heirs, denied the prayer of the administratrix for a settlement of her account, denied the prayer of the petition of Manuel R. Silva, and directed that the balance of said estate in the hands of the administratrix, to wit, $1,391.07, be divided share and share alike amongst the five heirs at law of said Antonio Izedorio. A decree of settlement of account and final distribution to that effect was subsequently entered by the superior court, and from that decree the administratrix and said Manuel R. Silva have appealed. Both appeals were argued and submitted as one because they involve the same points.

[1, 2] The question presented is: Does the homestead exemption extend to the proceeds of the sale remaining after the expenses of administration and the funeral expenses had been paid? This question has not been directly passed upon by the courts of this state, but there are many well-settled principles of law that we can rely upon for its solution.

Had the property not been sold at probate sale, the heirs at law would have taken it free and clear of all claims and demands of creditors which arose prior to the death of the decedent. Estate of Fath, 132 Cal. 609, 64 P. 995; Estate of Muntz, 69 Cal. App. 404, 231 P. 371. Appellants concede that these two cases correctly state the law, but they seek to distinguish them from the case at bar by reason of the sale of the property and its conversion into money. It is well settled that when the owner of real property dies intestate the title to the property vests immediately in his heirs, subject to administration. The property cannot be sold or disposed of, except the necessity should arise which would compel a sale to pay the expenses of administration and the claims of creditors. In this case the record shows that it was necessary to sell the real property in order to pay the funeral expenses and the expenses of administration. The only power which the court had to confirm the sale arose out of that necessity. Estate of Packer, 125 Cal. 396, 58 P. 59, 73 Am. St. Rep. 58. If the real estate were not exempted as a homestead, the proceeds of the sale could be used to pay any of the claims. But where the homestead exemption exists, the heirs cannot be deprived of their vested rights in the real property to pay any claims that arose prior to the death of the owner of the homestead. Section 1265, Civ. Code; section 1485, Code Civ. Proc. Therefore, after the funeral expenses and the expenses of administration have been paid out of the proceeds of the sale of a homestead, the balance of funds in the hands of the administratrix should be considered, not as personal, but as real property, and in such case the heirs would be entitled to have it distributed to them. Estate of Hills, 176 Cal. 232, 168 P. 20.

Appellants contend, however, that under the provisions of section 1485, Code of Civil Procedure, the purchaser at the probate sale took the property free and clear of all debts and claims arising prior to the death of the decedent, and that therefore the proceeds of the sale were not exempt, and the heirs had no rights superior to those of the creditors.

There is neither principle nor authority to sustain this contention. The purpose of the homestead exemption is to protect the "family," or the "heirs" of the declarant, and that purpose would be defeated, and the evident intent of the law set aside, if the protection were denied to the heirs and extended to a stranger, merely because he became a purchaser at a probate sale.

For these reasons we conclude that the proceeds of the probate sale of the land in question in this case, after deducting the funeral expenses and the expenses of administration, were exempted from the claims of the other creditors by reason of the homestead declaration, and that the court correctly distributed the residue to the heirs of Antonio Izedorio, deceased.

[3] Appellants make the further contention that by failing to object to the sale of the real property the heirs have waived such rights as they might otherwise have had under the provisions of section 1265, Civil Code, and section 1485, Code of Civil Procedure. It seems to follow clearly, however, from what has already been said, that no question of waiver can arise in this case. It was necessary to sell the real property in order to pay the funeral expenses and expenses of administration. Had the heirs objected, it would have availed them nothing, as the court was in duty bound to confirm the sale so that money could be obtained for these purposes. The heirs should certainly not be compelled to do a vain and idle act, under the penalty of forfeiting their vested rights to the property. The failure to object to the sale did not, therefore, constitute any waiver by them.

We do not find any error in the record, and the decree appealed from is affirmed.

HOWLAND v. LAMPTON, County Clerk, etc.
(Civ. 6699.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Aug. 28, 1929.

Execution §158(2)—Where sufficient undertaking to stay execution pending appeal was given before execution of judgment, mandamus requiring clerk to issue execution was discharged.

Where sureties on defendant's undertaking to stay execution of judgment pending appeal failed to justify whereupon new undertaking was filed which was insufficient in form, after which defendant filed third undertaking, which was apparently sufficient, before execution of order directing execution to issue, plaintiff was not entitled to mandamus requiring clerk to issue execution on judgment, since the Code of Civil Procedure fixes no time within which undertaking to stay execution is required to be filed and therefore undertaking may be given any time before execution of judgment.

Application by R. S. Howland for writ of mandamus prayed to be directed to L. E. Lampton, County Clerk and Clerk of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, requiring him to issue execution upon a certain judgment. Writ discharged.

Salisbury & McNeil, of Los Angeles, and M. W. Conkling, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Crail, Shutt, Penprase & Miller, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. So far as concerns a decision on the application herein for a writ of mandate, the essential facts are that in an action pending in the superior court judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, R. S. Howland, and against the defendant, Sallie O. Scott. An appeal was taken by defendant from the judgment rendered against her, and an undertaking to stay execution of the judgment was duly filed. The sureties on the undertaking failed to justify. Thereafter a new undertaking was filed. In due course an objection by the plaintiff to the effect that said second undertaking was insufficient in form was sustained by the trial court. Plaintiff refused to stipulate that a third undertaking might be supplied by the defendant in which the defects appearing in the second undertaking would be corrected; and on the ground of lack of jurisdiction in the premises the trial court refused to grant an order by which the defendant would be permitted to make the necessary correction in the undertaking. At the same time the trial court ordered execution to issue on the judgment. Before such order could be executed, defendant appealed therefrom; and also filed a third undertaking to stay execution of the judgment, which undertaking is alleged by respondent herein to be sufficient in form, and which fact is not denied by the petitioner.

The purpose of the petition herein is to secure a writ of mandate to compel the clerk of the lower court to issue execution on the judgment.

Without consideration of the effect on the stay of execution of the appeal by the defendant in the action from the order of the trial court directing execution to issue, from a reading of the opinion in the case of Bradley Co. v. Mulcrevy, 166 Cal. 325, 136 P. 60, 61, it is apparent that petitioner is not entitled to the writ for which he prays. In that case, in which the situation was substantially identical in principle with the facts in the instant case, among other things, the court said: "The Code of Civil Procedure fixes no time within which an undertaking to stay execution must be filed. The undertaking may be given at any time before execution of the judgment. Hill v. Finnigan, 54 Cal. 493. The right to stay execution by the filing of a stay-bond had not, therefore, expired by limitation of time when the second bond was filed. * * * But the situation is entirely different where the original bond fails, in substantial respects, to comply with the form required by statute. Such bond is not effective to stay the execution at all. The respondent has the right to enforce execution at once, and his right is of course not impaired by the fact that he may have instituted proceedings for the justification of sureties. We have, then, the case of an appellant who has filed a paper which is entirely void as an undertaking to stay execution. The position of both parties is just the same as it would be if no bond had been filed. The fair conclusion is that a second bond, sufficient in form, may be filed at any time before the judgment has been enforced, as it unquestionably could be if no steps had theretofore been taken to obtain a stay."

The writ is discharged.

WRIGHT v. SHOENHAIR. (Civ. 3762.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 29, 1929.

1. Bills and notes  92(1)—Note for price of land, title to which was conveyed to maker, had sufficient consideration.

Where one to whom title to land was transferred executed note in favor of vendor, note was supported by sufficient consideration.

2. Bills and notes  176—Indorsement of part interest in note was invalid (Civ. Code,   3113).

Assignment or indorsement of part interest in note, under Civ. Code,   3113, was invalid, and conveyed no interest to assignee; statute requiring that an indorsement must be of entire instrument.

3. Evidence  441(11)—Defense that note sued on was payable from funds received from maker of another note held not available to maker, where no fraud or mistake was alleged or proven.

Where no fraud or mistake was alleged in answer, or proven or attempted to be proven at trial of action on note, defense that note was executed and delivered with understanding that it should be paid out of funds received from maker of another note was not available to maker of note sued on.

4. Evidence  441(11)—Testimony of oral agreement with payee of note sued on as to its payment held inadmissible, where fraud or mistake was not shown.

In action on note, objection to testimony given by defendant maker in support of alleged oral agreement with payee that note was to be paid out of funds received from maker of another note in payment thereof should have been sustained, where no fraud or mistake was alleged or proven.

5. Bills and notes  443(3)—Assignee of note could sue thereon in own name, despite death of payee after assignment (Civ. Code,   3132).

Where payee of note before his death assigned and delivered it to plaintiff suing thereon, plaintiff's right to proceed to collect note was not affected in any way by death of payee, and plaintiff had right to sue thereon in his own name, and payment to him discharged note, as provided by Civ. Code,   3132.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by F. J. Wright against George J. Shoenhair. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank W. Wheeler and Charles W. Hackler, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, and Leonard Wright and Turrentine & Wright, all of San Diego, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant, George J. Shoenhair, from a judgment entered against him upon a promissory note for $6,000, together with interest, costs, and attorney's fees.

In the spring of 1921 appellant, George J. Shoenhair, was in Atlantic, Iowa, trying to negotiate an exchange of several pieces of land owned by him in California, with a man name Chunning, for lands and securities in North Dakota. While in Iowa, appellant met Peter Hopley, an old acquaintance, who owned 160 acres of land in Merced county, California, adjoining a tract of land owned by appellant. Peter Hopley, at the request of appellant, conveyed his property in California to appellant, and in October, 1921, appellant succeeded in consummating a deal by which he exchanged his California properties and those belonging to Peter Hopley for lands and securities in the state of North Dakota. All the lands and securities received in consideration for the exchange were taken in the name of appellant. Among the securities received by appellant was a note for $14,049.87, given by one B. E. Latham, and secured by a mortgage on real property in the state of North Dakota. Six thousand dollars was agreed upon between appellant and Peter Hopley as the value of Peter Hopley's equity in his California land. To pay Peter Hopley this $6,000, appellant indorsed on the back of the Latham note, of $14,049.87, the following: "I hereby assign a $6,000 interest in the within note to Peter Hopley. [Signed] Geo. J. Shoenhair." This arrangement was not satisfactory to Peter Hopley. Thereafter, and on January 18, 1922, appellant made, executed, and delivered to Peter Hopley a promissory note for $6,000, due three years after date, with interest at 7 per cent., payable annually, which is the note sued upon in this action. Thereafter, and on March 14, 1924, Peter Hopley assigned and delivered said note to F. J. Wright, the plaintiff and respondent herein. No part of said note, or interest thereon, was ever paid, and this action was commenced to collect said note and interest on March 3, 1925. Peter Hopley died before this case was tried.

[1] Appellant contends that there was an entire want of consideration for this $6,000 note. How appellant can seriously urge this contention we are unable to understand. Peter Hopley transferred to appellant title to 160 acres of land in Merced, California, valued at $6,000, and received this note and the purported indorsement of a part of the Latham note in payment therefor. Neither Hopley in his lifetime, nor respondent, nor any one else, since his death, has ever received one cent, either for the land conveyed to appellant, or on account of the $6,000 note, or on account of the Latham note.

[2] Furthermore, this so-called assignment or indorsement of the $6,000 interest in the Latham note is invalid, and conveyed no interest to Peter Hopley. Section 3113, Civ. Code.

Appellant next contends that said note was made, executed, and delivered upon the condition, and for the specific purpose, set forth in the answer of appellant. This contention is equally without merit. In appellant's answer it is alleged: "That the said note was executed and delivered by this defendant to the said Peter Hopley, with the statement, agreement, and understanding that the same should be paid out of funds received by this defendant from the said B. E. Latham in payment of his note so held by Peter Hopley, and not otherwise. * * * That said note of B. E. Latham to R. L. Chunning has not been paid, nor has any part or portion thereof been paid, and because of these facts the note of this defendant to the said Peter Hopley has not become due, nor has any part or portion thereof become due and payable."

The trial court made the following finding, which is amply supported by the evidence, to wit: "The court further finds that said six thousand dollar ($6,000.00) note was not to be paid by the defendant out of funds derived from the note known as the B. E. Latham note, but that the said promissory note became due and payable according to its terms, and at all times since the making, execution, and delivery thereof was a valid and subsisting obligation of the said defendant."

[3] Furthermore, no fraud or mistake was alleged in the answer, or proven or attempted to be proven at the trial. Therefore the law is well settled that such a defense as was attempted to be raised by appellant by his answer above set forth is not available to him. San José Savings Bank v. Stone, 59 Cal. 187; Cashman v. Harrison, 90 Cal. 304, 27 P. 283; Bradford Investment Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 210, 48 P. 1083; Leonard v. Miner, 120 Cal. 403, 52 P. 655; Carver v. San Joaquin Cigar Co., 16 Cal. App. 767, 118 P. 92; Rottman v. Hevener, 54 Cal. App. 478, 202 P. 329, and cases there cited; Dollar v. International Banking Corp., 13 Cal. App. 331, 109 P. 499; Consolidated Lumber Co. v. Frew, 32 Cal. App. 118, 162 P. 430.

In Leonard v. Miner, supra, the court said: "It is a thoroughly well-settled principle of evidence that a written contract cannot be contradicted or varied by evidence of an oral agreement entered into by the parties before or at the time of making such a contract. Consequently, parol evidence of an oral agreement alleged to have been made at the time of the drawing or making of a bill of exchange or promissory note cannot be admitted to vary, qualify, or contradict, or add to or subtract from the absolute terms of the written instrument. 2 Parsons on Bills and Notes, p. 501. As was said by Lord Coke in Countess of Rutland's Case, 5 Coke, 25: 'It would be inconvenient that matters in writing, made by advice, and on consideration, and which finally import the certain truth of the agreement of the parties, should be controlled by averment of the parties, to be proved by the uncertain testimony of slippery memory.' Evidence of a contemporary oral agreement between the parties to a bill or note, whereby the order or promise contained in the instrument is rendered null or conditional, or whereby the fact of payment is made to depend upon some contingent future event, comes within the same principle [citing cases]. We know of no subject upon which the authorities are more numerous and uniform than that indicated above."

In Cashman v. Harrison, supra, the court said: "Except for the purpose of proving want of consideration, fraud, accident, or mistake, which might nullify the instrument, parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict a bill of exchange. 'Therefore, if a bill or note be absolute upon its face, no evidence of a verbal agreement made at the same time, qualifying its terms, can be admitted.' If the bill is payable on demand, 'it cannot be shown by verbal testimony that it was agreed that it should not be paid * * * until the amount was collected from certain sources; nor until a certain draft was received; * * * nor that a note or bill in which no time for payment is expressed, and is therefore constructively payable on demand, was to be paid at a specified time; * * * nor that the liability of the drawer, maker, or other party was not to be enforced; * * * nor that it was to be paid out of a particular estate.'"

[4] Therefore it is clear that respondent's objection to the testimony given by appellant, in support of the alleged oral agreement with Peter Hopley, should have been sustained.

[5] Appellant also contends that respondent had no title or interest in the note, and no right to continue this action after the death of Peter Hopley. These contentions are likewise without merit. Plaintiff's right to proceed to collect the note was not affected in any way by the death of Peter Hopley. Peter Hopley, before his death, assigned and delivered the note to plaintiff, and plaintiff had the right to sue thereon in his own name and payment to him discharged the note. Section 3132, Civ. Code.

In Kelley v. Hampton, 22 Cal. App. 68, 133 P. 339, 340, the court said: "But an assignment for collection, without any consideration being paid by the assignee, vests the legal title in the assignee, which is sufficient to enable him to recover, though the assignor retains an equitable interest in the thing assigned. This is of no concern to the debtor." See, also, Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 33 P. 913.

Other contentions are made by appellant, but we deem them unworthy of special consideration.

We think the appeal in this case is devoid of any merit whatever. The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Action upon a rejected claim against an estate by B. A. Soberanes against Manuel D. Espinosa, as administrator of the estate of Salvador Espinosa, deceased. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Z. B. Stuart and Charles P. Johnson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles B. Rosendale and Edson G. Thomas, both of Salinas, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The plaintiff, B. A. Soberanes, appeals from an adverse judgment in an action to recover on a rejected claim presented by him against the estate of Salvador Espinosa, deceased, for compensation alleged to be due him as trustee of an express trust created by the decedent about nine years prior to his death. Respondent contended before the trial court, as here, that the trust estate, and not the estate of the decedent, was responsible for the payment of any such compensation; and we are of the opinion that this contention must be sustained.

It appears that the decedent was the owner of an undivided one-eighth interest in a large acreage of land in Monterey county, and on April 12, 1917, by an instrument in writing, created a trust as to an undivided two-thirds of his undivided one-eighth interest in said lands, allotting to each of the beneficiaries therein named a definite number of acres. The trust instrument appointed Z. B. Stuart trustee with power to name his successor in the event he relinquished his trust, and provided that the trustee's compensation should be fixed on a percentage basis calculated on the value of the trust property handled by him. The remaining one-third of the decedent's one-eighth interest in the larger tract was retained by him for his own use and benefit. Subsequent to the creation of the trust the decedent was declared incompetent by the superior court in and for Monterey county, and George S. Gould was appointed guardian of his person and estate. Thereafter, and on April 25, 1919, Stuart relinquished his trusteeship, and plaintiff claims that he was appointed by Stuart to succeed him. In the meantime an action was commenced to partition the lands in which the decedent owned an undivided one-eighth interest, and included as parties defendants therein were Stuart, Soberanes, the plaintiff herein, Gould as guardian, all of Espinosa's co-owners in the larger tract of land, and all of the beneficiaries named in Espinosa's declaration of trust. On March 8, 1924, an interlocutory decree was entered which, besides directing that all of said lands be partitioned in conformity with the proportionate interests of the respective parties as the same were established by said decree, adjudged that certain provisions of the Espinosa trust be reformed, particularly with reference to the number of acres of land the trustor attempted to include therein. It was further decreed that Soberanes never was appointed trustee of said trust estate, and consequently Gould was appointed to such trusteeship with directions to convey the trust property to the beneficiaries as set forth in said decree, upon the death of Espinosa. On January 7, 1926, a final decree was entered in said action, which, among other things, set apart in severalty to Gould as trustee and to Espinosa individually their respective two-thirds and one-third shares in and to one-eighth of the larger tract of land. On May 5, 1926, Espinosa died, and respondent herein was appointed administrator of his estate; and shortly thereafter Gould as trustee, in conformity with the directions contained in said decree in partition, conveyed to the beneficiaries of the trust estate the interests to which they were entitled, and as guardian transferred or surrendered the remainder of Espinosa's one-eighth interest to the administrator of Espinosa's estate.

[1] Appellant concedes it to be the law that "the trustee must follow or look to the trust property for his compensation," but he as-
